The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator from Montana if he will not lay aside the water-power bill that we may take up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill?

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator indicate how long it will take?

Mr. OVERMAN. It ought to be finished in two or three hours. I think I have a right to call up the appropriation bill.

Mr. WALSH. How long did the Senator say?

Mr. OVERMAN. It ought not to take over two or three hours. That is my judgment, but I can not tell. The appropriation bill is ready to be taken up, and, with the Senator's consent, I will ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent, on the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina, that House bill 408, the unfinished business, be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the bill suggested by the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the bill under consideration be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 18542, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Legislative," subhead "Senate," on page 8, after line 3, to strike out:

For compiling the Navy Yearbook for the calendar year 1916, under the direction of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 1, to insert:

For rent of warehouse for storage of public documents, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 11, to insert:

Senate resolutions Nos. 421, Sixty-third Congress, second session, 561, Sixty-third Congress, third session, and 101, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 20, to strike out:

Clerk hire, Members and Delegates: To pay each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, for clerk hire, necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $2,000 per annum, in monthly installments, $880,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to payment under this appropriation: Provided, That all clerks to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner by whom they are appointed; and any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may appoint one or more clerks, who shall be placed on the roll as the clerk of such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner making such appointments.

And to insert:

Clerks to Members and Delegates: For clerk or clerks to each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, $2,000 per annum, in monthly installments, $880,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are authorized to appoint a clerk or clerks from the date of the commencement of their terms, respectively, whose compensation shall be paid from this appropriation: Provided, That all clerks to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner by whom they are appointed; and any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may appoint one or more clerks, who shall be placed on the roll as the clerk of such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner making such appointment and be paid in the same manner as other employees of the House are paid.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the amendment, but I wish to make an explanation of it. I believe this is the first time that the Senate has undertaken to make any change whatever in reference to the employees of the other House. I have always understood that in the past it has been the practice of the Senate to adhere to that rule.

I am further advised, Mr. President, that there are many Members of the other House who are deeply interested in this amendment and who are in favor of it. The Senate will notice that we have not changed the rate of increase proposed to be paid to the clerks of Members of the other House. That increase was inserted upon the floor of the House, from $1,500 to $2,000. The only effect of the amendment proposed to the bill by the Senate committee is that clerks of the Members of the other House shall be put upon the rolls; that they shall draw their salaries the same as the clerks of the Senate or any other employees of the Senate do, instead of the money being paid to Representatives, and they in turn paying their clerks.

Mr. President, I have always thought it was a proper thing for each House of Congress to provide the appropriations for paying the expenses of the respective Houses, and it is for that reason that I have simply called attention to the change proposed by the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask if this amendment relates solely to the clerks of the other House?

Mr. SMOOT. It does.

Mr. BORAH. It would seem rather strange that the House of Representatives should not have gotten the matter in such shape as the House wanted it.

Mr. SMOOT. The House had it in the shape it desired it, and the House voted upon the proposition; but, as I have stated, the Senate committee thought that it was proper and right that all clerks of Members of the House should be placed upon the rolls the same as are the clerks of Members of the Senate. That is about the only change made.

I will say to the Senator from Idaho that we did not change the amount of compensation provided for in the other House, from $1,500 to $2,000 for their clerks. I will frankly say to the Senator that I should very much have preferred not to have had this amendment placed in the bill by the Senate committee, but the majority of the committee saw proper to take such action, and therefore the amendment is here.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah before he takes his seat whether this provision increases the amount of compensation to employees of the other House over that which has heretofore been paid them?

Mr. SMOOT. The allowance is increased $500 for each Member of the House.

Mr. THOMAS. What does that amount to in the aggregate?

Mr. SMOOT. It amounts to about $217,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, the Senator from Utah was very active, and commendably so, during the last days of the last session in his efforts to economize, to reduce expenses. I recollect sundry speeches which he made on the subject, criticizing, and I thought very justly so, some of the appropriations made by Congress at the last session. I want to inquire whether conditions have so changed, or have changed at all, as to justify this increase now?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that since I have been on the Appropriations Committee, and, indeed, ever since I have been a Member of this body, the Senate has never interfered with an appropriation made by the House affecting the employees of the House. This proposed amendment has reference only to the employees of the House. The universal practice in the past has been that the House has not interfered with appropriations made for the expenses of the Senate, nor has the Senate interfered with appropriations which have been made for the expenses of the other House.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator from Utah think it good policy that either House should not interfere with the other?

Mr. SMOOT. That has been the policy, and I think it has been a wise one. I think that each House knows better as to what its requirements are than one House knows what the requirements of the other House may be.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, there is the necessity of equal dealing and fair dealing between the two Houses, a recognition by one of the rights and privileges of the other; but if what the Senator states is the custom, it is one which, in my judgment, is "more honored in the breach than the observance." Each House should inspect the demands and suggestions of the other House, rather than give them blind approval.

I do not think this is any time, Mr. President, to stand on ceremony. I think that we should be frugal and that we should retrench the expenses of the Government in every possible direction. If the other House presented a clause in this bill increasing the compensation of its employees by four or five million dollars—which it would be perfectly justified in doing from the standpoint of noninterference to which the Senator from Utah has referred—I think the people would hold us responsible if, at least, we did not inquire into and ascertain where there was any necessity for such increase. I do not think this a time, Mr. President, when we should be prone to give even silent approval to anything which increases the public expenditures, unless conditions make it essential to proper administration. I hope that this proposed amendment of the Senate committee, together with its action in striking out the lines on page 20, from line 1 to line 19, also will be approved.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think this is an unfortunate amendment. It has always been the custom, so far as I recall, for each House to refrain from interfering with appropriations of this character made by the other. The House of Representatives knows far better than does the Senate what it needs in the way of appropriations for the payment of the clerks of its Members, and I think an amendment of this character is calculated to interfere with the good relations which have always existed, and which ought to continue to exist, between the two Houses. If the other House interferes with the appropriations which the Senate thinks ought to be made for the assistance required for Senators and for employees of the Senate, I am quite sure the Senate would resent it, and I am inclined to think the House of Representatives will resent this interference on our part. I think the amendment ought to be rejected, and that the provision as it came from the other House ought to be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it is true that there is a comity between the two bodies. The House of Representatives has not interfered with the Senate in making appropriations for its clerks and employees, and neither has the Senate heretofore interfered with the House of Representatives in such matters. In this instance we have not interfered with the amount of the appropriation. The only thing we have done is to provide that, like all other employees, these particular employees of the House shall be placed upon the rolls of that body. Each Member of the House can appoint one, two, three, or more clerks out of the increased sum of money for which a large number of Members of the other House voted. If he desires a session clerk and then a secretary or if he desires three clerks, he can appoint them out of the sum of $2,000.

A great many Members of the House favored the increased appropriation and voted for it, and the amendment reported by the Senate committee, as I have said, merely requires that these employees be placed upon the roll.

I desire to say that nothing was done until after I conferred with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the other House, Mr. FITZGERALD. I knew it was a very delicate matter, and so I conferred with him. He said that he did not think the House would have any objection to the provision, and we would go into conference and thrash it out. I think what has been said here will give the House to understand that we do not want to interfere with the compensation of their clerks, but we do think that their clerks, like our clerks, ought to be put upon the rolls. It will be better for them, better for us, and better for everybody. That is the reason we felt called upon to recommend this amendment.

I wish to say further that we have been importuned by some Members of the House to insert this provision in the bill. This, however, is not a final settlement of the matter. If the House insist that they do not want this provision, we will readily agree to strike it out. It is designed merely to bring the question before the House of Representatives, with the understanding that if the House of Representatives in any way resent this amendment the conferees will agree at once without argument to strike it out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether or not the amount of compensation will also be in conference if the amendment proposed by the committee is adopted?

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me that it ought to be. The Senator suggests that there is a strong sentiment in the House of Representatives that these employees should be placed upon the roll, and steps should be taken to see that they get the salaries which they are supposed to get directly from the Treasury. It seems to me equally important, in view of the large sentiment which we know exists in the House of Representatives in opposition to this 33⅓ per cent increase, that the amount should also be in conference, because unquestionably there is a strong sentiment there which resents at this time the proposed increase. Under the amendment, however, as presented by the committee, that matter will not be in conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have struck out the entire provision in which the compensation of clerks to Members was fixed at $2,000, and have written a new provision, including in it the amount of $2,000, as determined by the House.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the amount of compensation will not be in conference at all?

Mr. OVERMAN. I doubt it very much.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would it not be better to provide in the amendment for the present amount of salary received by these employees, so as to get the matter into conference?

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator wants to do that he will have to move to strike out in our amendment the appropriation at the rate of $2,000 each and make it some other sum. It is now $1,500. That is all each Member of the House now gets for clerk hire. After considerable discussion in that body they adopted an amendment increasing the compensation of these employees to $2,000. In order to get the amount in conference, I suggest to the Senator that an amendment would have to be offered reducing the amount to be paid to $1,800 or $1,500, which would throw the whole thing into conference.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think it ought to be in conference. I think that the House ought to be confronted fairly with the proposition whether or not it proposes to make this 33⅓ per cent increase in the pay of clerks of Members at this time; and I therefore move to substitute "$1,500" for "$2,000" in the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to suggest to the Senator that whenever we interfere with the appropriations made for the clerks of the other House our action is going to be resented and will be reflected back upon the Senate, and criticism perhaps made of the number of employees we have. For example, every Senator has three clerks, while Members of the House only have one; and if we interfere with their clerks they would have the same right to criticize us for having three clerks that we have to criticize them for the amount paid.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, is there any objection to that? They are as much guardians of the Treasury as we are; and if we have more employees than we ought to have the other House ought to restrain us, and ought to raise that issue.

Mr. STONE. But who will judge as to that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, that is a matter for the conference committee of the two Houses to decide.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have referred to the general custom which has prevailed and of the courtesy and comity existing between the two Houses. So far as I am concerned, I have been in favor of decreasing the appropriations, and should like to do so, but we are confronted with this idea of courtesy between the Houses and the necessity for avoiding friction. If the Senator had been here, as I have been, for 12 or 14 years, he would realize that any friction between the two bodies brings about hard feelings. I know there are some Senators on the floor who have been Members of the other House, as has the Senator from Nebraska, and they know the feelings and jealousies in the other House in regard to such matters.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is true that I have served in the other House. I also know that there has been at all times a strong sentiment in that body in opposition to this loose method by which there has been appropriated every year $1,500 for clerk hire for each Member of the House, when it has been a notorious fact, referred to a number of times on the floor of the House itself, that those employees were not sure to get the money appropriated for them. If that is the fact, it ought to be brought right face to face to the attention of the House of Representatives; and if the House insists upon having that practice continued, then it will be an issue, and it will be time for us to yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I assume the Senator understands that we have provided for that in the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, Mr. President, and I favor the change; but we are also confronted by another issue at this time. We are attempting to avoid the increase of expenditures in order to avoid, as far as possible, increasing the deficit with which we are confronted now. Is it possible that if the issue is raised the House of Representatives is going to insist on increasing the pay of its employees 33⅓ per cent at this time? Possibly they are; but they should be given the opportunity of considering the matter. It is a fair issue, and it should be raised and made, and it should be met. Therefore I move that the amendment reported by the committee be amended by substituting "$1,500" for "$2,000."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is the unwritten law in both bodies—it certainly is the unwritten law here; a rule which is always carefully observed, and it is common to parliamentary bodies everywhere—not to criticize or discuss the debates or action of the other House. Both Houses are extremely careful in that respect, and the debate that has arisen on this amendment is an illustration of the wisdom of that rule. A most unfortunate situation would be presented in Congress or in Parliament or in any great legislative body if one House were to criticize the other. Instead of being concerned in public business, the activities of the two bodies would very soon degenerate into quarrels between the Houses about matters relating to each House separately.

I am very sorry that this amendment has been offered. I think it would have been much better to have let it alone. I think if we begin to criticize the House for the lack of economy and attempt to cut down their expenditures they will retaliate, and there will be constant controversy of the worst kind between the Houses. In the interest of the proper conduct of legislation—general legislation—I think the two Houses should be extremely scrupulous about interfering with each other's peculiar business. This is the affair of the House. They are responsible for it. If there is wrong done, it is theirs to bear the blame. If we enter upon this business of criticizing the House and cutting down the appropriations for their clerks or interfering with matters which concern them alone, we are opening the door to conflict between the Houses, which can not be but very prejudicial to the general public business.

It is not a question of ceremony at all. This practice of the Houses of not criticizing each other or interfering with each other's affairs rests on the solid ground of common sense. It is not a matter of ceremony; it is to avoid controversy and wrangles between the two Houses about matters which will excite personal hostility and the hostility of one body to the other. I think it a great mistake to meddle with provisions concerning the House alone, which would be certain to lead, as it has led this morning, to criticisms of the action of the other body and imputations on the conduct of their own business. It is not our business to take up what a minority of the House may say. What we receive, and what we alone receive and deal with, is the action of the House as the House, and we can not enter into their debates and say we sympathize with the minority. We must take as a body what comes from them officially as a body. They have passed this after due consideration, and they have sent it over as the action of the House. We can not walk behind it and say, "Why, there are Members of your House who do not approve this any more than we do." I think we are opening the door to a great deal of trouble and a great injury to the conduct of the public business if we put this amendment on this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has been a Member of this body for a much longer time than myself. His acquaintance with the methods of procedure is, therefore, much more extensive than mine, and generally speaking I am inclined always to accept his statements upon such subjects without any qualification. I am disposed to do so now, if the result does not carry me to a point where the observation of the practice conflicts with the necessity of limiting our expenditures to our revenues.

I have not the slightest desire even seemingly to infringe upon a rule which experience is said to have established as an essential to good legislation and harmony between the Houses. It seems to me, however, that if the rule is as broad as I understand it to be from the Senator's statement, it would be difficult for a Member of this body, as it would be for a Member of the House, to attack a provision in an appropriation bill sent by the one to the other without reflecting upon the good faith of the body in some degree, or without infringing that courtesy which is said to be due from one House to the other. Indeed, Mr. President, it may be that the rigid observance of such a rule is responsible for much of the extravagance which can be laid at the door of Congress—not one body any more than the other, but both alike.

My purpose is not to criticize the action of the House with regard to this particular section of the bill any more than it would be if the section related to any other than the subject of House employees. I think it would be a good idea, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, were each House—with due regard to the rights of the other, of course, and with due respect for the integrity of purpose and intention of the Members—to scan more carefully than seems to have been done in the past the appropriations which are designed to be exclusive to each. Now, it may be that this body has too large a clerical force. If so, nothing would be more salutary than for the House to call attention to it. Nobody else may do it or be able to do it so effectually. It may be that our expeditures in certain other directions might be limited, and the same efficiency secured; and so with regard to expeditures at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. President, we are now confronted, among other items of financial legislation, with an organized effort to increase the salaries of all employees of the Government here in the District, and largely elsewhere. That movement seems to be supported by a lobby somewhat powerful and influential in its character, and, if successful, will largely swell the aggregate of our permanent appropriations. I do not think it ought to be done at present, and as far as I am individually concerned I shall vote against it; but I can readily see how those who are interested in such a measure can very properly complain if the amount of compensation received by any class of employees of the Government, however small, is increased while the favor is refused—I will not speak of it as a demand now—as to all others who claim the right to be considered from the standpoint of employees of the same class, in the sense that they are paid from the same Treasury.

I do not believe, Mr. President—and I hope I am right—that I can be accused of any lack of courtesy or regard for the rights of a coordinate branch of the legislative department of the Government in objecting at this time to an increase in expenditure which is not absolutely necessary to a fair and a proper and a liberal administration. I should like to see competition between the two Houses in the direction of economy rather than a friendly or any rivalry in the other direction; and that, we know, has been going for a long time. Nearly every appropriation bill which comes from the House is increased here. I am not now criticizing the fact. I am merely stating it. There may be the best of reasons for it, and I can very readily see how the same feeling of courtesy which powerfully promotes and augments such a practice, when directed in proper channels, would lead to an increase of such economy, and the taxpayers of the country would receive the benefit.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I realize that a discussion of this amendment is a delicate matter, and I had hoped the amendment would be adopted without being debated at all. I do not understand whether the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] opposes the amendment or not.

I drew this amendment. It has been before Congress before. It has been presented before in conference committees by the conferees upon the part of the House. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that we ought not to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to lessen the amount from $2,000 to $1,500 because a committee of the House reported it at $1,500 and the House itself raised that amount. So, whether $1,500 is the proper amount or $2,000 is the proper amount, the House itself has settled that question. But I do not concede, Mr. President, that the Senate is not in any way concerned about this proposition.

Here is the situation as stated in the newspapers since it has been known that this amendment was adopted, that Members of the House are accused of profiting out of this allowance. It is unfortunate that a charge of that kind could be made against a Member of the House. For myself, I would not make any such insinuation. But, Mr. President, there is an easy way to so provide that such an insinuation can not be made, and that is to adopt the plan of placing this clerical force upon the rolls; and that action is for the benefit of the Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me we are placing ourselves in the attitude of morally censoring the conduct of the Members of the House. Now, those men are elected every two years. They are responsible to their constituency. If the people want to correct this thing, it is rather for the people to do it than for another legislative body to sit in judgment upon their conduct. We can scarcely mention this subject here without seeming to impute something to the individual Members of the House which we certainly would not want to do. I think those gentlemen are perfectly capable of taking care of this peculiar question which is so peculiarly personal.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have not imputed any unworthy motive to any Member of the House. I have only said that the method of appropriation heretofore indulged in has given rise to that criticism. Every Senator knows it. Every Member of the House knows it. The language now carried is "to pay each Member," and so forth. Then the provision that has been usual in appropriation bills proceeds to place them upon the roll. But when you pay to the Member himself the compensation, it makes no difference whether his clerk is upon the roll or not, so far as this criticism is concerned. You may place them upon all the rolls you please, but so long as the money is paid directly to the Member the criticism stands. Many Members of the House of Representatives have resented this insinuation, and they say there is no way for them to protect themselves except to have the clerical force placed upon the roll. As the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] said, this amendment was offered with the approval of many Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield further to the Senator from Idaho, if he wishes to interrupt me.

Mr. BORAH. It seems extraordinary to me that the situation should present itself as it does at this time, because every Member of the House must know the effect of this general appropriation just the same as we know it, and if the membership of the House as a body desires to protect itself it would be the most simple thing in the world for them to have passed this matter as we now propose it.

Mr. BRYAN. No; it is not so simple, Mr. President. A provision of that kind would have been subject to a point of order. Provisions of this kind have been offered in the House before and are subject to a point of order, and the point of order has been made; and that is why it is not such a simple matter there.

Mr. BORAH. Well, of course I know it is not simple if you assume that somebody in the House is going to object to it; but when you assume that you assume that there is some one there who desires to perpetuate a situation which reflects upon the individual integrity of Members of the House.

Mr. BRYAN. No; I think as far as you could go would be that the individual who objected might be interested, but it is unfair then to say that all the other Members of the House are subject to the same censure; and that is the purpose that was in view when this amendment was drafted. I think it would have been much better if it could have been passed without any discussion, and it was about to be done; but since it is here I do not hesitate to say that I think not only is the House involved in it, but the Senate too. I think it is an injustice to the House to have honest men unjustly accused of that sort of petty graft, and I think it is a reflection upon the Senate if we stand by, with that sort of thing going on, and do not do our share to stop it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when we do that we simply put ourselves on record here as considering that the House is unable, by reason of its rules or something else, to correct an unwise practice.

Mr. BRYAN. No, Mr. President; we do not, because if the House of Representatives want this amendment rejected, let them reject it, and I apprehend that the Senate will not then insist. Many Members of the House want it done, and I do not blame them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator state why they did not do this in the first instance?

Mr. BRYAN. I have already stated that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I could not hear the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. Any amendment to that effect is subject to a point of order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Did anybody propose it in the House?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, it has been proposed there numbers of times, and the point of order has been raised.

Mr. BORAH. If the amendment had come out of the committee as it is here proposed, it would not have been subject to a point of order, would it?

Mr. JONES. Yes; it would in the House.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I think so. It would be a change of existing law, and that is the rule in the House.

Mr. BORAH. Then all the House has to do is to introduce a bill dealing with the matter.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, what chance would it have of passing? This is the way these matters are controlled—on appropriation bills—and they always have been. Let me say to the Senator from Idaho, suppose we send this amendment to the House and let the House express its will? If the House says: "We want this provision to go out," then the Senate will undoubtedly let it go out.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, the Senator must know that under the practice of the House they could have brought in a rule making that amendment in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I know that, Mr. President; but the House Committee on Rules has been busy upon other matters, I have no doubt. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. That is quite true.

Mr. BRYAN. I think it is a good plan for one House not to go into the practice of the other House. Senators say they may retaliate; they may point to expenditures here in the Senate for clerical help that ought not to be made. Well, Mr. President, they would do no more than Senators themselves have done. I think the Senate ought to abolish these inactive committees, because by maintaining them they leave themselves open to an imputation that ought not to be placed upon Members of the Senate, and you need not try to disguise the fact that attention is called to that. That is discussed. For instance, this appropriation bill will be taken up by the papers. They will say that here in the Senate are appropriations for committees that never meet—appropriations for the Committees on Canadian Relations, on Coast Defenses, on Conservation of National Resources, Cuban Relations, Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service, Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, in the Department of Commerce, in the Interior Department, in the Department of Justice, in the Department of Labor, in the Navy Department, in the Post Office Department, in the Department of State, and in the War Department, on the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game; Geological Survey, Indian Depredations, to Investigate trespassers upon Indian Lands, Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, Mississippi River and its Tributaries, Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, Pacific Railroads, Private Land Claims, Public Health and National Quarantine, Railroads, Revolutionary Claims; Standards, Weights, and Measures; Territories, Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and the University of the United States.

We ought to strike those out ourselves. It does not amount to anything to any Senator when the Senate leaves them in. We understand that it is simply a method of distributing the clerical help. Since we have added an additional clerk to each Senator it serves no useful purpose at all, yet it stands in our legislation so that any one who wants to attack the Senate or any individual Member of the Senate can point to the maintenance of these useless and inactive committees and say we are extravagantly voting the public money for the maintenance of such committees.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. It does furnish a very inequitable and unjust basis of determining the pay of the different clerks who are appointed.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; it does that. In other words, if I understand the Senator, it means this: That the clerk of one of these committees gets $220 more than the clerk of a Senator who is not chairman of a committee; but we might as well meet that frankly and say that clerks of the majority should get $220 more than clerks of the minority. That is all it is done for. I have tried time and again, and I have had the assistance of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], to have those committees stricken out. In fact, I went so far, Mr. President, when the present majority assumed control of the Senate as to have a resolution adopted to do it. It was adopted, but it has not been done, and why has it not been done? It has not been done because the opportune time has never come, because the time when it should be done never arrives, because we never get to it, except when it comes on an appropriation bill, just as Members of the House never get an opportunity to correct this injustice done to them except upon an appropriation bill. Because some one in the House raises the point of order is no justification either for the House or the Senate to refuse to do the right and the honorable and the manly thing, and that is to place these men to be appointed by Members of the House upon the rolls, so that the wildest muckraker can not accuse the humblest Member of the House of taking any of the allowance for his clerk hire and putting it in his own pocket.

That is the reason why this amendment was drawn. Many Members of the House are smarting under this unjust and unfair criticism. They have not reached a time when the House has acted upon it; it comes up hurriedly upon an appropriation bill. They have asked the Senate conferees time and again to put it in the bill. The Senate conferees have refused to do it upon the ground that they would seem to criticize the House, and they will not do it.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the representative of the Appropriations Committee of the House is willing that this should go in?

Mr. BRYAN. Undoubtedly; not only he but many other Members of the House are insisting upon it, and they would be very much gratified if it should be done. One of them stated to me they are under embarrassment about it, and he considered offering a resolution asking the Senate to do this very thing. I will not call his name; but the Senator can understand how, if an imputation were made against him that he was profiting by reason of the method of the payment of his clerks, he would want to correct it. The Members of the House feel the same way about it.

Mr. BORAH. It is a sorry situation if we have a legislative body that can not correct evil practices. I do not propose as yet to assume that fact.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to correct it, and I know of no other way to correct it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. I can not understand how it can be said that any Member of the House is profiting by the appropriation for his clerk, whether it be $1,500 or $2,000, when the statute requires that he shall put the name of his clerk on the rolls of the House.

Mr. BRYAN. That protects him from the possibility of criticism, and that is what I want to do.

Mr. STONE. Then, if this criticism signifies and means anything, it has the abominable meaning, whether intended or not, that some Member or Members of the House of Representatives who receive a certain stipend fixed by the statute to pay clerks, after putting the name of his clerk on the roll takes a part of the money appropriated to pay the clerk and puts it into his own pocket. That would not only be dishonest, but it would come very close to the border of criminality.

I think such observation, such intimation, Mr. President, on the floor of the Senate are so ill timed, so utterly improper, that I believe if we sought to do it or cared to do it in the circumstances such assertions would be so unparliamentary as to be subject to a point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator from Missouri if he understood me to make any such insinuation?

Mr. STONE. I understood the Senator from Florida to say—and if I am wrong I apologize; but, of course, the RECORD will show—I understood not only the Senator from Florida but the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to say that there were newspaper reports that had gone out, rumors through the press, of this character.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Did the Senator understand me to make any statement of that sort?

Mr. STONE. The Senator certainly did, as I understood him, refer to newspaper reports.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at all. I only referred to my experience in the House of Representatives and to the sentiment in the House of Representatives and to speeches upon the floor of the House of Representatives. I made no criticism of the House. I only want to have this issue raised and let it confront the House, and then if the House desires to take up——

Mr. STONE. I know the Senator said that, but I ask the Senator if he did not refer to newspaper reports.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not.

Mr. STONE. And so did the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not think the Senator from Nebraska did.

Mr. STONE. If he did not, I am mistaken and apologize.

Mr. BRYAN. Put that on me.

Mr. STONE. But the Senator from Florida says he did, and the report referred to was of the nature I have indicated. Also, I understood the Senator from Florida to say that Members of the House had complained that they were subject to this criticism and were not able to remedy it.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. STONE. I do not see how or why. In any event it is a most unfortunate debate, Mr. President, and a most unfortunate thing, in my judgment, that the proposition was ever brought to the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that may be the view of the Senator from Missouri, but it is not my view. I believe there is a duty resting upon the Senate to place this thing so that no man need be under suspicion at all. That is what this amendment does, and that is all any honest man should ask for. Every other employee at either end of the Capitol is upon the pay roll.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the practice and rule of both Houses. I read first from Jefferson's Manual one of those statements in the Manual which has in practice formed a part of the rules of both Houses:

It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House, or the particular votes or majorities on it there, because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other, and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses.

I am reading it from the House Manual. Of course it is in our Manual, but the House Manual has some statements about our practice:

This rule of the parliamentary law is in use in the House of Representatives to the full extent of its provisions, and it has always been held a breach of order to refer to debates or votes on the same subject in the other House (V., 5095–5097), or to the action or probable action of the other House (V., 5101–5105), or to its methods of procedure, as bearing on the course to be taken on a pending matter (V., 5100). In one instance the Senate declined to have read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the proceedings of the House, even as the basis of a question of order relating to the rights of the Senate. (V., 6406.)

The House decided:

After examination by a committee a speech reflecting on the character of the Senate was ordered to be stricken from the RECORD, on the ground that it tended to create "unfriendly conditions between the two bodies * * * obstructive of wise legislation and little short of a public calamity."

That was the declaration of the House, and that is the broad ground on which this rests, something much more important than the amount of money the House pays to its clerks and that we pay. Again, the further rule in the Manual is—

Where the complaint is of words disrespectfully spoken by a Member of another House, it is difficult to obtain punishment, because of the rules supposed necessary to be observed (as to the immediate noting down of words) for the security of Members. Therefore it is the duty of the House, and more particularly of the Speaker, to interfere immediately, and not to permit expressions to go unnoticed which may give a ground of complaint to the other House, and introduce proceedings and mutual accusations between the two Houses, which can hardly be terminated without difficulty and disorder. (3 Hats., 51.)

Jefferson's Manual:

In the House of Representatives this rule of the parliamentary law is considered as binding on the Chair. (V., 5130.)

That merely refers to words spoken in debate, and it takes the broad ground that whoever else may criticize the Houses either in the press or the public they are debarred from criticizing each other. We are the only people in this country who can not with propriety undertake to criticize the House of Representatives on this floor.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BRYAN. I will say to the Senator I am familiar with that rule, and I ask him if anything I said would be in contravention of that rule.

Mr. LODGE. You can not discuss this amendment proposed, you can not give the reason for the amendment submitted from the committee, without imputing scandalous conduct to Members of the House.

Mr. BRYAN. I undertake to say that I did not do it. There is not a word in anything I have said——

Mr. LODGE. I do not say there was.

Mr. BRYAN. That impugns the motives of any Members of the House.

Mr. LODGE. I do not say the Senator did, but if you justify that amendment and ask that you put their clerks on the roll and give the real reason you have got to impute scandalous conduct to the House, as was pointed out very carefully by the Senator from Missouri.

Now, I think it is most unwise for us to take that position. In voting the salaries for the clerks of the other House I think it would be even more unwise to undertake to fix their salaries.

It is no reply to say that we have got a lot of dead committees. I know that. I should like to see them all swept away. I should like to see the Senate have the courage to abolish all the dead committees that never meet and give frankly to each Senator the number of clerks he ought to have in his capacity as a Senator, with a proper salary for each of them. Those dead committees are used as a convenient veil to cover up the real fact which we ought to have the manliness to stand out on. Each Senator ought to have, in the interest of his constituents and of the country, just as it is with Members of the House, clerical assistance, well paid, sufficient to enable them to perform their very burdensome duties in this body. I should like to see the dead committees swept out of existence, but I do not want the House to undertake to reform the Senate. I think the Senate ought to reform itself, and I think if a reform is needed in the House it is their duty to do it.

As I said before, we are the one body of people in this country who have no right to criticize the conduct of the House of Representatives, because if we enter on that field it can lead to nothing but ill feeling and miserable quarrels between the two bodies.

If there are Members of the House who do not like something that is done by the House, it is not their place to come running to us to get us to change it. They can change these things. I know their rules about changing the law. If an amendment had been offered to enroll these clerks, a point of order would have thrown it out; but the Committee on Rules can bring in special rules in the House and make anything in order. If they had chosen to make that in order, this could have gone in and compelled those men to be placed on the roll. The House did not do it, and we can not go behind the action of the House and take the word of Members who run over here and tell us privately what they think ought to be done.

We can deal only with the House of Representatives through its official organ, and I should deeply regret anything being done by the Senate, either in the way of criticism or debate or by amendment in a bill, which would seem to interfere with that public business which exclusively belongs to the House and for which they are responsible to their constituents, or to indulge in a criticism of what they have done which relates solely to themselves. I think that is far more important than the amount of money involved, because it would create a condition of feeling between the two Houses in a very little while. One House would retaliate on the other, and the condition would be one equally to be regretted, in my opinion, in the conduct of the public business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts seems to be laboring under the delusion that in exercising the right as a legislative body of disagreeing with certain amendments by the House of Representatives this body will be "criticizing" the House. He seems also to be laboring under the delusion that Senators who have spoken here to-day are criticizing the House. Neither of these is correct. The House of Representatives in the past has disagreed with the Senate upon the payment of Senate employees. It is not more than about a year ago when the Senate voted certain extra pay to certain Senate employees and the House disagreed to the same and the Senate abandoned it.

All that I desire, at least—and I think it is all that other Senators desire in this matter—is that the Senate shall take this position and that the issue shall be placed squarely up to the other legislative body. If when that issue is raised, the House of Representatives insists that in its judgment the clerks of Members of the House should receive a 33⅓ per cent increase, or if the House insists that those employees shall not go upon the rolls and be paid directly from the Treasury their monthly stipend, then it will be time enough for the Senate to bow to the will of the House in the employment of its own employees. At the present time, however, the responsibility is upon the Senate. Will the Senate, without any effort to modify it, consent to this increase suggested by the other House of 33⅓ per cent? Will the Senate propose to the House that the employees of the House, like the employees of the Senate and like the employees of every other branch of the Government, shall go upon the pay rolls and shall themselves receive the compensation from the Treasury, instead of having each of them receive it secondhand? That is the issue. There is no disposition to criticize the other House for the position it has taken, and it is only the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] who insists that criticism is intended.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to his colleague?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. From what my colleague has stated, I understand that there has been a contention about the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. LODGE. The colleague of the Senator from Nebraska has moved an amendment to that effect.

Mr. NORRIS. I was not in the Chamber when that amendment was offered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to my colleague that before he entered the Chamber I had proposed an amendment to the amendment offered by the committee. I had moved to change the amount from "$2,000" back to what it has been heretofore—that is, "$1,500." I am not a stickler for that; as a matter of fact, the law allows only $1,200 to clerks of Members of the other House; but by consent and acquiescence the salary named in the appropriation bill has been for a number of years $1,500. There is no law to justify it, except as we find it in the appropriations; but I am not insisting that these clerks should receive no advance. What I want to do by offering this amendment at this time, and what I should like to do, if the Senate will accept this amendment, is to have the issue raised in conference and to have the responsible representatives of the House of Representatives settle that issue.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I should very much prefer to have the question of salaries discussed and made an issue in conference than the question of whether or not some Member of the other House is going to improperly distribute the salary of the clerk after he gets it. If we are going to discuss this subject, we ought to be candid about it. We know that there is implied in this situation the proposition that we should guard against that money going to the wrong place. I much prefer to take jurisdiction of the salaries paid than to take jurisdiction of the matter which implies its placement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Idaho states the issue too narrowly. There is a principle involved here that when money is paid out of the Treasury of the United States for the services of an employee it ought, as a matter of fact, to go to the employee, and no intermediary should receive the money and be given any control over it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the basis of this amendment is the assumption that the money does not all go to the employees. No severer charge could be made against the Members of the other House than to say that they can not be trusted to convey to their employees the money that is given to them. I do not want, by implication, to legislate along any such lines.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, that charge is being made by the Senator from Idaho and not by me.

Mr. BORAH. I know it. I am making it because I am speaking candidly. No one will understand it otherwise when we have adopted this amendment. We should not touch a subject about which we are not willing to be candid. I do not think there is any occasion for the legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, if the Senator from Idaho desires to make that imputation or if he desires to draw that inference, of course he has a perfect right to do so, but I do not. I am standing here for the principle that money appropriated for the payment of an employee should go to the employee of the Government directly and should not pass under the control or discretionary power of any other individual. That is a principle, and we can all afford to stand on that. I believe that this issue is raised by the amendment now before the Senate; and if raised in conference, it will be, I believe, approved by the overwhelming voice of the House of Representatives.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has spoken here about unwritten law; he spoke of an unwritten law the other day; but he felt justified in disregarding that unwritten law when it served his purpose to mention the ambassador of a certain nation on the floor of this Chamber, in violation of that unwritten law.

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing about that in Jefferson's Manual.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So there may be, as he says, unwritten law in this case, but here we have a principle involved.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will excuse me, we have a written law in this case. I just read it to the Senate, but the Senator probably did not hear it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The written law which the Senator from Massachusetts read refers only to disclosing in the Senate of the United States the proceedings or debates of the House of Representatives. I am not doing that. I am here asserting the right——

Mr. LODGE. What is the Senator talking about——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators must first address the Chair before speaking. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator what he is talking about, if he is not talking about proceedings of the other House?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am talking about an amendment now pending in the Senate, and I am advocating the adoption of the amendment in order that it may go into conference, and in order that there in conference the matter may be discussed.

Mr. LODGE. To what does the Senator's amendment relate?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, it relates—if the Senator is unaware of what he has been discussing I am rather amazed—but it relates——

Mr. LODGE. Never mind whether I am unaware of it, I ask the Senator to what the amendment relates?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator would address the Chair, I should like to enlighten him.

Mr. LODGE. I will wait and take my own time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I thank the Senator. I stated here that a few days ago the Senator from Massachusetts, after admitting that there was an unwritten law which made it improper to mention the name of an ambassador of a friendly country who had been accredited to the United States and was resident in Washington, nevertheless, for his own purposes, disregarded an unwritten law and mentioned the names of the country and the ambassador. If it was justifiable for the Senator to take that course for his personal purposes in that case, certainly it is now proper to disregard the custom; and, as the Senator has indicated an unwritten law, in asserting the right of the Senate to disagree to a provision offered in the House of Representatives by inserting an amendment in this bill, to raise the issue in the conference committee, I ask for nothing more. I have not contended that the Senate should insist on dictating to the House of Representatives, and, so far as I know, no Senator who has discussed the matter has done so. All I ask is that the Senate take a position on the question, Shall employees be paid directly from the Treasury of the United States, and shall a 33⅓ per cent increase be made? If the House of Representatives by its conference committee advises the Senate that it takes that position, then it will be time enough for the Senate to bow to the will of that House; but it is the duty of the Senate, in the interests of the public, to raise that issue.

Mr. KENYON, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska, how does it happen that the clerks and secretaries of Senators are on the rolls? Is it a matter of law or a matter of an appropriation bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not investigated that question, Mr. President.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator think there is any imputation against the honor of Senators that their secretaries and clerks are on the rolls?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly not; I think that is the common practice; it is the reasonable practice; and it is justice to the employees.

Mr. KENYON. If that is no imputation of dishonor to Senators, I fail to see how it could be any imputation of dishonor to Members of the other House.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is certainly no intention on the part of anybody to reflect upon the House of Representatives nor upon any Member of the House of Representatives. It is the principle to which I refer that is wrong; it is the practice which should be cured; and I have not any doubt in the world that the overwhelming sentiment of the House of Representatives, as soon as the issue is raised, will agree to the sentiments which I have here expressed.

Mr. SHAFROTH and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I think the Senate is taking too seriously the proposition which was presented by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. Perhaps it might be well to go back a little into history as to how these clerks were given to Members of the other House. It was done in the Fifty-third Congress. The first appropriation which was made was for the employment of clerks during the sessions of Congress. Of necessity a Representative in Congress could not bring with him from his home and could not take back with him to his home a clerk who received a salary of but $100 per month during the session. Consequently the amount for clerk hire was made payable to each Member of the House. There was nothing wrong in it, and it seems to me no wrong could be imputed to a Member of the other body, unless he used the money for his own purposes; and I think only a small fraction, if, indeed, any of them, have done so. Accordingly, I do not think that they should be criticized.

Mr. President, at the following session of the Fifty-third Congress, during its closing hours, a resolution was adopted, or a provision of law enacted, that the clerks of Members of Congress should be paid $100 per month per annum. I remember the vote in the House and the discussion that preceded. That provision made a little change; and yet it can be readily seen that, even in that instance, it was perfectly proper for the law to be so worded that the amount should be paid to the Member. Why? Because the Member in many instances would not take his stenographer home with him, but would have to employ a stenographer in Washington during the session, and would have to employ another stenographer at his home when he returned there. Where a Member of Congress lived a long distance from Washington, necessitating considerable travel, it would be unfair to a stenographer for the Government to only pay him $100 a month and require him to travel back and forth. For that reason it was deemed best and proper under those conditions that the amount for clerk hire should be paid to the Member himself. Subsequently there was some increase in the amount paid, but no change as to the manner of payment.

Now, however, comes the proposition of paying the Member's clerk $2,000 a year, and it is a very appropriate time to say that no longer can excuses be made on the ground that there is necessitated a change of stenographers when the Representative is in Washington during the session and when he returns to his home. It is a very appropriate time, now that such a salary is being given to these men, to say, "You can bring with you your stenographer from your home and can utilize him all the time during the session of Congress and can take him home with you on your return, and thus can have a man to aid you in your official duties all the time." That being the case, it is very proper now, without any reflection upon anybody, having made the salary sufficiently large for a stenographer to be brought from a Representative's home, to stay with him all the time, and to become familiar with the work, to provide that this stenographer should be an employee of the United States.

Mr. President, the Congress and the people of the United States are interested in getting good service. I do not believe that to any extent the practice has prevailed of the money for clerk hire being put in the pockets of the Representatives for their own use; I believe that in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred it has gone to the employee; but the Government of the United States has an interest now in seeing that the best service shall be performed for the Government by the clerk who may be appointed. Under the present system in force in the House of Representatives a Member can employ a man for three months during the short session of Congress, and when he goes home he can employ another stenographer there. Of course, he could do that perhaps under the amendment proposed, although it will have a tendency to prevent that practice, as it would require a discharge and appointment of another each time; besides, the clerk employed in Washington will have a knowledge of the work of the Representative, and it will be desirable to keep him all the time. That is of great importance. When we determine that the clerk shall be an officer of the Government and shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States the best service will be performed.

It seems to me, Mr. President, in view of those facts, that our action can not be considered a reflection upon the other House, even if they have done to some extent that which has been suggested here—and I do not believe that they have—any more than it is a reflection on us for a Member of the other House to say that the obsolete committees of the Senate ought to be abolished. Would any Senaeor take it upon himself to be offended if any Member of the other House should say that the obsolete committees of the Senate should be abolished? Certainly not. I do not see how he could; and yet it is said that Senators derive certain advantages by reason of the fact that obsolete committees are still in existence. Whether that be true or not, I can not conceive of any reflection being made upon any individual Senator or upon this body by reason of that statement, and I do not think that our suggestion that an employee should be placed upon the rolls of the Government, when he is paid $2,000 a year, should be considered a reflection upon any person, no matter what his past conduct may have been. Perhaps the Member has been justified under the language of the law by which the money has been paid to him directly to divide it in any way that he desired. Consequently I do not see that it can be a reflection upon him to have done so, unless he has put some of it in his pocket for his own use; and, as I have said, I do not believe that that has been done. This provision will result in better service, and, in my judgment, the amendment reported by the committee should be adopted.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] seemed to think it was important to point out that I was inconsistent. The tu quoque argument never seemed to me, at best, a very vigorous one; but, however that may be, I did say the other day, in speaking of the peace note, that it was an unwritten rule not to refer in either House to foreign ambassadors or ministers. That is the unwritten rule, I repeat; but it has been departed from, and justly departed from, when an ambassador or minister has gone beyond his province. Before doing what I did, I cited the case of the Spanish minister who was justly criticized here, and deliberately, intentionally, I referred to what the German ambassador had said in public through the newspapers, because I considered that he had passed entirely beyond the bounds which should be observed by an ambassador from a foreign country. I deeply regret that my quotation of the eloquent and beautiful words of the German ambassador should so exasperate my friend from Nebraska. I did not realize that he felt so strongly about it.

One word more. I am under no delusion whatever, Mr. President, in regard to this matter. I know why that amendment is in the bill; we all know why it is there; we know the reason for that particular amendment. I think nothing can be said about it without implying a criticism of the House, and whether the criticism is just or unjust makes no difference to my mind. I do not want to incite or promote quarrels with the House of Representatives.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think it is regretable that the debate on this amendment has taken the course that has characterized it. It violates no confidence of the committee when I say that the aspect of the controversy which has been presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was fully presented to the subcommittee and, I think, comprehended by the full committee, which considered this amendment.

I served in the House of Representatives for a period of several years, as have other members of the Appropriations Committee, and I believe I know the temper of that body. No implication such as has been suggested can fairly arise as to any Member of the House. I think upon the whole it is a general rule that each House should be left to determine matters of this kind for itself; but in this particular case the amendment was not presented to the full committee until an investigation of the subject had been made by the subcommittee and it had been determined that it was the best thing to do and that it would meet the approval of the House of Representatives.

It is unfortunate that this amendment should be based by anyone here upon the idea that in order to guard the proper expenditure of the public funds it is necessary to adopt it. It is desired, I believe, by the House of Representatives, and if it is objectionable to that body, if the House insists upon its provision, there will be no insistence upon the part of the Senate that this amendment be agreed to. There is no impropriety in requiring that these clerks shall be placed upon the rolls. The House of Representatives, in my judgment, does not and will not object to it. I believe that the amendment will be agreed to unanimously.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I am morally sure that it would have been unanimously agreed to but for the fact that some one here on the floor of the Senate has injected into this debate the idea that some one is attempting to reflect upon the House of Representatives or its membership by the amendment. The amendment was inserted in this bill at the suggestion of Members of the House of Representatives; and the chairman of the subcommittee conferred about it with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the suggestion I wished to make.

Mr. ROBINSON. We declined to insert the amendment in the bill until that had been done. The chairman of the House committee stated that it was entirely acceptable to him, and he believed that it would be acceptable to the Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, we are wasting our time here in an unfortunate and an unnecessary discussion, in my judgment. If the House of Representatives objects to this amendment, if the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives objects to it, if the conferees upon the part of the House object to it, it will go out of the bill. That is the agreement. That is the understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 22, it is proposed to strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500."

Mr. KENYON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Hughes	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Husting	Norris	Smoot
Brady	James	Overman	Swanson
Bryan	Jones	Pittman	Tillman
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Poindexter	Vardaman
Chilton	Kern	Robinson	Walsh
Clapp	Lane	Saulsbury	Watson
Culberson	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Williams
Curtis	Lodge	Sheppard
Fletcher	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Gallinger	McLean	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the amendment of this committee.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to have that amendment stated, please.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the committee on page 20, in the portion proposed to be inserted, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] moves to strike out "$2,000" where it appears on line 22, and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,500," so that, if amended, it will read:

Clerks to Members and Delegates: For clerk or clerks to each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, $1,500 per annum..

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am in favor of the committee amendment requiring the clerks of the Members to be placed upon the House roll. I think they should be paid directly; but I doubt very much the propriety of the Senate trying to fix the salaries of the clerks to Members, and therefore I shall oppose this amendment to the committee amendment,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, which has just been stated by the Secretary, to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that we can justly criticize the committee for this amendment, even though we feel that the amendment ought to be defeated. I am satisfied with the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I believe that ought to be the policy. If this amendment is agreed to here, and the House does not agree to the amendment, we ought not to stand on it. I concede—I believe it ought to be conceded—that we should pay more respect to the opinion of the House on this particular amendment than to our own judgment. I do not believe this amendment of the committee is a reflection upon any Member of the House of Representatives. I think its principal object—and that is the principal reason why I shall vote for it—is that it takes away the possibility of a reflection being cast upon Members of the House of Representatives.

I know from an experience of 10 years in the House of Representatives that it is often charged in the country, through the newspapers, in campaigns, against members of all political parties, that Members of the House take advantage of the peculiar wording of the law when they come to distribute the pay for their employees.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to ask the Senator a question along that line.

Mr. NORRIS. I just want to finish this sentence, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator. The peculiarity of the law as it has existed heretofore has given the only excuse that exists for that kind of a charge. In my service in the House of Representatives I have never seen anything to indicate that it was true in any case. I know that in my case I had to pay on an average more than $500 a year out of my own salary to get the help that I of necessity had to have.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Along the line of the suggestion of the Senator that the present method is a reflection upon the House, is it not equally, in many instances, a reflection upon the Senate? There are people whom I have met who recognize this as an act of Congress, thinking that Senators also have this same privilege of receiving money and paying it out to their clerks.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The public do not always discriminate between the action of the House and the action of the Senate in these matters. So in that regard, at least, it seems to me that the Senate is interested.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to have the Senator's suggestion. I think there is much merit in it. It seems to me that when the House of Representatives has put into a bill something that has a peculiar relationship to the House itself we ought to approach the consideration of the subject just a little bit differently from the way we would under ordinary circumstances; but because one House puts something into the bill pertaining to its own membership or its own organization it does not follow that the other House shall not have a voice in regard to that provision, and it has happened often in the past where things of this kind have occurred.

I remember when a provision was put into the appropriation bill providing for paying the expense of the Speaker's automobile. It was stricken out in the House and was put in in the Senate. As I remember, that occurred on several different occasions, different years, and finally became a law after it had been put in by the Senate, although it was a matter applying peculiarly, particularly, and solely to the House of Representatives. Nobody seemed to care about that. It was not considered a reflection.

I believe that the membership of the House, as a rule, would welcome this change. I speak, I think, from some knowledge of the subject, because I know I would have been glad if the clerk I had when I was in the House of Representatives had been put on the roll and paid without having to have the money pass through my hands. I believe that as a general rule the Members of the House will welcome the change. If they do not, if they reject the amendment, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to recede at once. But I think we have a right to make the change, and if we exercise that right as Members of one of the branches of the Legislature we can not be justly criticized.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator that the Senate committee has done the courteous thing through its acting chairman going and consulting with the chairman of the committee on the part of the House, and he did not object. What else could we do? So that the thing courteous has been done.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. OVERMAN. We went to see him, consulted with him, and he did not object to it. There was no resentment on his part, with the statement on my part that if the House itself resented it we would not insist on it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is a great difference in the difficulty presented by the clerks both of the House and of the Senate in relation to the geography of the situation. A Member of the House of Representatives coming from California and bringing his clerk with him for the short session will very likely be required to pay the traveling expenses of his clerk both coming and going, because the clerk could not afford to pay them under the salary as it has heretofore existed, at least. I know that many Members of the House who come from a distance have a clerk at home and employ one here. Everybody knows that that is a very unsatisfactory way of doing business. Everybody who has had any experience, or who will even give the matter a moment's thought, must realize that a Member is greatly handicapped if he has but one clerk, and must pick up a new clerk here in the city of Washington, and then another one when Congress adjourns and he goes home.

These clerks ought to be paid a mileage sufficient to pay their traveling expenses coming and going. That objection does not apply to a Member of Congress living near Washington, where the expense is not much in coming here or going home, but to others it is a large item. In a short session it means the difference between a profit and a deficit to the clerk of a Member. I presume most Members of the House of Representatives coming from a distance in a short session have often been presented with the proposition from their clerks that they would not come to attend the short session, that they would be compelled to give up their position if they were required to do it unless the Members paid their expenses. I have had that presented to me and I could not find fault with the clerk. I knew he could not afford it. Universally clerks have paid their expenses and lost money in a short session, and they would now in view of what it costs to live here.

Another thing, the Member of the House must be confined under the old salary that he was allowed to pay a clerk to unmarried men or unmarried women for clerks. A man with a family could not afford to come here and live and support his family at home on the salary he got, and I doubt whether he can much more than do it under the salary that is now fixed in this amendment.

It is no reflection upon the membership of the House to put them in a position where newspapers and other people who are attacking them at home or in their campaigns or at other times will not be permitted to say that this money going to their clerks must first go through their hands and that often the whole of it does not reach the clerk. I would put it beyond the power of anyone to make that assertion and that charge. It seems to me that this provision ought to be welcomed by every Member of the House, and as Members of the coordinate branch of the legislature it seems to me that we are interested, although not so greatly, I confess, that such a charge should not truthfully be made.

As a matter of justice it ought to be this way: If the clerk is working for the Government and being paid indirectly by the Government through the instrumentality of a Member of Congress, it is not fair to the Government, to the clerk nor to the Member of Congress that that method should be pursued. The clerk ought to be paid directly from the funds of the Government and thus remove all possibility of suspicion or opportunity for slanderous tongues to find fault.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the House of Representatives may not at all times be altogether capable of taking care of itself. Sometimes investigations and things of that kind are indulged in as mere harmless diversion, which lead us to conclude that our fellow patriots at the other end of the Capitol need advice from somebody. But ordinarily when it comes to determining how their assistants, clerks, and secretaries should be appointed and what salaries should be paid them, I think the House ought to have a free hand and be permitted to determine such questions for itself. I see no reason why the House of Representatives should not express itself first on this question, why the suggestion should come from the Senate.

As has been so forcibly and admirably stated by Senators, there is a comity which should be observed and a courtesy shown by each House of Congress in their dealings with each other, which, I think, is a matter of more importance than some Senators seem to think. Whatever the minority may think or express in private regarding certain matters of legislation, the House of Representatives as a whole will very naturally resent any interference on the part of the Senate in the performance of a function which belongs of right exclusively to the House. It is a matter of personal privilege.

The House has manifested its wishes, has clearly outlined what it wants, and I can see no reason or excuse whatever for Senators proposing something else. Personally I am not so well pleased with what we do in this Chamber as to think that this end of the Capitol is nearer the source of infinite wisdom than the other end of the Capitol. In this connection, Mr. President, I wish to say I am very much in favor of the increase in pay for the secretaries to the Members of Congress carried in the amendment. I am fully aware of the condition of the National Treasury and I realize that our disbursements should be in keeping at all times with the income of the Government, but it strikes me that we might economize in some other way than by taking bread out of the mouths of honest employees of the Government and force them to starve while we are spending countless thousands and millions of dollars for battleships that will never fire a hostile shot and for armies that will only be used in dress parade and for ammunition that will be wasted in target practice. I believe in economy, but I do not think we ought to begin with the already underpaid employees of the Government. There are men working for the Government today, rendering efficient service, the emoluments of whose places or offices are scarcely enough to keep the wolf of want from the door and give to their children the opportunities for intellectual development which should be vouchsafed to every child born beneath the American flag. The high cost of living may bring anxiety to the parental heart, but the apprehension of poverty and the mother's solicitude for her children's future count for nothing and are passed over as inconsequential by the Congress, while millions upon millions of dollars are wasted in preparing for war. Mr. President, I do not like the tendency of things. I have no sort of patience with the policy which seems to have been adopted by the majority of this body. It has been called to my attention that in another section of this bill the appropriation made by the House for investigation and reporting upon matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life and the investigation of the question of infant mortality has been cut in half. Was there every a greater travesty on Christian civilization? "Oh, the rarity of Christian charity under the sun." Think of cutting appropriations down for matters of that character, matters of such vital importance to the human race, while we are squandering money extorted by taxation from the toilers of this country and employing it in building needless battleships and organizing armies, which not only robs the taxpayer and consumes the products of the laborers' toil, but threatens our republican form of government. Well may we exclaim, in the language of Kipling, "Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget, lest we forget."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I shall vote against this amendment, or substitute, although I believe it is a better provision than the House provision. I intend to vote against both.

Mr. STONE. I should like to know just what the question is that we are to vote upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to the bill.

Mr. STONE. On agreeing to the entire amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. STONE. May I ask what became of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was defeated. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. Observing that he is absent and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is absent, and not knowing how he would vote I will withhold my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when Mr. SAULSBURY's name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], but he being on the committee, voted like I did. I voted "yea" and will let my vote stand.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask if the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I will withhold my vote. If the junior Senator from Ohio were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. OLIVER (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has not voted. I have a pair with that Senator, but as he is one of my associates upon the Committee on Appropriations, which reported the bill, I take the liberty of allowing my vote to stand.

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Library of Congress," on page 23, line 18, after the words "Washington library," to insert "one in room for the blind, $900," and in line 26, after the words "in all," to strike out "$59,220" and insert "$60,120," so as to make the clause read:

Reading rooms (including evening service) and special collections: Superintendent, $3,000; assistants—2 at $1,800 each, 5 at $1,200 each (including 1 in room for the blind), 2 at charging desk at $1,080 each, 5 at $960 each (including 1 for Toner library and 1 for Washington library), 1 in room for the blind, $900, 10 at $840 each, 4 at $600 each; stenographer and typewriter, $960; attendants—Senate reading room, $960, Representatives' reading room—1 $960, 1 $840, 2 in cloakroom, at $780 each; 2 for gallery and alcoves, at $540 each; telephone operator, $660; 4 junior messengers, at $420 each; 2 watchmen, at $780 each; evening service, assistants—5 at $960 each, 15 at $840 each, 2 at $600 each; in all, $60,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 18, after "$1,400," to insert "to be immediately available," and in line 20, after "$8,500," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For fuel, lights, repairs, miscellaneous supplies, electric and steam apparatus, city directory, stationery, mail and delivery service, and all incidental expenses in connection with the custody, care, and maintenance of said building and grounds, including $1,400, to be immediately available, additional for waterproofing parts of east driveway and over machinery; $1,075 for fire hose and fittings; $8,500, to be immediately available, for repairing tunnel and mechanical book carrier connecting the Library Building and the Capitol; $2,300 for repairing passenger elevators; $500 for painting portions of roof of building and $2,000 for pointing exterior stonework of building, $28,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 7, on page 29, the last item read being as follows:

BOTANIC GARDEN.

For superintendent, $2,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offered a proposed amendment to the item just read for Superintendent of the Botanic Garden, proposing to increase the salary to $2,500. As it was the policy of the committee not to increase salaries in the bill, I did not urge it before the committee, and I do not urge it now, but I want to call attention to the fact, which I think is universally admitted, that this official is underpaid. The man at the head of the Botanic Garden is a gentleman of large experience who understands his business thoroughly. He has passed the civil-service examination and is entitled to an adequate salary, considering his experience and the responsibilities especially that are upon him.

I simply call attention to this fact for the reason that I hope when the stress is removed, as I trust it will be so far as appropriations are concerned in the near future, Mr. Hess may be allowed a larger salary than he is receiving at the present time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I quite agree with what the Senator from New Hampshire has said. I think $2,000 is an inadequate compensation for this officer, and that he ought to receive at least $2,500. I would be willing to vote for the increase if the Senator offers it as an amendment now. I think the Senate ought to make the salary $2,500.

Mr. THOMAS. May I inquire of the Senator from Florida if that is not the contention underlying the general request for larger salaries? If that is so in individual instances are we consistent in denying it as a general proposition?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think this is quite a different thing from proposing a general increase. I think we should do justice when we can apply it in particular instances. There may be instances where a man in one position would require in all equity and right a certain amount of salary whereas it might not obtain as to others. I am not speaking with reference to others, but I know something of the duties of this official, I know something of the requirements and qualifications of the position. Two thousand dollars is not ample compensation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, an added word. I meant to say that the increased salary was estimated for, but I was confronted with this situation in the committee, that if the amendment was offered many other amendments increasing salaries would likewise be offered by members of the committee, and I did not feel like raising that question, recognizing the fact that we ought to be as economical as possible at the present time. I regret exceedingly that the circumstances are such that this amendment could not be by unanimous consent agreed to because it is an exceptional case, but as a member of the committee I do not feel that I would be justified in pressing it upon the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that this is one of the increases the committee would like to have made, but the committee had to be consistent and we have not increased the salary of a single employe. In the case of this man and several others we thought under ordinary circumstances we would recommend an increase of their salaries, but under the present conditions the committee determined that they would not increase any salaries at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think it is in any way divulging the secrets of the committee when I say that the committee passed upon an increase of this salary in the beginning of the hearings on the bill, but later decided to strike out all increases and therefore this salary remained as it passed the House.

I wish to add this much in justification of the committee's first action. The present superintendent of the Botanic Garden is called upon each year to attend exhibits and conventions at which superintendents of parks and botanic gardens from all parts of the country are present. The Government of the United States has received from exhibits made rare flowers and rare plants gathered from all over the world worth many thousands of dollars, and the superintendent, Mr. Hess, has been instrumental in bringing this about.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator if, in view of the present action, he does not think the superintendent is being taken pretty good care of at his present salary?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that this is an additional labor that has been put upon him recently.

I am not asking now as a member of the committee that this increase be made, although I do know that he is being paid less than many, many employees of the Government who are not doing one-half of the work he is doing.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator when were these later duties placed upon the superintendent?

Mr. SMOOT. I believe they began two years ago.

Mr. THOMAS. Recently?

Mr. SMOOT. Very recently.

Mr. GALLINGER. And he is so efficient that he was elected to an office in that national organization. The fact is that this man is receiving less salary than the average clerk is receiving in this body and the same salary the clerks in the other body receive if the amendment goes through.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt that inequalities of compensation are painfully evident in all our departments. I believe an impartial examination will show that while some men may be well paid, others are very poorly paid, and still others paid not perhaps with such glaring inequality. But, nevertheless, we have also to consider a proper compensation, and that situation suggests to my mind the necessity of a careful and deliberate investigation of the whole subject, which, when reported back to the committees of the two Houses having the matter in charge, will enable us to legislate intelligently.

I have no doubt the statements of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from New Hampshire with regard to this particular officer are absolutely correct, but perhaps no more so than would apply to a very large proportion of others whose payment is involved in the bill.

My objection to the consideration of an individual amendment is that we can not well do it and at the same time do justice to those whose claim seems to be based upon the same proposition, and we would be making distinctions which I do not think are fair.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can not allow the matter to pass without saying a word with regard to two items in the bill. Everybody recognizes that we have not a botanic garden of the kind we ought to have. I hope that before long it will be reorganized, so that the United States may not lag so far behind other nations and municipalities and States with regard to this subject; but when we get that sort of a botanic garden we will be compelled to pay for a superintendent a very much larger salary than is here proposed. However, the $2,000 a year for our present Botanic Garden and for a superintendent who is competent to manage it is absurdly low; it is very inadequate as compensation compared with the money we pay to other employees.

The present superintendent of the Botanic Garden is a man of accomplishment. He possesses a vast fund of knowledge, with regard to this subject, and I have wondered ever since I have been connected with the Library Committee that he was willing to work for the Government at any such salary. I do not believe he would be willing were it not that he hopes at some time the Government will be more just and equitable in its dealing with him. I should like to support an amendment increasing his salary to $3,000 a year, at least.

But there is another item which I think is really absurd. I suppose it will be found in a great many places in the bill. It is an item that says:

> For assistants, and skilled laborers, and laborers at not exceeding $2 per diem, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library.

I think it is inhuman to ask any man to work in these times for $2 a day. I simply record my dissent from that standard of compensation. No man can live comfortably in the city of Washington with a family upon $2 a day; and I would much rather myself diminish the appropriation for battleships and armor, hoping that we may not need them so soon as some people believe we will need them, and add something to the compensation of the men who are endeavoring to raise their families in this locality upon $2 a day.

I am in favor of a minimum compensation of $3 a day for the laborers whom the Government employs. That amount is barely sufficient to enable men, with the utmost economy, to discharge their duties to society. I do not intend to make a motion to change these salaries, but I was not willing to allow this instant to pass without expressing my opinion with respect to the matter.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, if he feels that way about it, is it not his duty to offer an amendment increasing the pay at least to $2.50 a day?

Mr. CUMMINS. I had supposed that it would be out of order to do so. I suppose that a point of order would lie against such an amendment.

Mr. LANE. Would the Senator not be willing to take the chance on that? I will make the motion if the Senator does not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will raise the point of order against the amendment. I do not want to go into a discussion. The salary has been increased by the other House, and it is the only increase which has been made in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not apply to the superintendent, but to the laborers. Of course, that has not been estimated for.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has not been estimated for.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the only reason why I did not offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHELAN in the chair). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, do I understand that a point of order would lie against an amendment to increase the salary of the superintendent of the Botanic Garden?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, that salary is estimated for at $2,500. In view of that, I offered an amendment increasing the salary to $2,500.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator has offered that amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I offered the amendment, and it was sent to the committee, but I have not offered it here. The amendment was rejected by the committee. The point of order would not lie against a motion to increase the salary to the amount of $2,500.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not know that. Then, I shall offer an amendment to strike out "$2,000" and to insert "$2,500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] will be adopted. It does seem to me that the salary paid for the work which this man does at the head of such an institution is ridiculously low. I have had occasion to discuss matters with him, and his knowledge of botany and everything pertaining to that office is so vast and varied that it was really a matter of marvel to me how a man with such accomplishments could well afford to keep a place of this kind for that small salary. I understand he is now getting only $1,800. This Government has no right to receive the services of a man of that character, a man of his accomplishments, and pay so little for them. It is not fair; it is not just; it is not in accord with the eternal fitness of things. I think Congress ought to raise his salary and pay him fair and just compensation for the splendid services he is rendering the American people. The United States can not afford to be unjust or unfair with its employees.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I could readily agree with all that the Senator from Mississippi has said, but I want to call his attention to the fact that I can point to 20 or 25 cases in this bill where an injustice is being done to Government employees.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me just one moment—if his statement about that is absolutely true, then this Government can not afford to do that. This Government is not a pauper; it has no right to ask a man to serve it for less than that man is worth and for less than his services are worth to the American people.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that not only is that the case with the men of whom I speak, but this bill has been stripped of every request made by every head of a department, no matter how just the request was. Not only are some of the men dealt with unjustly, but there are one or two bureaus in the departments that are being unjustly dealt by. The policy adopted by the majority of the committee is that there shall be no increases in the salaries of the employees of the Government. At the proper time I shall offer an amendment, which I have reserved the right to offer, increasing the salaries of all employees receiving $1,000 a year or less.

I wish, however, to say to the Senator now that if we undertake to increase this salary—which I frankly admit ought to be increased—we would be doing a double injustice to the other men who ought also to receive increased salaries.

In this connection, I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that the proper way to arrive at justice between all of the employees of the Government is, in my opinion, to have a committee appointed to make a thorough investigation. If that investigation is ever made, I will assure the Senator from Mississippi it will be found that there are salaries paid to employees in the different departments of the Government that are away above what they ought to be, while there are other salaries that are away below what they ought to be. There is an inconsistency in the amount of salaries paid in all of the departments of this Government, and it ought to be corrected; but we can not do it on this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I will say, in reply to the Senator from Utah, that I do not know of and I am not familiar with the cases to which he refers; but I do know that the salary paid in this case is so manifestly inadequate, so far below what it ought to be, that I do not think the Senate ought to hesitate to correct the wrong not only to this man who occupies the office to-day, but to the American people, whose servant he is.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah who established the policy that no compensation for a Government employee should be raised by this Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. So far as the salaries contained in the bill reported to the Senate are concerned, I will say that policy was established by a majority of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can understand that, and I am not quarreling with the desire to practice the utmost economy. I know of the inequalities of which the Senator from Utah speaks, and I hope that we very soon will be able to readjust these salaries upon an equitable and fair basis; but that is no excuse for not considering an obviously low salary and raising it. We ought not to put off all the reform until we can make it complete. This man is now receiving, as I understand, $2,500 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. He is now receiving $1,800.

Mr. ROBINSON. His salary is only $1,800 now.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think he formerly got $2,500.

Mr. ROBINSON. He accepted this salary and is now getting $1,800.

Mr. OVERMAN. The former superintendent, Mr. Smith, who served 40 or 50 years, never got over $1,800.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from North Carolina is right; but I was under the impression that he got more. However, whether the present incumbent is getting it or not, he earns more than $2,000 a year; but what attracted my attention was the limitation upon the skilled laborers to $2 a day. What kind of a skilled laborer do you expect to employ for $2 a day? I know that there are some poor, miserable fellows around Washington who are working for the Government, who have never had access to the avenues of influence, who are getting only $2 a day, and some of them less; but it does not require any investigation to enable us to reach the conclusion that a man ought to be paid more than $2 a day if he gives his time to the Government, whether he is skilled or unskilled. Therefore, why not raise the salary to the proper point?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator in that connection that the laborers provided for under the head of the Botanic Garden at $2 per day are not even employed the year round. I think they work only about three or four months in the year.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is all the more reason for increasing their compensation.

Mr. SMOOT. They are men generally who have no work to do. The work is light, I will say to the Senator; and yet I agree with him that $2 a day is a very low compensation for any class of work. I will tell the Senator what these laborers generally do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know just as well what they do as does the Senator.

Mr. LANE. I wish the Senator from Utah would tell me; I should like to hear it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, these men generally work on the lawns, and they see that the edges of the lawns are kept even. They also work around the flower beds and trees and do whatever work they are told to do by the men having the Botanic Garden in charge.

Mr. LANE. They work for the men who are paid to do the work.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to say that the work described by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is just as hard as any other work, save, possibly, the shoveling in a ditch, or something of that sort. The Senator from Utah has never had the experience, or he would know that to get down on one's knees and clip a hedge or to clip grass around the border of a walk is not easy, physically speaking.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that, but I will say to the Senator——

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as that is concerned, this bill does not seem to provide for paying anybody in the Botanic Garden more than $2 a day. So, I can not understand who is above these men who are getting $2 a day except the superintendent himself. Is there anybody above them?

Mr. OVERMAN. The salary is fixed at $2 a day, because a lump sum is provided.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah said there were some men higher up who directed these men how to work or what to do, and that those men got more.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the superintendent himself.

Mr. CUMMINS. But nobody else?

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I think that the limitation of $2 a day only applies to the laborers. The commas would remove the assistant skilled laborers from that category. It says:

For assistants, and skilled laborers—and laborers at not exceeding $2 per diem.

Then—

Mr. CUMMINS. I looked at that, but I doubt whether that construction is the right one.

Mr. OLIVER. It is a little ambiguous.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator desires the information, I will give him the salaries paid to the employees of the Botanic Garden. The superintendent now receives $1,800. The other employees are paid as follows: Assistant superintendent, $1,400; clerk, $1,200; second clerk, $840; seed distributor, $720; shipping clerks, $780——

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not know but that it was proposed to reduce them all to $2 a day.

Mr. OVERMAN. The carpenter receives $1,170; gardeners, $1,020 and $960. Then come skilled laborers, and so forth. The item now being discussed applies only to the lowest class of labor.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rather assumed that when I first began speaking, but from the statement of the Senator from Utah I took it that it included them all.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, the man who does an actual day's physical labor requires just as much food—in fact, he needs more—and gets just as hungry as the man who has a more sedentary occupation; and $2 a day is not enough money for a good hard-working laboring man to support himself and family. You will never get first-class work done until you pay fair wages for labor.

If the places the compensation of which is provided for in this bill were carefully analyzed and equitably adjusted and the wages were made proportionate to the amount and character of work that each employee performs, it would be possible to increase the pay of the more skilled and faithful employees—for instance, such men as the capable Superintendent of the Botanic Garden, to whom reference has been made. By a general analysis and proper adjustment of these matters a saving of thousands upon thousands of dollars could be effected and there would be money left to pay laboring men what their labor is worth; but increasing one at a time and picking out special employees to grant increases to is not the right way to proceed. I think that all these matters should be analyzed and the compensation should be paid on the basis of merit, which would be fair and square alike to the employee and to the Government.

A day or two ago I was riding on a street car and overheard two men behind me talking. One of them said he had left the Government service, while the other one was still a clerk in one of the departments. I did not understand which department it was. The man who had left the service said he had left it because there was no use remaining in it. He said, "No one can get anywhere in Government work, for the reason that faithful work is not appreciated. One can work as hard as he wishes hoping for promotion, and you may reach $1,200 or $1,500 a year, but that is the limit; while some fellow who does but little work but who schemes and uses influence gets the $2,500 job." He said, "If I had to work for the Government again, I would not work as hard as I formerly did, but I would hunt up political help and influence on Capitol Hill and I would be a $2,500 man." I have heard the complaint very often that the pay is not proportioned to the results which the Government receives and that special favors are the rule, and that complaint is general in nearly every bureau, according to the employees who have talked with me.

I repeat, there could be a great saving to the Government and an increase in the value of the work if a proper analysis and investigation were made. The official to whom reference has been made may be worth three or four or five thousand dollars a year, and he ought to have it if that is the case; but the laboring man should not be made to suffer; he ought to be paid what he is worth; and I hope that the committee will authorize such an analysis and investigation to be made in this bill. I myself would be willing to make a motion to employ experts to go through the different departments, analyze the work, and readjust the pay scale on a basis of fairness.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator, in connection with his very wise suggestion, that the Committee on Appropriations have in this bill provided for a board of experts to make an investigation and reclassify positions in the Government departments. We are trying to bring about the very thing the Senator has suggested.

Mr. LANE. I am very glad to hear that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. In view of the discussion, it is perfectly obvious that my amendment would not prevail, and I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Botanic Garden," on page 29, line 16, after "$25," to insert "office equipment," so as to make the clause read:

For procuring manure, soil, tools, fuel, purchasing trees, shrubs, plants, and seeds; services, including skilled laborers, and laborers at not exceeding $2 per diem, materials, and miscellaneous supplies, traveling expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence of the superintendent and his assistants not to exceed $200, street car tickets not exceeding $25, office equipment, and contingent expenses in connection with repairs and improvements to Botanic Gardens, care and maintenance of motor-propelled delivery vehicle, under direction of the Joint Library Committee of Congress, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Efficiency," on page 31, line 10, after the words "in all," to strike out "$43,000" and insert "$60,000," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Bureau of Efficiency, authorized by the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved February 28, 1916, to establish and maintain a system of efficiency ratings, to investigate administrative needs of the service relating to personnel in the several executive departments and independent establishments, required by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1913 and 1914, respectively, and to investigate duplication of statistical and other work and methods of business in the various branches of the Government service; for purchase or exchange of equipment, supplies, stationery, books and periodicals, printing and binding, traveling expenses not exceeding $3,000, and street car fare not exceeding $50; in all, $60,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a compensation exceeding $4,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 12, to insert:

The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate the methods of examining and auditing claims against the United States and accounts of disbursing officers, and of accounting for receipts and disbursements and shall submit a report to Congress, with recommendations, at its next regular session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 17, to insert:

The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate the work performed by the Subtreasuries and report to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session what part of the work of the Subtreasuries may be transferred to other offices of the Government or banks of the Federal Reserve System, and for the purpose of this investigation the representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency shall have access to all necessary books and other records of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 32, to insert:

The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate the methods of transacting the public business in the Civil Service Commission and report to the Senate through the President at the next regular session of Congress. The officers and employees of the Civil Service Commission are hereby directed to furnish said bureau with such information as it may require to carry out this resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 7, to insert:

The Bureau of Efficiency shall ascertain the rates of pay of employees of various State and municipal governments and commercial institutions in different parts of the United States and shall submit to the Congress at its next regular session a report showing how such rates compare with the rates of pay of employees of the Federal Government performing similar services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 14, to insert:

Officers and employees of the executive departments and other establishments shall furnish authorized representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency with all information that the bureau may require for the performance of the duties imposed on it by law, and shall give such representatives access to all records and papers that may be needed for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Civil Service Commission," on page 33, line 15, before the word "field," to insert "five," so as to make the clause read:

For five field examiners at the rate of $1,500 per annum each, for work in connection with members of local boards and other necessary work as directed by the commission, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of State," in the item of appropriation for office of the Secretary of State, on page 35, line 16, after the word "operators," to strike out "driver, $840; hostler, $720," and insert "chauffeur, $1,080," and in line 17, after the words "in all," to strike out "$321,140" and insert "$320,660," so as to read:

Clerks—17 of class 4, 19 of class 3, 25 of class 2, 43 of class 1 (3 of whom shall be telegraph operators), 18 at $1,000 each, 18 at $900 each; chief messenger, $1,000; 6 messengers; 23 assistant messengers; messenger boy, $420; packer, $720; 4 laborers, at $600 each; 2 telephone switchboard operators; chauffeur, $1,080; in all, $320,660.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 7, to insert:

For the further additional force, now paid from appropriation for emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year 1917, as follows: Clerks—1 of class 4, $900; 2 at $720 each; in all, $4,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 5, after the words "Secretary of State," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of an automobile for official use of the Secretary of State, to be immediately available, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 6, to insert:

The Public Printer is directed to remove, within 30 days after the passage of this act, all printing machinery, material, etc., from all rooms in the State, War, and Navy Building now assigned to the Department of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 37, line 13, after "$12,000," to insert "assistant to the Secretary, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, at the rate of $5,000 per annum, from March 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918, both dates inclusive, $6,666.67," so as to read:

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000; assistant to the Secretary, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, at the rate of $5,000 per annum, from March 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918, both dates inclusive, $6,666.67.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is legislation on a general appropriation bill. It creates a new office and provides for its filling by appointment by the President by and with the advice of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will say that it is estimated for.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I desire to say that I do not see on what theory the Senator from Washington construes the amendment as subject to a point of order. In the first place, it is not general legislation, but merely provides for the appointment of an officer to fill a position; and, in the second place, as I understand, it has been estimated for; but if not estimated for, it is reported by a standing committee of the Senate, and an estimate would not be necessary. I think the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. JONES. The fact that it is reported by a standing committee of the Senate would not make legislation in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly not——

Mr. JONES. This amendment creates a new office.

Mr. BRYAN. But it would obviate the necessity of having an estimate; that is all.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but there is no such office as "assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. BRYAN. The amendment is not general legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will examine the statutes he will find that the law provides for the creation of such offices as may hereafter be provided.

Mr. JONES. I understand; but we have got to provide for it by legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all; this is not new legislation.

Mr. JONES. It is a provision for an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Treasury Department was established by law. That is the legislation governing the matter. Now, we are providing machinery to carry on that department. There is no new legislation in this matter at all; no more so than if we were appropriating for a half dozen additional clerks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am interested in the point of order made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I certainly do not believe that the point of order will lie against this amendment. It is not general legislation. It proposes to appropriate for a specific office and for a specific amount. Furthermore, it has been estimated for and has been reported by a standing committee of the Senate. So I can not see how the point of order will lie against it. I am not speaking as to the merits of the amendment or as to whether it should be adopted; but my interest is in the rules of the Senate, and I do not believe that a point of order lies against the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Utah takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. If I understood him correctly, he said that this amendment limits this office to June 30, 1918.

Mr. SMOOT. The appropriation is for service until June 30, 1918.

Mr. THOMAS. My reading of it is that the assistant to the Secretary is provided for that period of time only; but the Senator knows that when one of these offices is provided for it remains to be taken care of.

Mr. SMOOT. I will agree with the Senator that it is almost an unheard-of thing whenever an office is created that it ever is abolished.

Mr. THOMAS. Once this provision is enacted into law the assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury becomes a permanent official of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMOOT. So long as the office is appropriated for.

Mr. THOMAS. It will be appropriated for right along.

Mr. SMOOT. I rather think the Senator is right.

Mr. THOMAS. Because the conditions which make it necessary to have this officer now will be continuing conditions. Now, independently of the point of order, which may or may not be well taken, I hope the Senate will not agree to this amendment, because I believe that the Treasury Department can get along with its present force, and it must get along with its present force if we are mindful of the situation of the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I thought the Chair would rule upon the point of order, and then we could discuss the merits of the provision.

Mr. THOMAS. I beg pardon for interrupting the Senator; but I thought I would say what I wanted to say upon the subject of the point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that, so far as being estimated for in the regular channel, this item is found in the Book of Estimates. I have sent for and obtained a copy of the Book of Estimates, and I find it is there. So I do not think the point of order lies.

Mr. JONES. I will leave it to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from North Carolina does or does not the Secretary of the Treasury recommend the establishment of this office as a permanent office?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is estimated for in the language found in the amendment, and has been reported by a committee; so that, whether it has been estimated for or not, it is in order and is not new legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is in doubt as to the question whether provision being made for the office in an appropriation bill it thereby establishes permanently the office.

Mr. OVERMAN. It does not. It only establishes the office for a certain particular time; but suppose it establishes it permanently, what difference would that make?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's construction is that it is not the establishment, therefore, of a permanent office?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is not, according to the language used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And it has been estimated for?

Mr. OVERMAN. It has been estimated for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is disposed to rule that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, do I understand that the Chair has ruled on the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is disposed to rule, but the Chair will hear the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I am opposed to this amendment because I think in these times when we can not afford to increase the salaries and wages paid to the exceedingly underpaid clerks and laborers in the employ of the Government of the United States we ought not to create a new office in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury when he can get along with the assistance he now has. I think, however, the point of order is well taken, because clearly this is general legislation. The creation of an office is a legislative act; the filling of the office is an executive act, but before the office can be filled by appointment it must be created by legislation. This amendment provides for an "assistant to the Secretary, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," so that clearly by this act of legislation the office of assistant to the Secretary has been created.

It makes no difference that next year we might fail to appropriate for it or that we might appropriate for it next year and fail the following year, the office itself has been created, and when the Congress creates an office it can only do so by general legislation. It is not private legislation, it is public legislation; it is not special but general legislation.

Now I call the attention of the Chair to the very general definition which is contained in the first volume of the Precedents, at page 60:

The Century Dictionary says:

"General legislation, that legislation which is applicable throughout the State generally, as distinguished from special legislation, which affects only particular persons or localities.

"Local legislation, local statute, such legislation or statute as is in terms applicable, not to the State at large, but only to some district or locality and to the people therein."

Bouvier (vol. 1, p. 877):

"General law (legislation), laws which apply to and operate uniformly upon all members of any class of persons, places, or things requiring legislation peculiar to themselves in the matters covered by the laws."

Of course, the fact that there is only one in a class does not prevent it from being a class.

Statutes which relate to persons and things as a class. Laws that are framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects which, having regard to the purpose of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves.

And further on:

"General," with reference to the subject matter of the statute, is synonymous with "public" and opposed to "private."

That is one view of it. It is public legislation as opposed to private legislation.

But with reference to the extent of territory over which it is to operate, is opposed to "local" * * * and means that the statute to which it applies operates throughout the whole of the territory subject to the legislative jurisdiction. * * * Further, when used in antithesis to "special," it means relating to all of a class instead of to men only of that class. * * * In deciding whether or not a given law is general, the purpose of the act and the objects on which it operates must be looked to. If these objects possess sufficient characteristics peculiar to themselves and the purpose of the legislation is germane thereto, they will be considered as a separate class, and legislation affecting them will be general; but if the distinctive characteristics of the class have no relation to that purpose of the legislature, or if objects which would appropriately belong to the same class have been excluded, the classification is faulty, and the law not "general." The effect, not the form of the law, determines its character.

It seems to me that this is as much general legislation as if we were to provide in a bill for the appointment of an additional judge of the Supreme Court of the United States or to create any other office. It is not private legislation; it is not special legislation. It is public, general legislation, operating upon all of that particular class.

I hope, whether the point of order is sustained or not, that the amendment proposed by the committee will not be agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. We will discuss that later.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to call the Chair's attention to a decision of the Senate in the Fifty-third Congress, where this question was raised on an item or amendment to the legislative appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At what page?

Mr. CURTIS. It is on page 124 of the Precedents and Decisions.

The Senate, by a vote of yeas 15, nays 29, decided that an amendment proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill providing one clerk for the Supreme Court, to be employed by the Chief Justice, at a salary of $2,500, for the service of the court in obtaining books and making notes of references, etc., and one messenger for the court, at $750, to be employed by the Chief Justice for the convenience of the court and removal of books, was general legislation to a general appropriation bill, and that it proposed to add a new item of appropriation and was not within the exceptions contained in clause 1, Rule XVI, and was not in order.

It seems to me that decision of the Senate, which does not seem to have been overruled, is decisive of the point, and that the amendment is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that was a case where the Chair submitted the question to the Senate. The Senate frequently rules that way when the questions are left to it. It is in order for the present Presiding Officer of the Senate to rule upon the rules as he finds them. As we all know, when the Chair is in doubt about these questions they are sometimes submitted to the Senate; but it seems to me that if you will read Rule XVI you will see that this is plainly in order:

No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation—unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

What is that law? The very law that puts into effect the different departments here—the Treasury Department, for example. The establishment of that department is provided for by law, and the machinery for the execution and administration of the Treasury Department must be carried out in an appropriation bill. That is the general law; that is the existing law; and this is adding a new appropriation under the Treasury Department for the carrying out and administration of the statute law.

The rule proceeds:

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate—

This has been reported by a standing committee, and is in order on that ground—proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least, one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator does not contend, does he, because this amendment has been reported by a standing committee, that that relieves it from the point of order that it is general legislation?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I did not say that. I said that the point made by the Senator that it was not estimated for would not be applicable. This is reported by a standing committee, and therefore is taken out of that class.

Mr. JONES. Oh, I did not suggest that this had not been estimated for. I assume that it has been estimated for. I made the point that it was general legislation on an appropriation bill. That can not be covered by the report of a committee. The mere fact that we have a general law creating the Treasury Department does not authorize the Committee on Appropriations to report every proposition that may be submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury. That will have to be provided by a legislative bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is on the Appropriations Committee. In this bill and all other bills that have ever been before us we do add new clerks, do we not, in the different departments?

Mr. JONES. Oh, we do add some.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think that is general legislation? If this point can be successfully interposed, we can block every appropriation for every department of this Government on the ground that it is general legislation, and we could not have any legislation at all. We could not have any increases. We could not have an office created or a clerk added. We could not carry on the Government.

Mr. JONES. The mere fact that points of order may not have been made against other provisions does not make this point of order unavailable.

Mr. OVERMAN. As I say, the Senator knows that there is not a single, solitary bill that has ever come here in which we do not create new offices. We are bound to do it as the necessity comes up.

Mr. JONES. But there is a way to do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The way to do it is by a standing committee, in pursuance of an act of Congress providing for this department, that department, and the other department, the obligation being upon us to administer it fairly and justly and as economically as possible.

Mr. JONES. While I have not had time to look up the precedents in another body, to which I suppose it might be proper to refer here, I am sure it will be found that points of order have been uniformly sustained there to the addition of new offices not provided by law in the appropriation bill as it is originated and sent over to us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Subject to appeal from the decision of the Chair, the Chair will rule that the point of order is well taken, based upon the precedent quoted on page 124 of the Precedents of the United States Senate holding that the creation of an office is general legislation. This office necessarily is created as precedent to providing a salary for the payment of the officeholder. The Chair will invite an appeal from the decision of the Chair in order to get a determination of the matter by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am so confident that the ruling of the Chair is contrary to the practice of the Senate and I think contrary to the rules of the Senate that I must appeal from the decision of the Chair and ask the Senate to determine the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Chair what the holding of the Chair was—whether the Chair held that the amendment was in order or was not in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That it was not in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood the Chair to rule that the amendment was subject to the point of order, and that it goes out. Is that the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the Chair has ruled that the amendment is subject to the point of order and goes out. The Chair will ask the reporter to read the ruling of the Chair.

The reporter read as follows:

> The PRESIDING OFFICER. Subject to appeal from the decision of the Chair, the Chair will rule that the point of order is well taken, based upon the precedent quoted on page 124 of the Precedents of the United States Senate, holding that the creation of an office is general legislation. This office necessarily is created as precedent to providing a salary for the payment of the officeholder. The Chair will invite an appeal from the decision of the Chair in order to get a determination of the matter by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD before me in order to examine what case that was. That may have been, Mr. President, a case where there was an amendment proposed upon the floor of the Senate, or even where the amendment was reported from the committee and no estimate made for it. There was, however, an estimate made through the regular Government channels to pay for this office, and therefore it seems to me that it is clearly within the power of the committee to insert the amendment, and that it is not subject to the point order. Therefore, Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I wish to explain the way I intend to vote upon this question by saying that I am strongly in favor of this amendment. I think that a man occupying the position of Secretary of the Treasury, under the present circumstances, ought to have the help provided for by the amendment; but I can not in all good conscience get around the fact that it is general legislation. It provides for the creation of a new office. While I should like to see the amendment adopted, I must vote to sustain the Chair in the ruling he has made.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I simply wish to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to quite a number of precedents found on pages 134 to 142, inclusive; and I read this one of them on page 134:

> The naval appropriation bill (H. R. 26394) being under consideration, and the reported amendment, on page 16, after line 11, that the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by selection and promotion, a vice admiral on the retired list of the Navy, having been read,
> Mr. Rayner made the point of order that it was "general legislation, creating an entirely new office in an appropriation bill."
> The Vice President (Mr. Fairbanks) sustained the point of order.

There are quite a number of them along the same line, and all support the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I remember the case referred to by the Senator; but in that case there had been no estimate for it. The amendment was put in by the Naval Affairs Committee, and simply reported from the committee. In this case, however, it has been estimated for by the department through the Secretary of the Treasury; and not only that, but it has been passed upon by the committee and reported to the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, although it may have been reported on by a Senate committee, I do not think the Senator will claim that that takes it out of the objection that it is general legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. That does not relieve it of that objection. There are a number of cases, all along the same line, and in every instance it has been sustained.

Mr. SMOOT. The reporting of the amendment by the committee would not take it out of that class to which the objection would apply; but the reporting of the committee and the estimate of the Government for the place take it out of that class.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no, Mr. President. Neither of those touches the question of general legislation at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That would not affect its status as general legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The report of the committee would be just as good as both. The report of the committee, under the rules, is sufficient. The recommendation of the department is sufficient, provided it is not general legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But if it is general legislation the combination of both does not relieve it any more than the action of one would relieve it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think it is general legislation when this is simply a specific appropriation for one particular bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not expressing an opinion as to whether or not it is general legislation. I was answering the suggestion of the Senator from Utah that the fact that the department had estimated for it, and the committee also had recommended it, freed it from an objection as being general legislation, if it was general legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on that point the rule is very clear—Rule XVI, paragraph 3—and that does not at all relate to the points that the Senator from Utah has made:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Now, Mr. President, that stands by itself, and if it is general legislation it is obnoxious to the rule. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that that is true if it is general legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; certainly. That is all.

Mr. SMOOT. But the present Vice President of the United States in ruling many times has asked the Senate whether an appropriation for a specific case is general legislation, and the Vice President has held time and time again that in order to be general legislation it should apply generally throughout the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not this office?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, let me ask my colleague a question. Does not my colleague recognize that the creation of an office is general legislation? If we were to pass a bill to-day providing that hereafter there should be in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury a new officer to be known as assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, would not that be general legislation?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; if it were legislated in that way, it would be.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The authorities have said over and over again that we are to look at the substance of the proposed legislation and not at the form, and when we come to do that and analyze this provision we find that it does two things: First of all, it creates an office, and that is a legislative act, because the office could not exist until Congress had spoken; and then it provides for filling the office by an appointment. Obviously this piece of legislation creates an office, and it is general legislation. I never have heard it doubted heretofore that the creation of an office was general legislation. There are precedents here, one after another. Here is one that catches my eye, on page 134, Forty-seventh Congress:

The President pro tempore (Mr. Davis) decided that an amendment to the naval appropriation bill adding 140 surgeons, of whom 50 shall be designated as surgeons of the first class, etc., was not in order under Rule XXIX, and was general legislation to a general appropriation bill.

On appeal, the decision was sustained—yeas 26, nays 21.

Now, if it is general legislation to provide for an additional 140 surgeons, it is general legislation to provide for an additional 1 surgeon. The fact that there is only one in the class does not prevent it from being a class.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator takes the position, then, that no increase can be made in an office on an appropriation bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; the Senator does not take that position. We can increase the salary paid to an office already in existence, but we can not create a new office. They are two very distinct and different things.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that entirely. There is not any question about that, and that has been universally held. But the Senator takes the position, then, that the only way in which we could have an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury is by a general bill creating the office?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The only way is to pass legislation; and when the legislation is passed it may become a question as to whether it is general legislation or special legislation—general legislation as distinguished from special, or general legislation in the sense that it is public, as distinguished from private legislation—and if it is proposed to an appropriation bill there is a rule which says that if it is general legislation it will not be admitted.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is not general legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not an appropriation bill passed but that there is the creation of some kind of an office by the appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. A point or order could be made against every one of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if it is general legislation, then the only way you can create a new office is to pass a bill through Congress creating it, and then appropriate the money to pay whatever salary is attached to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We do that sometimes, but it is done because no one objects. If the point was made——

Mr. OVERMAN. Could we appoint a clerk? Would that be general legislation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How does the Senator mean?

Mr. OVERMAN. Instead of saying that there should be 40 clerks for a certain department, suppose we put in 46; would that be general legislation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Additional clerks?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think undoubtedly it would be general legislation if it is the creation of a new office.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, if that is so, it would be the end of all legislation. We never would be able to keep the Government going. The wheels would be clogged. The Government could not move. We could not get along at all. We never could pass general bills through Congress for these clerks. That would be the end of it. This is simply special legislation; it is not general.

Mr. SMOOT. If that were the case, Mr. President, the House of Representatives might just as well make up the appropriation bill and have it become a law in that shape and never come to the Senate of the United States for amendment by them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, well, if the Senator will permit me, an appropriation bill is not entirely composed of clerks. There are some other things in appropriation bills.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is not much else in the legislative bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have heard this question discussed over and over again as to what was general legislation. I never have been able to form an exact standard which it was safe to operate under. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah, if he will permit me to do so, what he thinks is the distinction between general legislation and special legislation. Does he think that everything that is not general legislation has to be, so to speak, private legislation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; it may be distinguished in a variety of ways.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What would be some special instances of special legislation which could go on an appropriation bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It may be distinguished along the line that it applies geographically to the whole country or that it applies only to a limited portion of the country. Legislation, for example, that applies to the whole State, in the case of State legislation, would be general legislation. If it applied to a local subdivision, it would be special legislation. But it is sufficient for this purpose to say that, so far as I know, it never has been doubted that the creation of an office by legislation was general legislation as distinguished from special legislation. It is not always easy to draw the distinction. It is one of those difficult things where the division, instead of being a line, is a zone. You may be quite certain, when you are outside of the zone on one side, that you have got general legislation and quite certain, when you are outside of the zone on the other, that you have got special legislation. Now, intermediately there are a number of cases which it is sometimes difficult to assign to the appropriate class; but here is a case which by all the authorities falls clearly outside of the zone on the side of general legislation. So it is unnecessary to refine about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he does not think there is a clear distinction between merely adding a clerk in a department and a provision which empowers the President to make an appointment, subject to the confirmation of the Senate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is a very clear practical distinction, and it is quite likely that there is a distinction in the law; but, as it seems to me, it is not necessary to refine upon it, because we have here a case where by the proposed legislation an office is to be created which is to be filled by presidential appointment. Now, if that is not general legislation, I do not know what general legislation is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The ruling of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to put in the RECORD the remarks made before the Appropriations Committee by the Secretary of the Treasury himself in regard to the necessity for having this office created, so that Senators may see that the reason why the committee put it in was because it was just and right and ought to be done.

I therefore ask to have the statement incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ASSISTANT TO THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Secretary McADOO. Gentlemen, there is one other item here which I confess I present with an extreme degree of diffidence, and if it were not practically imperative I would not present it. That is the question I presented here two years ago to the House committee, of an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Senator OVERMAN. You have a letter on that, also?

Secretary McADOO. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Is that an official estimate?

Secretary McADOO. That is my letter, transmitting the official estimate to the President of the Senate.

Senator OVERMAN. You want that to go into the record?

Secretary McADOO. Yes; you can put in the estimate and the letter also if you wish.

(The letter and estimate referred to are as follows:)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 26, 1916.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for the favorable action of Congress an estimate of appropriation for salary of an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the Secretary, with compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum, the same to be available from the date of the approval of the act.

The duties that have been recently imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury through the creation of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Farm Loan Board, the new tariff and internal-revenue legislation, the income tax, and taxes upon inheritances, munitions, etc., and the promotion of increased financial and commercial relations with the several Republics of Central and South America, together with the tremendous growth of the business of the Treasury Department, make it imperative that the Secretary be granted additional assistance, and I can not too strongly urge upon the Congress the granting of this request, inasmuch as the Secretary himself and his three assistants and their respective staffs are driven to the utmost to discharge the duties of their offices.

Respectfully, W. G. McADOO, Secretary.

Secretary McADOO. Not only has the work of the Treasury Department increased tremendously in the last three years, but new duties have been imposed upon the Secretary which are very exacting. For instance, take the Federal reserve act. Under that law the Secretary of the Treasury is chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, being a member of the board ex officio. While the Secretary can not attend every meeting of the board, he must attend meetings frequently, and I do attend just as often as I can. Sometimes those meetings require two hours, and sometimes more, out of the day.

In addition to that, the Federal farm-loan act created the Federal Farm Loan Board as a new bureau in the Treausry Department, which, of course, must be administered under the direction of the Secretary. This law also makes the Secretary of the Treasury a member, ex officio, and chairman of the Farm Loan Board.

That work requires a great deal of time and patience, and as time goes on the Secretary of the Treasury will be obliged to give a great deal of attention to those two organizations. It is literally impossible for me to keep up with all of the work which the Secretary has to do with the present assistance I have. I must have, in order to be fully effective in the work, an assistant who is at my hand to take up the most important parts of the work. For instance, there are a great many matters relating to official correspondence for which I should have a man sitting next to me, intimately familiar with the matters and having full knowledge of all that is going on in the Secretary's office, so that he may relieve the Secretary of a lot of the detail work which he now has to try to do himself. I think that any Secretary of the Treasury will be more effective in the future if he can devote his time and his abilities to the larger affairs of the department. I can not get that relief through any of the assistant secretaries of the Treasury, because each of them, under the organization of the department, has a very large division of the bureaus under him, and he has got to administer those particular bureaus. For instance, we have an assistant secretary in charge of public buildings and miscellaneous offices. He has absolutely no time to devote to any other work.

Then we have an Assistant Secretary in charge of the fiscal bureaus. Under him are the Internal-Revenue Service, the National Banking System of the country, in regard to which the Comptroller of the Currency reports to the Assistant Secretary, and many other important bureaus. He consequently has no time to devote to the matters which immediately concern the Secretary's office.

Then we have another Assistant Secretary who has charge of the Customs Division. His time is fully absorbed in that work.

So the Secretary of the Treasury is constantly hampered, and in fact finds it impossible to meet the demands of the thousand and one details which he now has to consider in the daily work of the office, and which it would take a long time to describe to you. The correspondence of the Secretary's office alone is a prodigious undertaking, and many people resent it—and I think it is not unnatural—if the replies to their letters are not signed by the Secretary himself. They do not think that the matter has received attention unless it gets to the head of the department. So that if the Secretary had only the two new activities which I have mentioned added to his many duties, I should think that the assistant for which I am now asking is imperative.

In addition, during the last two years we have been making, as you know, a very earnest effort in the Treasury Department to improve our commercial and financial relations with South and Central American countries. Out of that grew the first Pan American financial conference of 1915, which was held by authority of Congress, and which created an international high commission composed of nine men from each of the Latin American Republics and the United States, the minister of finance or the Secretary of the Treasury of each country being chairman of each section of the commission. The commission met at Buenos Aires last April and effected an organization by the creation of a central executive council. The delegates at Buenos Aires paid the United States the compliment, as well as the courtesy, of electing the officers of the United States section of the international high commission as the officers of the central executive council. So long as that organization continues, and unless a change should be made, the Secretary of the Treasury will remain at the head of that commission; and as long as the commission keeps its headquarters in the city of Washington, I feel that that work is of the utmost importance to the country at this juncture.

I do not think it is going to be necessary to maintain this as a permanent organization, but certainly at this time and for the next two years it will be of great value to continue it. Diplomacy, as you know, deals more particularly with political questions between governments, and commercial and financial questions are not so much the subject of diplomatic attention and negotiation. Having this direct touch with the ministers of finance of the countries of Latin America through an organization authorized by each country to look after the commercial and financial questions arising between them and this country, we have the means of rather direct communication and of direct action, and as we go along we find that we are establishing relations of the utmost cordiality through these sections and that we are getting many tangible and practical results. In my annual report for 1916 I have referred somewhat copiously to the work that has been done recently, and the commission itself has made a report to the President which has been filed with the Congress. For the time being this work imposes upon the Secretary a very large responsibility and a very large burden, but as I regard that as perhaps of a temporary character I do not urge it as a special reason for the appointment of an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury. I am requesting it on other grounds.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 25, after the words "in all," to strike out "$61,420" and insert "$68,086.67."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I suggest that that amendment is not necessary now, since we struck out the provision for an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. No. I ask that the clerks at the desk be allowed to arrange the totals after the bill is passed. That is usual.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

Mr. OVERMAN. In this case, however, we should disagree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 17, to strike out:

Federal Farm Loan Bureau: For salaries and expenses under the Federal Farm Loan Board created by the act approved July 17, 1916, including the salaries of four members at the rate of $10,000 each per annum, and their actual necessary traveling expenses and such salaries, fees, and expenses as are authorized by said act, including farm-loan registrars, examiners, and such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as the Farm Loan Board may find necessary, $300,000. A detailed statement of expenditures hereunder shall be made to Congress.

And to insert:

Federal Farm Loan Bureau: For four members of the board, at $7,500 each; chief, bond division, $3,000; secretary to the board, $3,000; publicity agent, $2,000; four private secretaries, at $1,800 each; clerks—1 of class 4, 1 $900, 3 at $720 each, 1 $600; clerk and stenographer, $1,200; stenographers—7 at $1,000 each, 4 at $900 each, 3 at $720 each; messenger; and 3 assistant messengers; in all, $67,620.

For salaries and expenses under the Federal Farm Loan Board created by the act approved July 17, 1916, including the actual necessary traveling expenses of the members of the board and such salaries, fees, and expenses as are authorized by said act, including farm-loan registrars, examiners, and such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as the Farm Loan Board may find necessary, $182,380; in all, $250,000. A detailed statement of expenditures hereunder shall be made to Congress.

Estimates in detail for all expenditures under the Federal Farm Loan Bureau for the fiscal year 1919, and annually thereafter, shall be submitted to Congress in the annual Book of Estimates.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this amendment changes existing law and is not estimated for, and pending the decision of that point of order I desire to say to the Senate that this matter comes as a complete surprise to me. It is a matter which I have very much at heart, and I want to——

Mr. OVERMAN. One minute, if the Senator please. Does he mean the whole amendment?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; I mean the whole amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator mean the amendment fixing the salaries of the clerks, and so on, or simply the reduction of the salaries of the members of the board to $7,500 each?

Mr. HOLLIS. The point is, if the Senator will permit me, that I just want to make——

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator has the floor, and I am inquiring of him. Does the Senator make the point as to the whole amendment?

Mr. HOLLIS. The point is that I have not had an opportunity to examine it, and I do not know whether the point of order would lie to the whole amendment or not. I am going to ask the Senator to allow this amendment to be passed over and postponed until to-morrow, so that I can have an opportunity to look it up.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that. Let it be passed over.

Mr. HOLLIS. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the entire amendment be passed over, with the point of order pending, to be taken up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLETCHER. I raise the further point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill. The whole amendment violates that rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that under unanimous consent the amendment is passed over.

Mr. HOLLIS. And that it goes over until to-morrow?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is understood that it goes over until to-morrow.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 6, to insert:

For law books, including their exchange, to be expended under the direction of the Comptroller of the Treasury, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 4, after the word "clerks," to strike out "clerks—13 of class 4, 24 (including 1 transferred from register's office)," and insert "14 (including 1 transferred from register's office) of class 4, 23," and in line 11, after the words "in all," to strike out "$152,910" and insert "$153,110," so as to make the clause read:

Office of Auditor for Navy Department: Auditor, $4,000; chief clerk and chief of division, $2,250; law clerk, $2,000; chief of division, $2,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000; clerks—14 (including 1 transferred from register's office) of class 4, 23 of class 3, 21 of class 2, 25 of class 1, 8 at $1,000 each, 7 at $900 each (including 1 transferred from register's office); helper, $900; messenger; 2 assistant messengers; 3 laborers; in all, $153,110.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 17, after the word "assorter," to insert "(unapportioned)," so as to make the clause read:

Office of Auditor for Interior Department: Auditor, $4,000; chief clerk and chief of division, $2,250; law clerk, $2,000; chief of division, $2,000; clerks—14 of class 4, 17 of class 3, 17 of class 2, 22 of class 1, 12 at $1,000 each, 11 at $900 each; check assorter (unapportioned), $900; 2 messengers; 2 assistant messengers; laborer; in all, $139,430.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to page 48, line 25.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer a committee amendment at this point. It makes no change in the appropriation whatever, but is merely transferring one clerk to the proper place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, line 23, strike out the word "two" where it first occurs and insert in lieu thereof "one"; in the same line strike out "one" and insert in lieu thereof "two"; and in line 25, in the total, strike out "$27,300" and insert "$27,100," so as to read:

Office of Register of the Treasury: Register, $4,000; Assistant Register, $2,500; chief of division, $2,000; clerks—1 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 2 of class 2, 3 of class 1, 3 at $1,000 each, 3 at $900 each; messenger; laborer; in all, $27,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 6, after "$1,500," to insert "private secretary for captain commandant, $1,400," and in line 10, after the words "in all," to strike out "$72,710" and insert "$74,110," so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Coast Guard: Two chiefs of division, at $3,000 each; 2 assistant chiefs of division, at $2,200 each; title and contract clerk, $2,000; law and contract clerk, $1,800, and $200 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent; topographer and hydrographer, $1,800; civil engineer, $2,250; draftsman, $1,500; private secretary for captain commandant, $1,400; clerks—4 of class 4, 9 of class 3, 5 of class 2, 8 of class 1, 7 at $1,000 each, 5 at $900 each; 2 messengers; assistant messenger; laborer; in all, $74,110.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 24, after the word "Chief," to strike out "$4,500" and insert "$4,000"; on page 53, line 1, before the word "clerks," to strike out "$3,500" and insert "$3,000"; and in line 3, after the words "in all," to strike out "$17,120" and insert "$16,120," so as to make the clause read:

Secret Service Division: Chief, $4,000; assistant chief, who shall discharge the duties of chief clerk, $3,000; clerks—1 of class 4, 1 of class 3, 2 of class 2, 1 of class 1, 1 $1,000; assistant messenger; in all, $16,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Collecting internal revenue," on page 59, line 5, after the word "law," to strike out "including per diem not to exceed $4 in lieu of subsistence," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses of 40 revenue agents provided for by law, fees and expenses of gaugers, and salaries and expenses of storekeepers and storekeeper-gaugers, $2,200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for "Collecting the income tax," on page 59, line 20, after the word "districts," to strike out "including not to exceed $4 per diem in lieu of subsistence," so as to read:

Collecting the income tax: For expenses of assessing and collecting the income tax as provided in Title I of an act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, including the employment of agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, and messengers in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, $1,700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 20, page 62.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate for a moment and especially the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that we have reached a point in the bill where they can easily save $332,000 in this appropriation bill. During the existence of the last Bank of the United States the fiscal operations of the Government were carried on through that bank. After the bank suspended and went out of existence as a sequel to that there was established what we call a Subtreasury system, an Independent Treasury system in a number of cities of the country through which the Government carried on its fiscal operations. That system still remains.

Under the act which we passed two years ago establishing the Federal Reserve System we provided for reserve banks. There is no occasion in those cities where we have a Federal reserve bank for the Government to maintain a Subtreasury such as we have now. The Independent or Subtreasury was established for the purpose of having a place where the Government in the large cities could carry on its fiscal operations and for the purpose of distributing the money of the country in the Subtreasuries instead of having it all congested and piled up here in Washington.

There are nine Independent Subtreasuries provided for in the bill. In five of the places we have a Federal reserve bank, and there is no reason under the sun why the Federal Government should not carry on its fiscal operations at those points where we have a Federal reserve bank.

Let me call your attention in detail to this matter. At Boston there is a Federal reserve bank. The bill appropriates $46,570 to maintain a Subtreasury or Independent Treasury at that point. There is no need of that. It is a duplication and nothing else. The Government can carry on all its fiscal operations in the reserve bank at Boston, and there is no occasion for the Independent Treasury or Subtreasury system at Boston.

I come next to Chicago. There is another Independent Treasury. Chicago under the Federal reserve law has a Federal reserve bank, and there is no reason why the Federal Government can not carry on its fiscal operations in that Federal reserve bank. There is no occasion for the maintenance of the Independent or Subtreasury system at that point.

The expense for the Subtreasury at Chicago is $71,420. as appears in the bill.

New York is another place where there is a Subtreasury or Independent Treasury. We have a Federal reserve bank in that city. There is no occasion to maintain an Independent Subtreasury as we did under the old system, and there is no reason under the sun why the Federal Government can not carry on its fiscal operations through the Federal reserve bank at New York. The total cost as appears from the bill of the Subtreasury system at New York is $154,460.

St. Louis is in the same category. We have a Federal reserve bank there.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator move an amendment?

Mr. NELSON. I will move to strike it out.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was going to say that I shall not resist it, and we will let it go into conference. We agreed in the committee that probably this will be done next year, if it is not done this year; but we did not have facts sufficient to guarantee us in striking it out after the opposition made by the Secretary of the Treasury, but if the Senator will introduce an amendment to strike it out I shall not resist it.

Mr. NELSON. I am just explaining where the Government can save $332,000 a year. There is no reason why the Government can not carry on its fiscal operations through its own bank at that city. The cost of the Subtreasury system at St. Louis is $33,860. The same holds good as to San Francisco. We have a Subtreasury system at San Francisco provided for in the bill at a cost of $25,720. We have a Federal reserve bank at San Francisco. Here are five cities—Boston, Chicago, New York, St. Louis, and San Francisco—where we have five Government reserve banks, and there is no reason under the sun why the Government should not carry on its fiscal operations through those banks. There is no necessity for keeping the Independent Treasury system alive in those cities.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator state what are the peculiar functions of the Subtreasuries there? Is there any reason why——

Mr. NELSON. If I recall the date, it seems to me that they were established in the administration of President Van Buren. I am not clear about the date, but they were inaugurated by the Government to relieve a situation which had grown out of the fact that the Bank of the United States was extinguished and we had nothing left except a system of State banks. The Government established Subtreasuries in these cities in order to carry on its fiscal operations and to distribute the money in the country so as not to have it all congested at one central point. That was the purpose and that is what has kept the system alive. There was some justification for it up to the time we created the Federal Reserve System.

Now, under the Federal Reserve System the Federal reserve banks that we have established are Government institutions. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to deposit as he sees fit all the Government funds in those institutions and to check upon them. Such being the case, these reserve banks can perform all the functions that are required, and there is no use to retain the Subtreasury system at those places.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I quite agree with the Senator from Minnesota. The thing I can not understand is how they happened to be retained in the bill. It seems to me——

Mr. NELSON. I can account for that. The bill came from the House in that way. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the total amount at these five places is $332,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is the cost of running the Subtreasuries?

Mr. NELSON. Of running these Subtreasuries, which are utterly needless, utterly useless. There is a third of a million dollars that could be saved as easy as not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, it ought to be done.

Mr. NELSON. Subtreasuries are provided in the bill at four other places for which there may be some justification, because there is no reserve bank in those cities. They are Baltimore, Cincinnati, New Orleans, and Philadelphia; but the total amount for those four Subtreasuries is only $131,390. As I said, there may be some excuse and some justification in those four places where there is no Federal reserve bank to retain the Subtreasuries for the present, but there certainly is no occasion to retain them in the cities where we have a reserve bank.

So if the Senate wants to economize and do no injustice to anybody, but a benefit to the Government, it ought to strike out from the bill Boston, Chicago, New York, St. Louis, and San Francisco, because each of them has a Federal reserve bank, while they might leave in for the present, though I hardly think it is necessary, the other four places, that have no reserve bank. The total amount at those four places is only $131,390, while at the five places that have a reserve bank it is upward of a third of a million dollars.

I call the attention of the committee to this because I believe we ought to persist in a spirit of economy, and there is no occasion to maintain these Independent Treasury systems where we have Federal reserve banks.

Mr. HITCHCOCK and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. I ought to yield first to the Senator from Nebraska, I think.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have elicited from the Senator all I desired. I quite agree with him that that economy should be looked after, and I hope the Senator will propose an amendment.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Arkansas will excuse me, I will yield first to the Senator from Nebraska. I think he asked me first to yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I defer to the member of the committee. I had only a question to put.

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I presume the Senator from Minnesota has observed the fact that the Committee on Appropriations inserted in the bill an amendment which has already been agreed to by the Senate, instructing the Bureau of Efficiency to "investigate the work performed by the Subtreasuries and report to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session what part of the work of the Subtreasuries may be transferred to other offices of the Government or banks of the Federal Reserve System," and so forth.

I presume the Senator from Minnesota is also aware of the fact that this proposition was the subject of debate in the House of Representatives, and the House of Representatives declined to strike out the Subtreasuries.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations considered the advisability of adopting and recommending to the Senate an amendment similar to that now suggested by the Senator from Minnesota, but were unable to gain sufficient information on the subject to determine on the advisability of its adoption, in view of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury recommended the retention in the bill of the Subtreasuries. The Senate committee thought, under those circumstances, it was best to have the matter investigated by the Bureau of Efficiency, and procure full and reliable information with regard to the subject, with a view of action upon the matter the next time the question arises, probably during the next session of Congress.

Mr. NELSON. I apprehend the Bureau of Efficiency could not by any possibility throw any new light on the subject. It is not a matter, if Senators will reflect, that requires any investigation.

What is the occasion of having the Government services duplicated at these points? If we have a Federal reserve bank, why can not the Government carry on its fiscal operations as it has a right to do in those banks, and why should we retain this other system side by side in those places?

Out of extreme caution I have segregated the places. It may be that at the four places—Baltimore, Cincinnati, New Orleans, and Philadelphia—where they have no reserve banks, it would be a proper subject for investigation; but I conceive in the five cities which I have named—Boston, Chicago, New York, St. Louis, and San Francisco—where they have a Federal reserve bank, there is no occasion for maintaining this Independent or Subtreasury system.

I want to say further I express my individual view—I belong to this side of the Chamber. It is up to your side. If you are in favor of economy, as you say you are, if you are in favor of retrenchment, there never was a better opportunity than you have in this bill to cut out in one cut a third of a million dollars, without doing harm to anybody, without injuring the public service in the least, and leaving the public service intact with all the financial equipment that it needs in the cities I have named. In fact, when the bill creating the Federal reserve banks was under consideration it was a serious question at that time whether we ought not to require the Government to carry on all its fiscal operations through the reserve banks; that is, to have the revenues go into the banks and then the Government check against the revenues and in that way keep the money of the country in circulation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator realizes that it is necessary to have legislation upon the subject transferring the functions of the various Subtreasuries to the reserve banks and that it requires some degree of careful consideration?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think it is necessary at all because the Secretary of the Treasury under the Federal reserve law has the right to deposit the Federal funds in the reserve banks, and if you remove entirely the Subtreasury system you have the reserve banks and the Secretary of the Treasury has ample power to deposit all the funds in those banks.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask——

Mr. NELSON. As I said, I will not quarrel with you gentlemen. I have presented the facts in this case to you and shown you where you can economize to the extent of a third of a million dollars. I have shown you the way of grace, and if you do not care to accept it it is up to you; I have done my duty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether it is not true that the Subtreasuries in some cases perform functions that are hardly possible for the reserve banks to perform under existing law?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not sure that I know, but I notice in the press from time to time when gold is imported from abroad in large quantities the banks or bankers who import it deposit the gold in the Subtreasuries. I infer that they do it for the purpose of getting gold certificates. I have the impression that that is not possible under the existing law to be done through the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, that is exactly one of the reasons the Secretary of the Treasury gives here in his report.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a matter that transpired during the last portion of Mr. Cleveland's last administration. Certain bankers of New York, when gold was at a premium, were in the habit of going to the Subtreasury. They would go there with their greenbacks. They would get Treasury notes—what we call greenbacks—and go to the Subtreasury of New York and draw out gold and ship it to Europe. They could go on repeating that operation, and they can repeat it to-day in the Subtreasuries. If there is any gold in the Subtreasury, you or I or any of those New York bankers can go there with the greenbacks and say we want gold and deplete the Subtreasury. That is one of the causes that brought out the stringency Mr. Cleveland had to overcome with his gold alone during the last two years of his administration. They can not carry on the same operation to that extent in the Federal reserve banks. But, as I said, I will not argue with you. If you want to keep these two systems going, if you want this luxury, in God's name, take it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have not any desire to get into a discussion with the Senator from Minnesota, because I am rather in sympathy with the idea of abolishing these Subtreasuries, if possible; but it has occurred to me that there are certain functions which they perform in the large cities that under existing law can not be performed by the Federal reserve banks. I suggested to the Senator that this country during the last two years has been importing hundreds and millions of dollars of gold which under the present practice is deposited with the Subtreasuries and those certificates taken out in its place, and that function can not be performed under existing law by the Federal reserve banks.

Now, as to what the Senator says about the Treasury being depleted, he will recall the fact that that danger has been remedied by a change of law under which greenbacks are impounded or may be impounded in the Treasury so that the endless chain of withdrawing gold from the Treasury may be stopped. That is not a danger in existence now; it has been obviated.

I have not any desire to antagonize the Senator's suggestion of an amendment, but it occurs to me that before we make it we ought to be sure that the Federal reserve banks are in a position to perform all the functions of the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I merely want to read along the line the Senator mentions exactly what is stated in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. He says:

> Since the Federal reserve banks are, as I have already stated, private corporations, just as are the national banks, the duty of providing the necessary storage vaults and of assuming the custody and control of these trust funds could not be imposed upon the Federal reserve banks by legislation. It could only be accomplished by negotiation and agreement, involving, necessarily, compensation for the service performed. Whether or not arrangements could be made with Federal reserve banks, or any private institutions, for the custody of these trust funds upon terms and under conditions satisfactory to the Government, and at a saving in cost over the Subtreasury methods, while at the same time providing all of the conveniences in handling these funds and the same measure of security as now afforded by the Subtreasury system, is a matter upon which I am unable to express an opinion.

He says he has $152,979,000 gold in the Subtreasuries. He adds:

> I desire to repeat, however, my earnest conviction that it would be unwise to commit the custody of these trust funds to any private institution or institutions.

It is a long report. I believe I will have it printed in the RECORD. When this matter was before the Senate committee it was our disposition to take some action in regard to the Subtreasuries. We did not know anything about the necessity for them, and we began to inquire and had this report sent to us. We made inquiries of the Treasury Department as to whether they could not be dispensed with. The Secretary of the Treasury says finally in this report:

> I am of the opinion that it would be inadvisable at this time to abolish all, or any, of the Subtreasuries. It is an important matter and should be considered deliberately. With the test of further experience it may develop that the functions of the Subtreasuries, or some of them, may be transferred to Washington or to some other agency, but action should not be taken hastily or inadvisedly.

Therefore, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has stated, in order to get all the information before us so as to understand the matter thoroughly we have provided in the bill an appropriation for the purpose of investigating the subject so that we can act intelligently upon it at the next session of Congress.

I ask that the report of the Secretary of the Treasury be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 16, 1916.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved May 10, 1916, it is provided that—

"The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to report to Congress at the beginning of its next session which of the Subtreasuries, if any, should be continued after the end of the fiscal year 1917, and if, in his opinion, any should be continued the reasons in full for such continuance; also, if any or all of said Subtreasuries may be discontinued, what legislation will be necessary in order to transfer their duties and functions to some other branch of the public service or to the Federal reserve banks."

In accordance with the above authorization and direction, I have the honor to report as follows:

There are nine Subtreasuries located, respectively, in the cities of Boston, Mass.; New York City, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Baltimore, Md.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Chicago, Ill.; St. Louis, Mo.; New Orleans, La.; and San Francisco, Cal. The Subtreasury system was authorized by the act of August 6, 1846, and subsequent acts amendatory thereof.

The duties and functions of the Subtreasuries may be stated generally as follows:

Issue of gold order certificates on gold deposits.
Acceptance of gold coins for exchange.
Acceptance of standard silver dollars for exchange.
Acceptance of fractional silver for redemption.
Acceptance of minor coins for redemption.
Acceptance of United States notes for redemption.
Acceptance of Treasury notes for redemption.
Acceptance of gold and silver certificates for redemption.
Cancellation (before shipment to Washington) of unfit currency.
Laundering of unfit currency which permits of this process.
Exchange of various kinds of money for other kinds that may be requested.
Remittances from United States depositary banks of their surplus deposits of internal-revenue, customs, money-order, postal, and similar funds.
Deposits of postal-savings funds direct.
Deposits of money-order funds direct and indirect.
Deposits of post-office funds direct and indirect.
Deposits on account of 5 per cent redemption fund.
Deposits of interest on public deposits.
Deposits of funds belonging to disbursing officers.
Funds deposited for transfer to some other point through a payment by a Subtreasury located thereat.
Encashment of checks, warrants, and drafts drawn against the Treasurer of the United States and presented at the Subtreasury for payment.
The payment of United States coupons and interest checks.

In addition to the foregoing the Subtreasuries have the custody of a large part of the reserve and trust funds, consisting of the gold coin and bullion and silver dollars deposited to secure gold and silver certificates and greenbacks.

The receiving of deposits and payment of checks has been assumed to a large extent since the establishment of the Federal Reserve System by the designation of Federal reserve banks as Government depositaries in those Subtreasury cities where Federal reserve banks are located. Federal reserve banks are located in the Subtreasury cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, and San Francisco. New Orleans has a branch of the Federal reserve bank of Atlanta, while neither Baltimore nor Cincinnati has a Federal reserve bank.

It has always been deemed advisable to deposit the gold reserve and trust funds of the Government in several places rather than to concentrate them in one, for reasons of security as well as public convenience.

The Federal reserve act does not expressly, or by implication, contemplate the substitution of the Federal reserve banks for the Subtreasuries, nor would it, in my opinion, be possible, or advisable if possible, to attempt such a substitution. While the general or current fund of the Treasury may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be deposited in the Federal reserve banks, the reserve and trust funds of the Government, viz, gold coin and bullion and silver dollars held in trust by the Government against outstanding gold and silver certificates and greenbacks, are not included in this authorization. The gold coin and bullion held against gold certificates, amounting at present to more than $2,000,000,000, a considerable part of which is deposited in the Subtreasuries, should not, in my opinion, be committed to the custody of any private corporations—and the Federal reserve banks are private corporations—but should be in the physical control of the Government itself. This applies with equal force to the $152,979,025 of gold reserve held against United States notes and Treasury notes of 1890 and the silver dollars held against silver certificates. If, however, it should be deemed advisable to transfer the custody of these trust funds to Federal reserve banks or to any other private corporation or corporations, it would be necessary to make a special deposit of such funds in vaults especially constructed for the purpose and to maintain a Federal guard or some form of adequate Government control over such vaults.

Since the Federal reserve banks are, as I have already stated, private corporations, just as are the national banks, the duty of providing the necessary storage vaults and of assuming the custody and control of these trust funds could not be imposed upon the Federal reserve banks by legislation. It could only be accomplished by negotiation and agreement, involving, necessarily, compensation for the service performed. Whether or not arrangements could be made with Federal reserve banks, or any private institutions, for the custody of these trust funds upon terms and under conditions satisfactory to the Government, and at a saving in cost over the subtreasury methods, while, at the same time, providing all of the conveniences in handling these funds and the same measure of security as now afforded by the subtreasury system, is a matter upon which I am unable to express an opinion. I desire to repeat, however, my earnest conviction that it would be unwise to commit the custody of these trust funds to any private institution or institutions. The custody of these trust funds, their maintenance, direction, control, and administration are distinctly a governmental function and should be exercised only by the Government.

Aside from the custody of the trust funds of the Government, the Subtreasuries perform a highly useful service to the public in making exchanges of money, supplying money and coin where needed, and reducing the cost and expense of shipments of money and coin from a common center. It is necessary to maintain the facilities and conveniences provided by the Subtreasuries in the large centers of business in the country, such as the cities in which the Subtreasuries are now located. Even if these particular functions could be transferred to Federal reserve banks where they exist, the services rendered by the substituted agencies would have to be compensated for. This would involve expenses to the Government, while, at the same time, the facilities provided might not be as thorough and satisfactory as those supplied by the Subtreasuries themselves.

It has been suggested that the Subtreasuries are merely conveniences and not necessities, and that their duties might be performed entirely by the Treasury in Washington. This is in a sense true, but the cost of handling all the business from a common center, in a country so extensive as the United States, might be greater than the expense of the Subtreasury system, whereas the delays and inconveniences which the public would have to suffer might prove a very serious handicap upon business. It could with equal force be argued that internal-revenue offices throughout the United States could be abolished and all of the work done at Washington, and, in like manner, that many of the customs offices throughout the country could be abolished and all of the work done from Washington. It is the duty of the Government to provide adequate facilities to meet the convenience and necessities of the public in all parts of the country, and the problem must be considered as a whole and not merely in detail.

It may be possible to reduce the expense of administration of some, or all, of the Subtreasuries. It has been only one year since the Federal reserve banks were made Government depositaries and fiscal agencies and the current or general funds of the Government in such cities transferred to Federal reserve banks. About that time I appointed an improvement committee (described in my annual report of 1915) to make a careful study of departmental methods in all directions and to report upon the best means of improving the general administration of the Treasury service in its various important branches. The administration of the Subtreasuries is one of the subjects for investigation, and I sincerely hope that within another year it may be found possible to reduce the expense of operating these institutions in some, if not in all, of the cities where they are now located.

The amount of the Government funds in each Subtreasury, the volume of the total transactions annually performed by them, and the cost of maintaining these institutions are set forth in the following table:

Subtreasury.	Government funds held June 30, 1916.	Total transactions, fiscal year 1916.	Expense of maintenance, fiscal year 1916.
Baltimore	$12,573,371.07	$108,215,675.59	$33,749.53
Boston	34,452,695.24	217,020,680.17	52,051.29
Chicago	120,537,589.79	597,365,033.95	84,325.04
Cincinnati	31,388,654.90	105,703,081.30	28,819.14
New Orleans	31,917,751.13	73,990,519.44	27,481.22
New York	329,402,485.45	2,464,715,492.12	187,587.75
Philadelphia	26,183,266.27	473,623,903.18	57,792.76
St. Louis	48,629,847.19	193,370,692.54	37,385.63
San Francisco	99,088,010.01	291,058,033.53	25,812.27
Total	734,173,671.05	4,525,063,111.82	535,004.63

It will be seen that the cost of maintaining these institutions, treating the Subtreasury system as a whole, is only one one-hundredth of 1 per cent, approximately, on the total transactions involved—an insignificant sum compared with business done, the important service performed, and the conveniences afforded to the public. Aside from New York, the cost of maintaining the other eight Subtreasuries is $347,416.88, which is a comparatively small sum to pay for the service and convenience they provide. If these institutions were abolished, the total cost of operating them would not be saved, as a counter expenditure by the office of the Treasurer in Washington, resulting from the increased work that would be thrown upon that office, would be entailed.

I am of the opinion that it would be inadvisable at this time to abolish all, or any, of the Subtreasuries. It is an important matter and should be considered deliberately. With the test of further experience it may develop that the functions of the Subtreasuries, or some of them, may be transferred to Washington, or to some other agency, but action should not be taken hastily or inadvisedly.

I regret exceedingly that my necessary absence from Washington, in connection with the establishment of the Federal farm-loan banks and other public business, made it impossible for me to submit this report to the Congress at an earlier date.

Respectfully, W. G. McADOO, Secretary.

Mr. WEEKS. Is there a motion before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no motion in connection with the matter.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he is going to make a motion?

Mr. NELSON. I have pointed out the path of duty to the majority of the body; I have shown them the true light, and I think I will leave it to them to say whether they will follow the path I have blazed out for them and be as economical as they can well be, if they so desire, under the amendment I have suggested. If they have not sufficient interest to offer amendments themselves, I am sure I will not draw them out of the Democratic slough of despond.

Mr. WEEKS. I will not take the time under those circumstances to discuss this proposition. I will merely say that I think the Senator from Minnesota is probably right in the contention which he has been making. I am not sure about the details in the matter of Subtreasuries and Federal reserve banks, and I am not quite clear in fact in my own mind to say that it can be done without any possible detriment to the service. If there is a provision in the bill, as I understand from the Senator from Arkansas, that this matter shall be investigated and a report made to Congress next December, I think that is the better way to proceed, although I would vote, if the motion were made, to strike out the appropriation for the Subtreasuries and vote for that proposition. I think, however, when the bill goes to conference, the proper Treasury officers should be brought before the conferees and full knowledge obtained from them as to its desirability or what reasons they may have for not taking such action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be continued.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask permission to turn back to page 51, line 6. There is a committee amendment on page 51, line 6, which reads, "Private secretary for captain commandant, $1,400." I make against that amendment the same point of order which was made by the Senator from Washington a few moments ago to the amendment on page 37.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand to what amendment the Senator referred.

Mr. THOMAS. The point to which I referred was made against the amendment on page 37, beginning at line 13, providing for an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury and fixing his salary. The point was made the amendment seeks to incorporate general legislation into an appropriation bill, and the point of order was sustained. I make the same point of order to a similar provision on page 51, line 6.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, of course, this amendment has been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as stated by the Senator from North Carolina has been adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I reserve the right to make a point of order against the amendment when the bill reaches the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Chair was correct in his preceding ruling, we might let everything which is in the bill relative to the fixing of salaries go out.

Mr. THOMAS. I think everything which increases the number of employees ought to go out.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, at the instance of a number of my colleagues and without taking more time than is absolutely necessary, I move to strike from the bill all under the title of "Independent Treasury," pertaining to Boston, Chicago, New York, St. Louis, and San Francisco, in five places. The language is found on pages 63, 64, and 65; and I move to strike out the language relative to Boston.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator make the motion as to all of those places?

Mr. NELSON. No; I leave out four of them.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall not consent to that. If the Senator will let them all go out and if there is a necessity for any of them going out, the matter can go into conference and there be considered. I shall not object to that.

Mr. NELSON. Would the Senator rather I should make the motion as to all of them?

Mr. OVERMAN. I would rather the Senator would make the motion as to all of them, so that if we make an investigation at all, we may investigate as to all of them.

Mr. NELSON. Very well, then, I will move that they all go out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, pending that motion, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. OVERMAN. That suggestion is not in order now under the agreement under which we are proceeding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. The Chair, however, desires to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the fact that we are proceeding by unanimous consent, first, to consider amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I myself made that point of order just now, and I was going to say to the Senator from Minnesota that when he made this motion I wanted him to make it in accordance with that agreement, and that he was proceeding out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the Senator from North Carolina when he made that point.

Mr. NELSON. I was not aware of the situation. If the Senator objects——

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not object, but we are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement, and I was going to suggest that to the Senator when I was called down.

Mr. NELSON. Very well, I will wait.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under those circumstances I shall not insist upon my suggestion. I withdraw the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thought possibly the Senator from New Hampshire would do so. The Chair did not want to control the action of the Senate, but he thought it proper to call the attention of Senators to the fact.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "War Department," on page 71, line 7, before the word "assistants," to strike out "61" and to insert "40," so as to read:

Adjutant General's Office: Chief clerk, $2,500; 10 chiefs of divisions, at $2,000 each; clerks—58 of class 4, 74 of class 3, 116 of class 2, 231 of class 1, 93 at $1,000 each; engineer, $1,400; assistant engineer, $900; 2 firemen; skilled mechanic, $1,000; 11 messengers; 40 assistant messengers; 4 watchmen.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it was at my instance in the committee that that amendment was placed in the bill. I received a letter from a friend on the outside who called attention to the number of assistant messengers in the office of The Adjutant General, the bill, as it came from the other House, providing for 11 messengers and 61 assistant messengers. The statement is made that they did not require any such number of messengers. For the purpose of sending the matter to conference, I moved the amendment which was agreed to by the committee. Since that time I have learned from Adjt. Gen. McCain, one of the most accomplished officers in the Government, as I look upon him, that an injustice has been done to his office by that amendment. I asked Adjt. Gen. McCain to make a written statement as to the matter, and, if Senaors will listen to me, I should like to read it. It is not long.

I will say, before reading the letter, Mr. President, that I was laboring under the impression that The Adjutant General's office, while of great importance, yet did not include enough rooms to require the assistance of such a number of messengers and assistant messengers—61 in all, I believe—but The Adjutant General writes arguing to the contrary. He says:

The Adjutant General's Office occupies approximately 150 rooms in the State, War, and Navy Building, and has branches of its divisions located in four outside buildings, two of which are occupied exclusively by the office, which is charged with their custody, maintenance, and cleaning. The office is also required to clean those portions of the other two outside buildings which it occupies as well as all of its rooms in the State, War, and Navy Building.

Adequate communication by means of messengers must be maintained between the main office and the branches, and internal messenger service must be provided for these branches also. In three of the outside buildings the floor space occupied is large—the Ford's Theater Building and annexes, with three floors; the building at 610 Seventeenth Street NW., with five floors; and a large area in the Army Medical Museum Building.

It will readily be seen that the work of cleaning 150 rooms in one building, and a large number of rooms in other buildings, providing ice water for their occupants (the ice being brought daily from the subbasement of the building), and the messenger work that necessarily is required in an office as large as this fully occupies the time of the present messenger force.

The increase in the Army authorized by recent legislation has added largely to the work of the office, and the demand for communication by messenger with other bureaus of the department has correspondingly increased. In addition to this, there has been transferred to this office the work of distributing practically all the publications of the War Department, work which was heretofore done at the War College.

One of the most effective means by which the work of the office is kept up to date is its five-minute mail messenger service, by means of which cases are carried to every part of the office with the utmost promptness. There are 12 messengers engaged on this mail route, with the necessary number of substitutes.

All of the assistant messengers estimated for are absolutely necessary for the work of the office, and the reduction proposed in the Senate report on the legislative bill, by which there is a reduction of assistant messengers from 61 to 40, would render it impossible for the office to maintain its present state of efficiency.

Mr. President, it was a revelation to me that The Adjutant General's Office occupied 150 rooms in the main building, and also had the Ford's Theater Building at its command, and likewise a building on Seventeenth Street. I confess that after reading that statement by Adjt. Gen. McCain, and having asked him to come and talk with me about the matter, I felt that I had done an injustice in moving the amendment. I now think that we ought to recede from the amendment. That is my personal feeling.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, can the Senator from New Hampshire state the compensation for these messengers and assistant messengers?

Mr. OVERMAN. They receive, respectively, $840 and $720.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am informed that the messengers receive $840 and the assistant messengers $720. It is very low pay.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. In the same paragraph is carried an item for 21 laborers in connection with The Adjutant General's Office. What service do those laborers perform?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know; I did not make any inquiry of The Adjutant General on that point.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to ask the Senator one further question. Has his investigation satisfied him that the amendment should not be agreed to and that the Senate should disagree to the amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the feeling I have after talking with The Adjutant General about the matter. I confess that I knew little about it at the time I offered the amendment in committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator not think the matter had better go to conference?

Mr. GALLINGER. As I was saying, when I offered the amendment in committee I confess I knew but little about it, except from a letter I had received from an outside party, saying that that office was loaded down with unnecessary employees, and he particularly mentioned assistant messengers. When I saw the number which was appropriated for, it struck me that it was very large, and perhaps unnecessarily large.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that we ascertain all about the matter in conference. I am glad the Senator brought the amendment to our attention, and I myself suggested to Gen. McCain that I thought the matter ought to go to conference. We could there better investigate it than we can here. If it is right that the amendment should go out, I think the conferees will agree to let it go out.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment will go out of the bill. It is rather invidious that we should attack that particular department. There is certainly no more ably conducted department than that of The Adjutant General, and it has almost always been so. It is a department that is made up of several others combined. There are some 500 clerks or more, and they are scattered over different parts of the town. To dispense with the messengers would simply put the clerks to doing that messenger service, and there would then be a demand for more clerks.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Wyoming is wrong in suggesting that we have attacked that department. There is no such purpose at all.

Mr. WARREN. I understand there is no such intention on the part of the Senator, but it really amounts to that when we depend on the statements of some one on the outside who wishes us to reduce the employees of any one particular department.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that this gentleman on the outside had had service in the departments of the Government and is a pretty well informed man.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to a further question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate committee amendment now under consideration involves the striking out of the language down to line 12, on page 71.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he has advised himself as to whether that language should go out or whether his amendment should be rejected?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was likewise responsible for that amendment. I moved the amendment for the reason that I had found that that seemed to be the only office where the inhibition could be found that there should be no transfer of the employees from that particular office. It did not apply to the others. I noticed also in my investigation that the Commission on Economy and Efficiency, approved by President Taft, had recommended the change. I was unable to see why that exception should be applied to this particular office. In talking with The Adjutant General I found him very insistent that the law should remain as it is, but I was not fully persuaded that he was correct about it. He intimated that his clerks would be transferred and that his work would be thereby crippled. Of course, if I believed his work was going to be crippled I would not advocate the amendment at all; but it has occurred to me that there is no adequate reason why the exception should be applied simply to one office in the War Department. There may be some good reason why the change should not be made, but it does not appeal to me.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that occurred in this way: During the administration of a former Adjutant General, Gen. Ainsworth, affairs in that office and others had become rather offensive to all parties on account of the frequent transfers and the calling on the offices at times when they might be busiest for a dozen, more or less, clerks for use in some other bureau. The matter was brought before the Military Committee, and from there before the Appropriations Committee, and the effort was made to provide each office or bureau with the proper number of clerks and, in so far as was possible, to break up the objectionable system then prevailing. In this particular office we cut out, as I remember, a very large number of clerks because of that. Gen. Ainsworth reduced the number of clerks materially when he brought together the Record and Pension Office and The Adjutant General's and other offices, each year disposing of a number of clerks for some three or four years. It was for that reason that this amendment was recommended, and the Committee on Appropriations adopted it.

I am not prepared to say whether or not it is necessary now. I am prepared to say, however, that I should prefer to follow the earnest desire of the head of that office, who, I believe, is trying not only to conduct it properly but with the least expense. I should very much like to see both of those amendments disagreed to; but certainly the one as to the reduction in the number of messengers should not remain in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, beyond a question there is a great deal of red tape in that particular office, as well as in all the other offices of the Government. I had thought of reading from the report of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency a paragraph on that point, because, as I said to Gen. McCain frankly this morning, it was more interesting than any novel I have read in recent years; but as we have provided in the bill that the Bureau of Efficiency shall inquire into all these matters connected with the departments I have no disposition to prolong the debate.

Mr. WARREN. The War Department is not the only one which has been excoriated.

Mr. GALLINGER. No, Mr. President; I did not say that it was. I said all departments. I am going to read from the report of the Economy and Efficiency Commission for the information—and I do not know but for the amusement—of the Senate, because it is a most extraordinary showing. Here is what the commission says:

Pvt. Rentz made application to purchase his discharge from the Government, and his superior officer recommended that the discharge be granted. The application came to the War Department, and, according to the report of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency, this is what happened in that case:

OPERATION NO. 1.

Mr. Bevans, distributing clerk (salary, $1,200), took the jacket from the box, removed the papers from the jacket, took off the rubber band holding the papers together, wrote on the record card the time he received the case, and then unfolded Pvt. Rentz's letter and examined it.

OPERATION NO. 2.

Mr. Bevans, noting that it would be necessary to have a report from the rolls division of the status of Pvt. Rentz, placed on the record card a request for such report, with a notation of the time, as follows:

"Rolls division: For report.

"MORTON, T. H."

OPERATION NO. 3.

Mr. Bevans then selected from a file containing jackets numbered according to the rooms with which he has need for communication a jacket containing the number of the room occupied by the rolls division. He placed a rubber band around the correspondence, put it within the jacket, and threw the package in his "out" mail box.

OPERATION NO. 4.

The messenger carried the correspondence to the rolls division and threw it in the "in" box on the desk of Mr. Huckleberry, a reviewing clerk.

OPERATION NO. 5.

Mr. Huckleberry (salary $1,200) examined the papers to determine whether they needed special attention by particular clerks. This paper needed no special treatment, and was thrown by Mr. Huckleberry in a box on his desk containing miscellaneous cases, from which they are taken from time to time by searchers.

OPERATION NO. 6.

Mr. Dimond, searcher (salary $1,200), walked from his desk in room No. 58 to the distributing box in room No. 60 and selected one case from the collection of cases therein for the purpose of making appropriate search.

OPERATION NO. 7.

Mr. Dimond then examined the case to ascertain the nature and extent of the report desired and searched the records to obtain the requisite information. His search involved a consultation of the original contract of enlistment of the enlisted man and the muster roll of his company for May and June, 1912.

OPERATION NO. 8.

Upon conclusion of Mr. Dimond's examination of the enlistment papers and muster roll he returned to his desk and wrote in longhand the following report on the record card:

"E. M. Div.

"Thomas J. Rentz enl. Mch. 1, 1908; and was dischg'd Feb. 28, 1911, by expr. of service, pvt. 102d Co. C. A. C. Char. excellent.

"Reenl. Apr. 26, 1911, and was present June 30, 1912, pvt. Gen'l Serv. Inf. at Atlanta, Ga.

"STAFFORD,

"2.57." "G. C. D."

Mr. Dimond then wrote below the indorsement the time of conclusion, "2.57."

OPERATION NO. 9.

After writing the above indorsement, Mr. Dimond blotted the indorsement, gathered the papers together, placed a rubber band around the same, and walked over to the desk of Mr. Sattes, to whom he delivered the papers for the purpose of review.

OPERATION NO. 10.

Mr. Sattes, reviewing clerk (salary $1,600), examined the papers and report to determine whether the report was adequate to the case and whether it was correctly framed.

OPERATION NO. 11.

Mr. Sattes gathered together the papers after his examination, put a rubber band around them, selected a reversible jacket from his box file, and inclosed the papers in them, throwing the jacket in the "out" box.

OPERATION NO. 12.

The jacket was transmitted by the messenger service to room No. 43 and thrown in the box on desk of T. B. Bevans.

OPERATION NO. 13.

Mr. Bevans examined the papers, wrote on the record card the time, "3.20," he received them, and, noting that the man was in the recruiting service, wrote on the record card the following indorsement, with a notation of the time, "3.25":

"3.20.

"Recruiting division: For remark, Morton.

"3.25.

"F. A."

OPERATION NO. 14.

Mr. Bevans then selected a jacket from his file and placed the papers therein for transmission to the recruiting division.

OPERATION NO. 15.

The messenger service transported the correspondence to the recruiting division and placed it in the box on the desk of Mr. Hughes.

OPERATION NO. 16.

Mr. Hughes, clerk (salary, $2,200), examined the papers and wrote on the record card the following:

"To Col. Kernan, A. G., to ascertain if there is any objection.

"3.35.

"J. D. H."

OPERATION NO. 17.

Mr. Hughes then noted the time of his writing the above indorsement.

OPERATION NO. 18.

Mr. Hughes sent the papers by special messenger to Col. Kernan, the adjutant general in charge of recruiting matters.

OPERATION NO. 19.

Col. Kernan noted in writing his approval on the record card, as follows:

"No objection. "M., A. G."

OPERATION NO. 20.

The card and correspondence were taken back to the recruiting division by special messenger.

OPERATION NO. 21.

Mr. Hughes wrote on the record card the following indorsement, with a notation of the time:

"To E. M. div.

"SHELTON.

"J. D. H.

"4.00.

"4.05."

OPERATION NO. 22.

Carried by the messenger service to the enlisted men's division and placed in mail box of Mr. Bevans.

OPERATION NO. 23.

Mr. Bevans examined the papers, noted on record card time of receipt, and handed them to Mr. Wilson, assistant chief of the division.

OPERATION NO. 24.

Mr. Wilson (salary, $1,800) examined the case to see whether all relevant requirements of laws and regulations governing discharge by purchase had been complied with. His examination showing that the case had met all the requirements, he handed it to Mr. Tillman to prepare a special order.

OPERATION NO. 25.

Mr. Tillman (salary, $1,400) prepared the following draft of an order:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,

"Washington, August —, 1912.

"(Memorandum for ——— ———.)

"Special orders, No. —.

"Par. Private Thomas J. Rentz, general service, Infantry, recruiting station, 3 Carnegie Way, Atlanta, Georgia, will be discharged from the Army by the officer in charge of that station by purchase, under the provisions of General Orders, No. 90, War Department, 1911. (1941619, A. G. O.)

"By order of the Secretary of War:

"———— ————,

"Adjutant General."

OPERATION NO. 26.

After preparing the above draft, Mr. Tillman typed on the record card the following:

"Approved.

"A. G.

"A. G. O., Aug. 6, 1912.

"9.30 F. D. T."

OPERATION NO. 27.

Mr. Tillman then stamped on the record card with a rubber stamp the following:

"Approved draft of order sent to Orders Division ———, 19—.

"S. O. ———, par. ———, ———, 19—."

OPERATION NO. 28.

The draft of the order was then examined by the clerk handling the case, the papers gathered together and personally carried to the desk of the assistant chief of the division for review.

OPERATION NO. 29.

Mr. Wilson examined the papers for typographical errors and accuracy of ruling or statement.

OPERATION NO. 30.

Mr. Wilson placed the papers in the "out" basket on his desk.

OPERATION NO. 31.

Mr. Bevans collected case, with any others which had accumulated in Mr. Wilson's basket, made notation of the class of each case handled for the administrative record, and then indorsed on the record card in each case the time of disposal.

OPERATION NO. 32.

Mr. Bevans handed accumulated mail to the messenger assigned to the division for delivery to Col. Kerr for his signature.

OPERATION NO. 33.

The messenger carried the papers to Col. Kerr for approval.

OPERATION NO. 34.

Col. Kerr signed the draft and also signed his initials on the record card following the word "approved," as shown below:

"Approved.

"J. S. K.

"A. G.

"9.30 F. D. T."

OPERATION NO. 35.

The case was returned by a special messenger to the Enlisted Men's Division and placed on Mr. Bevan's desk.

OPERATION NO. 36.

Mr. Bevans then inserted the time of sending to the Orders Division of the draft, as follows:

"Approved draft of order sent to Orders Division Aug. 6, 1912, 1.15.

"J. B.

"S. O. 184, par. 10, Aug. 6, 1912."

OPERATION NO. 37.

Mr. Bevans examined the papers to see that they were complete, made a tally of the class of case disposed of, and indorsed on the record card the time this operation was concluded.

OPERATION NO. 38.

Mr. Bevans then sent the record card to the Mail and Record Division.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment to say that that sounds very much like the course which a western application for the right to divert water for irrigation purposes has to go through, first in the Interior, then in the Agricultural, and then in the War Department?

Mr. GALLINGER. This is from the report of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency. I am not at all responsible for it. There is one other case here——

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator tell us how long a time that took?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know. There is one other case here that went through 39 operations, and one, I think, that went through 42 operations. The Adjutant General says it does not take much time. He says that the different trips are made by a messenger, or an assistant messenger, and that it does not require a great deal of time. But, Mr. President, of all the red tape that I ever heard of or expect to hear of, that certainly deserves to be placed at the head. The idea that a soldier in the Army asking to purchase his discharge, which he is entitled to have under the law, if his case is a good one, and having the recommendation of his superior officer, on sending it to the War Department, has to go through such a rigmarole as that to secure his discharge surpasses my comprehension; and yet it may not be a very serious matter. As I said a moment ago, however, we have provided in this bill that the Bureau of Efficiency, which is now looking into the question of economy, shall take up all these matters in the departments and make a report to Congress. For that reason, I do not feel like occupying any special time in the discussion, and had thought I would not read this; but it is certainly very interesting, particularly in view of the fact that the commission has suggested in a parallel column that those 39 operations can be reduced to a very few, and the same results can be reached without any detriment to the public service.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think we are apt to go from one extreme to another. If the Senate believes that money is well spent in making that kind of a report, without telling us at the end how long the operation took, and so forth, we might consider what would be the effect if we should try to draw the line on action here, we will say, of a Senator. A Senator going to luncheon rises in his seat—that is No. 1; looks at his colleague, No. 2; looks at the Presiding Officer, No. 3; he leaves the room, No. 4; he draws out a chair in the room below, No. 5; he concludes to sit in it, No. 6; finally he sits in it, No. 7; he puts his hand toward the fork, No. 8; he grasps the fork, No. 9; he starts the food toward his mouth, No. 10; and so on and so forth. A line of comment could be made fully as interesting and just about as valuable, I think, as that quoted by the Senator from New Hampshire. The report read from is the old Taft Efficiency Board report, and not that of the present board.

The statement as to how long it takes to conduct a matter of that kind could be made in fewer words and would possibly do fully as much good. I dislike to think that at any time we have had a Bureau of Efficiency presided over by men who are like many of those sent out West, and of whom I presume my colleague from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] who just spoke knows. They consider their only duty is to find fault; and no matter what they attack, they must fight it in the severest manner instead of taking, following, and recommending a practical business course.

Now, so far as results in The Adjutant General's Office are concerned, I shall challenge any Senator in this body to say that when he writes to The Adjutant General's Office about a soldier's record, or about anything else, he does not receive almost an immediate answer; in fact, generally the same day or in the next morning's mail; and if it is a matter that takes longer time and goes further, he receives of course an early additional reply.

Now, I do not believe that even a length of time is used in a transaction of that kind as it takes perhaps to read these numbers and this specific charge of the various stages.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he can tell the Senate how long it did take to get through these 39 operations in the case of Pvt. Rentz?

Mr. WARREN. I have no information on that point. I have not inquired. I will say to the Senator that if he will go to the telephone he can probably find in three minutes just how long it took; and probably if he would direct a letter there he would certainly find out by morning.

Mr. STONE. I presume I could.

Mr. WARREN. But I do not happen to be advised about it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. If it took the usual time it takes a clerk drawing a salary of only $1,200 to $1,800, I think it would take about 39 days, anyhow, to get through—a day for each operation.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that that case is made up very much as it would be to-day: "Motion 1: Put your hand down. Motion 2: Take the book. Motion 3: Bring it up."

Mr. STONE. Well, I hardly accept the parallel.

Mr. WARREN. It sounds very much like that.

Mr. STONE. I think that is putting it in rather an extreme way. I was wondering, while the Senator from New Hampshire was reading that amusing account, if these are the multiplied and divergent uses to which these messengers are put, and whether there is not a surplus of messengers because of this method of circumlocution and red tape, and if it could not be remedied by a more systematic way of doing business; and I also wondered whether it was for this kind of employment that these overworked men are organizing to compel a material increase in their compensation. But that is another story which will come up later.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I did not ask The Adjutant General the length of time it took to go through that circumlocutory process. He assured me that it did not take a great deal of time, and that it was done by an assistant messenger. But the same commission has a word to say on that point:

> What is there to this case which requires so much detail in clerical procedure? Here is a man enlisted in the Army, who, having an opportunity to take a civil position, applied for discharge by purchase in accordance with the Army Regulations. His superior officer approves the request. Now, what is necessary to pass this case safely through the department? This: (1) An examination of the man's record, as shown by the muster roll; (2) drafting of the order of discharge in final form for signature; (3) submission for initialing to the office in charge of recruiting matters (the man being in that service); (4) transmission to The Adjutant General for signature; (5) dispatch of the communication.

And then the commission says:

> It is safe to say that the present method takes ten times as long as that proposed, and contains no reasonable safeguard which is not provided for by the present method.

Mr. President, I very gladly second every word of commendation which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who was a distinguished soldier—I was not a soldier, either distinguished or otherwise—has said in regard to The Adjutant General. He is a most efficient officer and a most courteous gentleman, and I have no doubt that he is administering the office in a very successful way. But, after all, there is nothing in this world, or very few things in this world, that can not be improved upon; and I feel quite sure that if this commission, which is charged with that duty in an amendment that has been placed on this bill, will take up these matters it will be found that great economies can be made and much money saved to the taxpayers of the country by a careful, thorough, and impartial investigation.

I had no intention of attacking anybody. I do not know that there is any officer in the War Department who has done me as courteous favors as The Adjutant General, and the last thing I should contemplate would be to say anything that would be discreditable to the administration of that office. But, after all, we know that without the man at the head of a department or a bureau being to blame, matters creep in which are perhaps expensive to the Government, and that by a proper investigation they can be changed without doing any harm to the public service.

That is the only feeling I had about the matter. So far as the amendments are concerned, it matters not to me whether they remain in the bill or go out of the bill; my own impression being that under the statement made by The Adjutant General certainly the first amendment reducing his force, pending an investigation by this commission, might well be rejected.

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator a question before he sits down. I think the Senator will agree with me that all of us want to have better service. We are all looking in that direction. We have received rather poor encouragement, I think, because where we have had these efficiency tests—where they have reported, for instance, the Taylor system in the arsenals, and so forth—the Congress has believed that they were incorrect and has failed to profit by them. In fact, I think now, as the legislation stands, that it is against the law to check up a body of operatives with a time limit, or rather a stop watch, as you may say, or to put them onto job work instead of daily labor, and so forth. The Senator is aware of that, is he not—that we, the Congress, have given rather poor encouragement to the departments to bring out this very efficiency that we are now seeking to have reported upon?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am quite aware of the fact that so far as the arsenals and manufacturing concerns of the Government are concerned, Congress has acted adversely upon the efficiency systems recommended; but there were reasons for that which I will not stop to detail. I will say, further, that in the great private manufacturing concerns of the country that system is largely in vogue and is said to be accomplishing great results.

Mr. OVERMAN. The report the Senator read from was not a report of the present Bureau of Efficiency, I think, but what is known as the Taft Bureau.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; not the present one, but the one that was appointed under President Taft.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, without desiring to take up the time of the Senate, because I realize that all possible haste should be made in the passage of these bills, yet I can not permit the opportunity to pass to join in what has already been said to pay tribute of my respect and admiration to Gen. McCain, the present Adjutant General of the Army. I have known Gen. McCain since his boyhood. He was appointed to West Point from my State. He comes of upright, clean-lived, pure-blooded American stock. His record in the academy was brilliant, and in the Army, since his graduation, he has made an extraordinary record. He is a man of the very highest character, brave, honest, patriotic, exceedingly well informed in his chosen profession, and especially well equipped to meet the duties of the place which he now holds. I most heartily agree with what has been said regarding his qualifications, that a more efficient, obliging, prompt, and courteous officer is not to be found in the service of the United States in the city of Washington. Mr. President, it has given me great pleasure to say this much, because Gen. McCain deserves it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, on the question of agreeing to this amendment, we did look with some doubt upon the 66 messengers for one department, and the committee reduced the number to 41. I have investigated the matter somewhat. I think probably we reduced it too many; but I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I think it had better go to conference, and we will do what is right about it. We will give them a hearing on the subject.

It seems to me that 66 is a large number of messengers for the work they are doing. They may be all necessary; I do not know; but that is a large number for one bureau. We will investigate the matter in conference, and I think the committee is inclined to do what is right about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will be kind enough to explain that portion of the committee amendment which commences in line 6, on page 117, and extends to the middle of line 11 on that page?

Mr. OVERMAN. We had this referred to a subcommittee composed of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who took up the matter and investigated the question thoroughly. I will ask the Senator from Utah to explain it.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator state his request again? I did not hear what it was.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I asked the Senator to explain that portion of the amendment which is found on page 117 commencing in line 6, which apparently permits the Postmaster General to reduce the salary of an employee by $100 and take the money and give it to some other employee.

Mr. SMOOT. The law now requires the Postmaster General in making a demotion to reduce the salary of certain clerks $200 and also to increase them a raise of $200. This provision gives him authority to make an increase of $100 or a demotion of $100. In other words, in the department there are a number of clerks classified as clerks of class 2. After working for some time the Postmaster General wants to make certain changes, but to-day he can not increase the salary unless he increases it $200, or he can not demote a man from any position unless he demotes him $200. He finds very often that it will be satisfactory to the clerk but profitable to the Government to increase the salary $100 instead of $200, and in the case a demotion to reduce it $100 instead of $200.

I will say to the Senator it will save the Government many, many thousands of dollars in increased efficiency in the department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is a "consummation devoutly to be wished." Do I understand from the Senator from Utah that the provision of law which is now on the statute books giving the Postmaster General the right to demote $200 or to promote by $200 is in effect repealed by the substitution here made?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; as far as that department is concerned. It comes in this way: There are first-class clerks, second-class clerks, third-class clerks, and fourth-class clerks. The salary of a fourth-class clerk is $1,800 a year; of a third-class clerk, $1,600; of a clerk of class 2, $1,400; and of clerks of class 1, $1,200. They are fixed by statute, and in increases or demotions it means a change of $200. There are many clerks in the Post Office Department whom the Postmaster General thinks should be demoted or promoted, and the amount in either case should not be more than $100. It is a just provision.

Mr. WARREN. Is it the expectation that there will be any demotions where there will not be promotions?

Mr. SMOOT. As the Senator knows, of course it means mostly promotions.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I read this language, there can not be a promotion unless a demotion accompanies it.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it says:

> In making readjustments hereunder, the salary of any clerk in any class may be fixed by the Postmaster General at $100 below the salary fixed by law for such class, and the unused portion of such salary may be used to increase the salary of any clerk in any class by not exceeding $100 above the salary fixed by law for such class.

In other words, if there is a demotion of $100, a hundred dollars can be used in the increase of a salary instead of increasing it to $200 as the statute now provides for an increase of each salary.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It occurs to me, however, that it would be impossible for the Postmaster General to pay a salary $100 larger than that now fixed by law unless he finds the hundred dollars somewhere else by demoting somebody. Otherwise, he can not get the money to pay the increased salary.

Mr. CLARK. That is the way it reads.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true; but even in that case, I want to say to the Senator that many times the Postmaster General finds that there are clerks who can not fill satisfactorily the requirements of the positions which they hold, and if they are demoted $100 instead of $200 then he can take the best clerks within that class and give them the hundred dollars' increase for more efficient work.

I have not the time to-night if the Senator desires an explanation of the whole amendment, but in this connection I wish to say that the Postmaster General has made greater effort than the head of any other department of the Government to regulate and also to economize in the employment of clerks in the Post Office Department here in Washington.

I have figures here to show that; but unless the Senator requires it, I would prefer to do it to-morrow.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am entirely willing that the amendment shall go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask, then, that it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that the whole amendment go over.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I ask, that the whole amendment go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment now under consideration will go over until to-morrow.

The reading of the bill was continued.

C., or elsewhere; the cost of transcribing State, municipal, and other records; temporary rental of quarters outside of the District of Columbia; for supervising special agents, and employment by them of such temporary service as may be necessary in collecting the statistics by law, including $15,000 for collecting tobacco statistics authorized by law in addition to any other fund available therefor: Provided, That the compensation of not to exceed five special agents provided for in this paragraph may be fixed at a rate not to exceed $8 per day, $647,000.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Labor," at the top of page 143, to strike out:

To investigate and report upon matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, $72,120.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that amendment be passed over.

Mr. KENYON. I ask that the amendment be passed over and also the amendment in line 21 on the same page. The two amendments go together.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator in charge of the bill does not object I should like to have the first item on page 142 go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On what page?

Mr. STONE. Page 142; the item relating to immigration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the text of the bill. The amendments on page 143 will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 148, line 3.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to offer a committee amendment at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 147, line 25, strike out "four stenographers, at $1,200 each," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Five stenographers, at $1,200 each, one of whom may be appointed by the Chief Justice and one by each judge without regard to existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. On page 148, line 3, I move to correct the total so as to read "$60,280."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 151, after line 4, to strike out section 7, in the following words:

That to provide, during the fiscal year 1918, for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum less than $1,200, and for increased compensation at the rate of 5 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate not more than $1,800 per annum and not less than $1,200 per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated: Provided, That this section shall only apply to the employees who are appropriated for in this act specifically and under lump sums or whose employment is authorized herein: Provided further, That detailed reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that amendment go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over without objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the bill be laid aside for to-day, and I shall ask the Senate to proceed with its consideration in the morning. I suppose the Senator from Montana desires to get the unfinished business before the Senate, and I ask that the appropriation bill be laid aside.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 408.

Mr. STONE. First, I will move an executive session.

Mr. THOMAS. Very well. Of course, I withdraw the suggestion.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 16, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Jehovah, Author of all that is purest, noblest, best in man, we wait upon Thee with open minds and hearts. May we not stand upon the order of going, but move forward to greater and nobler achievements individually and collectively, that we may fulfill our appointed mission upon the earth and be ready for whatever awaits us in the Great Beyond, after the similitude of the Master who taught us the unbroken continuity of life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill to consolidate our financial system.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill to consolidate our financial system. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Post Office appropriation bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. By a special order the unfinished business is the Post Office appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment to the pneumatic-tube section, on line 15, page 15, of the bill, and on that I ask the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks a separate vote on the pneumatic-tube proposition.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the following amendment:

Add at the end of the bill the following as a new section:
"The Postmaster General may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, when the senders of mail matter so desire, accept for mailing the replies thereto without the prepayment of postage thereon, and collect from the addressees at the time of delivery postage at the regular rates and 50 per cent in addition thereto."

The SPEAKER. Is that the last section in the bill?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands a separate vote on the last section of the bill, the proposition concerning returned mail.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, on that proposition I demand the previous question.

Mr. MOON. The previous question has been ordered on all of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered last Saturday.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENNET. Was the portion of the bill on which a separate vote is asked by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] offered as an amendment to the bill or was that a portion of the bill reported by the committee? My recollection is that it was a portion of the bill reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. It was offered as an amendment by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the separate vote on that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of taking this vote on the pneumatic tubes by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Evidently there is a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is the amendment in favor of using, or continuing to use, the pneumatic tubes for the transmission of mail. Those in favor of the pneumatic tubes will vote "yea," and those opposed will vote "nay."

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the amendment be read.

Mr. MOON. That is not exactly as I understand the amendment. The question is on the increase of appropriation from $449,500 to $1,061,000.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TAGUE: Page 15, line 15, after the word "devices," strike out "$449,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,061,000 for continuance of service now existing in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and Brooklyn."

The SPEAKER. When the roll is called those in favor of that amendment will vote "yea" and those opposed will vote "nay." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 193, nays 153, answered "present" 5, not voting 83, as follows:

At the end of the bill add, as a new section, the following:

"The Postmaster General may, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, when the senders of mail matter so desire, accept for mailing the replies thereto without the prepayment of postage thereon and collect from the addressees at the time of delivery postage at the regular rates and 50 per cent in addition thereto."

Mr. BLACKMON. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands the yeas and nays on that amendment. Those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Fifty-one gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative, not a sufficient number.

Mr. BLACKMON. I demand the other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands the other side. Those who oppose the taking of this vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, 51 is one-fifth. Is not that one-fifth of a quorum?

The SPEAKER. Not on the basis of the last vote. There were 351 Members present.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know; but it is one-fifth of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but the last vote shows 351 men in the House. Those opposed to taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. GARLAND rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that quite a number of gentlemen around here do not understand what the question is now.

The SPEAKER. The question now is whether you will take this vote by yeas and nays. Those who are opposed to taking it by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and six gentlemen have arisen in the negative. Fifty-one is a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. SNYDER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York arise?

Mr. SNYDER. May we have the amendment read again?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill, as a new section, as follows:

"The Postmaster General may, under such rules and regulations that he shall prescribe, when the senders of mail matter so desire, accept for mailing the replies thereto without the prepayment of postage thereon and collect from the addressees at the time of delivery postage at the regular rates and 50 per cent in addition thereto."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of that amendment will answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 75, nays 277, answered "present" 2, not voting 80, as follows:

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote yea.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was in the gallery listening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote under the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment, and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to recommit with instructions that the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDALL moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads with instructions to report it back forthwith with the following amendment: Page 34, line 10, after the word "advertisement" insert "or whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, to be conveyed, or delivered by the mails of the United States, any letter, postal card, circular, pamphlet, newspaper, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement, or solicitation of a sale, of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order——

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that that is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Wisconsin make points of order against the motion to recommit.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear everybody, in reason. The gentleman from California moves the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object to that. The question is——

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman objecting to?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am objecting to the Speaker putting the motion.

The SPEAKER. But the Speaker was not going to put the motion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion for the previous question is not now in order.

The SPEAKER. No; it is not; but it will be after a while.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest that the proposal would not be in order in the consideration of the bill, the amendment being legislative and therefore not in order, and, further, that it is not germane.

The SPEAKER. Why is it not germane?

Mr. SHERLEY. This is a bill making provision for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year, and this is an amendment undertaking to change existing law touching mailable matter. I would like to hear from the other side upon what grounds they claim that it is in order.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky that this being a motion to recommit with instructions, it would not be in order unless the instructions would have been in order had they been offered as an amendment to the bill. I do not think there will be any dispute among the parliamentarians of the House as to that proposition.

What is the bill before the House? It is an appropriation bill making appropriations for the Postal Service of the country, and the bill carries legislation in addition to the appropriation. The bill has a number of sections, 3, 4, 6, 7, that are purely legislative in character, and the able chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, Judge MOON, announced in Committee of the Whole that all of that legislation was new, or features of it were new legislation, and it was subject to a point of order if anyone lodged the point of order against it. It is the practice of this House that where legislation subject to a point of order is allowed to pass on an appropriation bill without the point of order being made against it it is in order to offer additional legislation that is germane. There will be no dispute that the legislation contained in this additional section of this bill is new legislation.

What is that legislation, Mr. Speaker? It is a substantive piece of legislation taking up the question as to what is mailable in the mail of the United States. It takes up certain matters and is not confined to one subject, but takes up a number of them and denies the use of the mail to those articles. For instance, the legislation before the House. The subject matter of the bill denies the use of the mails for carrying lottery or any gift enterprise advertisement, or any scheme or device pertaining to a lottery or any game of chance. It also denies the use of the mails to carry counterfeit money, counterfeit bonds of States, corporations, or municipalities, or any scheme that pertains thereto. The subject matter of the legislation in the bill is that articles of many different kinds shall not be permitted to go through the mails.

What is the amendment in the nature of instructions? It simply adds to the nonmailable matter other matter. It says in addition to the counterfeits, lottery tickets, devices, and so forth; newspapers, postal cards, or letters containing whisky advertisements are also barred from the mails. The Chair will recollect that there are precedents where a bill deals with one particular matter, an amendment adding additional matter is not in order; for instance, the decision that has been often cited that a bill admitting one Territory is not open to an amendment admitting an additional Territory. But a bill admitting two Territories has been held to be open to an amendment admitting a third Territory. It has been held that in a bill authorizing the erection of a public building in one city, an amendment providing for a public building in another city is not in order; but it has been held that in a bill authorizing the construction of public buildings in two or more cities an amendment providing for an additional city was in order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of the legislative part of this bill before the House is denying the use of the mails to sundry articles. The amendment to which the point of order is made simply adds to and provides additional matter to which the mails are denied, and, in my judgment, the amendment is in order, and I do not believe the point of order is good. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there was carried in the Post Office appropriation bill three paragraphs seeking to amend various sections of the Criminal Code, respectively, sections 213, 215, and 217. Section 213 pertains to lotteries, gift enterprises, and similar schemes. In the bill itself, on page 31, we find, "Section 213 of the act of March 4, 1909, the Criminal Code, be and is amended to read as follows."

Now, what is the scope of that paragraph. It is limited to lotteries exclusively, and the Speaker can find nothing in the whole provision of that paragraph that does not relate to lotteries. That is the single subject matter of that paragraph. The next amendment of the Criminal Code is contained in section 7, amending section 215 of the Criminal Code. It is found on page 32 of the bill to which the amendment of the gentleman from California is proposed.

The question before the Speaker is whether it is germane to the provisions of this section. The Speaker must put himself in the situation as the paragraph is in the bill, whether if the Criminal Code was under consideration in the House an amendment of the character of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California is germane to section 215 of the Criminal Code.

What is the scope of section 215 of the Criminal Code? The marginal note, as found in the Statutes at Large, is "Using mails to promote fraud." If the Chair will scan the phraseology in the section, he will find nothing anywhere which will bear any other construction than that it is for the purpose of preventing the use of the mails for the purposes of fraud. Read it closely, and liberally as well, and yet you will find only one purpose running throughout the entire provision of the section, and that is to forbid the mails to accomplish fraud. That was the very purpose of it.

Whoever, having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, or to sell, dispose of, loan, exchange, alter, give away, distribute, supply, or furnish, or procure for unlawful use any counterfeit or spurious coin, bank note, paper money, or any obligation or security of the United States, or of any State, Territory, municipality, company, corporation, or person, or anything represented to be or intimated or held out to be such counterfeit or spurious article, or any scheme or artifice to obtain money by or through correspondence by what is commonly called the "sawdust swindle" or "counterfeit-money fraud," or by dealing or pretending to deal in what is commonly called "green articles," "green coin," "green goods," "bills," "paper goods," "spurious Treasury notes," "United States goods," "green cigars," or any other names or terms intended to be understood as relating to such counterfeit or spurious articles, shall, for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice, or attempting so to do, place, or cause to be placed, any letter, postal card, package, writing, circular, pamphlet, or advertisement, whether addressed to any person residing within or outside of the United States, in any post office or station thereof, or street or other letter box of the United States, or authorized depository for mail matter, to be sent or delivered by the Post Office Establishment of the United States, or shall take or receive any such therefrom, whether mailed within or without the United States, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at the place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, any such letter, postal card, package, writing, circular, pamphlet, or advertisement, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

The Speaker will see that the purpose of that section is limited exclusively to preventing the perpetration of frauds by the use of the mails. The gentleman's amendment is an entirely extraneous affair. It is not seeking to prevent the use of the mail for the purpose of preventing fraud. It seeks to prevent the use of the mail to newspapers and other publications which carry liquor advertisements. I direct the attention of the Speaker further to the fact that section 217 of the Criminal Code, which was carried in the Post Office appropriation bill and which might have been used as a handle on which to hold in order this character of amendment, because it related to forbidding liquor being sent through the mail. That is to be found on page 34 of the bill, but on the point of order made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] was stricken out. That is not before the House for the Speaker to consider. That is section 8 of the bill, and is found on page 34. It carries a slight amendment to the existing section 217, and was, on the motion of the gentleman from California, stricken out on a point of order because it was new legislation. That is not before the Speaker for consideration. The argument might be made, if that were carried in the bill, that it would be a means of carrying an amendment similar to the one now proposed. The Speaker will see that that part of the Criminal Code which forbids the use of the mails in the shipment of intoxicating liquors is contained in section 217 of the Criminal Code, which is not now before the Speaker or the House for consideration. The Speaker can only consider this measure as the bill is reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union by the chairman of that committee.

It has been held by the present Speaker time without number, and by other Speakers, that in a motion to recommit a proposition that is not germane will not be in order. That was the basis of that very general opinion of the Speaker on December 5, 1912, when he reviewed many of the precedents and which was based on decisions of other Speakers. We find that summarized in section 777 of the Manual:

To a bill amending a general law on a specific point, an amendment relating to the terms of the law rather than to those of the bill was offered and ruled not to be germane.

I wish to direct the attention of the Speaker further to this point, that the amendment proposed by the Post Office Committee to the section under consideration does not in any way amplify the general character of the substantive law of the Criminal Code. All that was offered as an amendment by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads reporting the bill to the House, which was adopted, is the following language, which is to be found on page 33 of the bill, lines 10 to 13, being language inserted:

Or to sell, dispose of, loan, distribute, supply or furnish, or obtain for unlawful use any unfair, dishonest, or cheating, gambling device or appliance.

The very amendment that was offered by the committee on the recommendation of the Post Office Department sought to amplify the powers of the department over fraudulent matter. That amendment was germane. It would have been subject to the point of order in the committee, because it changed existing law, but not on the ground of germaneness, because it is of the same general character as the subject under consideration.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. In answer to that part of the gentleman's argument that there was nothing in the criminal statute by way of legislation in the bill——

Mr. STAFFORD. I just stated and read the part that was changed.

Mr. CRISP. I misunderstood the gentleman. I desire to read from the testimony of the solicitor of the Post Office Department, Mr. Lamar——

Mr. STAFFORD. I am acquainted with that. If the gentleman had followed me he would have learned that I called to the attention of the Speaker the identical language which changes existing law and which is as follows, contained in lines 10 to 13 on page 33 of the bill:

Or to sell, dispose of, loan, distribute, supply or furnish, or obtain for unlawful use any unfair, dishonest, or cheating, gambling device or appliance.

I repeat that that is of the same character and general scope as the section itself. It merely amplifies the power to prevent fraudulent devices by sending them through the mails which would carry a fraud to the public.

Mr. Speaker, it is a very simple proposition before the Chair. The Chair is in a position to determine, should this amendment have been presented in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and he was acting as Chairman, whether the amendment would have been germane. That is the one question here. If you are going to read the Criminal Code as it is here section by section, you must come to the conclusion that this section 215 can not under any possible means be broadened to hold subject matter different from that relating to frauds. The compilers recognized this in the marginal note, "Use of mails to promote frauds."

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. RANDALL. If the amendment is adopted, will not the new compilers recognize that also?

Mr. STAFFORD. The compilers will recognize the phraseology as it is in the language involved, not in conjectures as to what might be placed in it in the future by an irrelevant and nongermane amendment. Mr. Speaker, following the thread of thought when interrupted, I desire to say that just because the Post Office appropriation bill carries an amendment to amend the Criminal Code that is no warrant to the Speaker for holding that a motion to recommit opens the door to an amendment of all the Criminal Code. The amendment was not offered by the gentleman in the committee, but that does not, of course, militate against it being considered here. The one question for the Speaker to determine is whether it is germane to the paragraph under consideration. I respectfully contend that if this section was a part of a separate bill under consideration by the House that the amendment of the gentleman from California would not be germane, and not being germane it can not be the basis of a motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the question to be determined by the Speaker is whether the proposed amendment is germane to what was section 7 of the bill as reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. That section purported to exclude from the mails certain designated mail matter and to prohibit and to provide for the issuance of fraud orders against persons engaged in certain designated devices to defraud the public by the use of the mail. First, whoever having devised or intended to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or profiting by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, and so forth, or to sell, dispose of, loan, exchange, alter, or give away counterfeit or spurious notes or coins, bank notes, or to sell, dispose of, loan, distribute, or supply or obtain for unlawful use any dishonest, cheating, or gambling device or appliance, or who deals in "green goods" or any similar matters, is liable to have a fraud order issued so as to prevent the receipt of mail, and a penalty is imposed for violations of the provision. The proposed amendment relates to advertisements of malt or spirituous liquors and is not within the decisions of the House germane to the matters enumerated in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is not always easy to determine just what is or is not germane to any particular provision, but to be germane the matter proposed must be intimately related, or akin, to the pending provision. An amendment purporting to perfect a provision is germane, but matters unrelated, or if related not so intimately connected as to logically follow or be suggested from the contents of the provision, is not germane.

The Speaker himself made a ruling upon a proposed motion to recommit that was somewhat analogous and equally close. A bill prohibiting the importation of goods made in whole or in part from materials which were made in whole or in part or in any manner manipulated by convict or prison labor had proposed to it a motion, or an amendment, to include the products of child labor. The Speaker held that the class of labor mentioned in the bill, or enumerated in the bill, was practically of one class, and child labor was unrelated to prison or convict labor. The frauds enumerated in section 7 of this bill are practically of one class. They deal with "green goods" devices, as they are popularly known. To attempt to cheat or to defraud by selling spurious notes or coins or cheating by gambling devices or counterfeit money are the practices denounced. If the Speaker will read the section, he will notice that the various expressions and terms are intended to cover every conceivable device or scheme to defraud the public by means of "green goods" devices. They are in a class by themselves, and any other proposal to incorporate additional matters to be included must be of a similar class. It is urged that because a number of different definitions of the character of devices that come within this class are employed any amendment incorporating new matters to be excluded would be in order. Mr. Speaker, I can illustrate in a way that will show conclusively that that argument is not sound. I have pending a bill to exclude from the mails papers, pamphlets, or periodicals of an indecent, immoral, or scurrilous character. It would not be germane to this provision, because it is wholly unrelated to and unconnected with the subject matter of the section, which deals with cheating devices, fraud devices through certain definite designated methods, and a proposition to amend such a section by adding papers that were indecent could not possibly be held germane. The pending proposition is to exclude the particular advertisements proposed, advertisements of malt or spirituous liquors, in periodicals or papers or magazines. Such papers or periodicals or magazines containings such advertisements are no more related to this provision and to the character of the devices included within them than would be the bill to which I have referred. It is a mistaken notion that simply because new legislation is incorporated in a bill any other new legislation can be incorporated under the guise of germane amendments. Germane amendments must be so intimately connected with and related to the matter in the bill that the reasonable view would be that such matters would be considered in connection with the bill. I have an elaborate ruling which I had the privilege of making myself, and therefore I consider it very good. [Laughter.]

But my opinion of the ruling is not based so much upon the fact that I made it myself as upon the fact that it has been quoted so many times by other occupants of the chair since it was made. And in that instance, Mr. Speaker, the public-land leasing bill was under consideration. It contained a provision that a certain percentage of the moneys received from the royalties should be paid into and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund under the reclamation act. An amendment was proposed to provide that the money should be paid into a fund for the construction of good roads. Fortunately, notice of the amendment had been given some time in advance, so that I had an opportunity to examine carefully the entire question. The leading precedent upon the question of germaneness is that by Mr. Speaker Carlisle in 1882. In that decision he said:

> When, therefore, it is objected that a proposed amendment is not in order because it is not germane, the meaning of the objection is simply that the proposed amendment is a motion or proposition upon a subject different from that under consideration.

The subject under consideration is the exclusion from the mails of mailable matter containing information or advertisements or of offers to deal in the class of devices known as "green-goods" devices. That is a distinct, well-known, well-understood class of devices for defrauding the public. It stands out distinct and apart from all other schemes to defraud the public. And so any suggestion of an addition to this provision upon a subject outside of that distinctive class of devices is upon a proposition different from, unrelated to, not germane to that particular provision.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that when the provision in the bill is carefully analyzed and we grasp exactly what is contemplated in that amendment, it is easy then to determine the question. If this proposed amendment is intended to include some other method of defrauding the public not enumerated in this paragraph, of a similar character, it unquestionably would be germane. But when it is proposed to add to the paragraph a provision to exclude matter upon a subject wholly unrelated to the matter, disconnected with it, in no way associated with it, then it is clear that the proposed amendment is not germane to the pending section and is subject to the point of order interposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been said, it is not necessary that I should say a great deal further in support of the point of order, but I want to call the attention of the Chair to the position that is taken by the proponent of the motion to recommit, and that is this, broadly speaking, that inasmuch as a particular amendment to the law is made by a section in the bill that itself was subject to a point of order, that point not being made, therefore any other amendment to that section is in order. The mere statement of that proposition, in its bald form, is sufficient to a parliamentarian to condemn it.

Now, what is the fact? The fact is, if this was not an appropriation bill at all and you were undertaking to amend a section in the Penal Code, you could only amend it in order by offering an amendment that was germane to it, and in point of fact that was true as to the amendment carried in the bill.

Now, the reason that the amendment that was reported by the Post Office Committee as a section of the appropriation bill was subject to a point of order was not because it represented an alien matter to the section of the Penal Code being amended, and not because it brought in another subject matter. It does not; but it simply was because it was changing existing law, which, on an appropriation bill, is not permissible. But the proposition that is now presented is not only whether you are legislating on an appropriation bill, but whether the proposition which you present in your motion to commit is germane to the amended provision in the bill. This would not be in order to this section if we had up the Penal Code and did not have up an appropration bill at all, for the very plain reason that it is not in any sense germane to the section to which it is offered.

Everybody knows the rule to the effect that if you are dealing with two subjects it is germane to add an additional subject, but if you are dealing with one class it is not germane to add another class to that particular paragraph or section.

Now, here we are dealing with a particular thing. We hit at that thing in many ways. We are dealing with schemes to defraud, and in order that the language of a penal statute may not be evaded by some new device to defraud we enumerate with particular care the various methods whereby the fraud can be practiced and prohibit them. But the one matter that is in this section, the one matter that the section deals with, is a matter of intent to defraud, and the prohibition is upon various schemes and methods to accomplish that purpose. Now, the proposal of the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] is not to offer a new method of defrauding that shall be prohibited or made penal, not to enlarge the provision so as to embrace different kinds of schemes, but is to make penal the doing of a thing that has no relationship to fraud and which it is not charged is fraudulent, and is not and would not be unlawful unless the amendment proposed is adopted.

Now, to say that you can take a paragraph dealing with a matter of fraud, and simply because it enumerates various methods of perpetrating that fraud which are made illegal, you can open it to amendments to prohibit the mails for any purpose whatever, is to absolutely throw away all the rules that exist in this House to prevent hasty and ill-considered legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the rules that are in the House and that control it are not put there blindly with an idea of interfering with the liberty of Members. They are put there to guarantee to the Members that they shall not be taken by surprise; that they shall not be required to pass upon matters which have not had a chance to be fully considered and debated; and that is the reason why legislation upon an appropriation bill is so vicious as a general proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest from the line of argument that the gentleman is making that he has not been taken by surprise.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that the first I heard of the matter was when he made his motion, and if I have not been taken by surprise it is not the fault of the method that has been employed, because the method that has been employed is one calculated to take the House by surprise, which is further emphasized by the very motion that the gentleman undertook to make following his motion to recommit, a motion for the previous question, where, if it be in order, and his motion for the previous question should prevail, the House would be required to vote upon a proposition that there are not three men in this body now could repeat in substance.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. I think the statement of the gentleman is unjust to the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL].

When this bill was reported the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] demanded the previous question, which cut off all debate, and the gentleman knows that the only effect of demanding the previous question on his motion to recommit was to prevent that motion from being amended.

Mr. SHERLEY. But that is a very important right, one of the most important to the House; and it is a further illustration of just what happens as the result of this kind of legislation, that a single proposition is presented at the instance of one man and the House is then called upon suddenly to pass upon it.

I mention that, Mr. Speaker, not because it is directly in line with the discussion of the point of order, but to emphasize what we are apt to forget here at times, that the making of points of order and the protection of the orderly procedure of this House is an important matter, not to be lightly set aside, even for an object that gentlemen may consider highly desirable. And, I repeat, if you can take a section of a penal statute dealing with one matter of fraud, a section which from beginning to end deals only with frauds—I am familiar with that statute; I had something to do with putting it in its present form when the penal code was adopted—if you can take that section, which simply deals with the matter of defrauding by various devices, and make it the machinery to carry amendments prohibiting any or every thing in connection with the use of the mails, we would be proceeding in an improper and disorderly way. If you can prohibit advertisements in regard to alcoholic liquors, you can prohibit any other sort of advertisement or regulate the very character of mailable matter; you can make in order the most pronounced bill fixing a censorship upon publications. If you can do that, we cease to be a body that observes orderly procedure, and we have made our rules a farce, and any bill that amends a law in any particular becomes a vehicle for making in order any amendment for any purpose whatsoever.

Mr. BENNET rose.

The SPEAKER. Which side is the gentleman on?

Mr. BENNET. On the same side as the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL], although I differ from him in detail.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that when the House inserted these three sections, amending different sections of the Criminal Code, all of which were subject to a point of order——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for a correction?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Section 8, one of the three sections, was stricken out by a point of order made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. BENNET. But the two remain in. The third, as the gentleman from Wisconsin reminds the House, was stricken out on a point of order made by the gentleman from California himself.

And possibly at the threshold of the discussion it would not be entirely inappropriate to say a word or two in relation to the attitude of the gentleman from California, who gave the House a plain intimation last Friday that when this subject came before the House on the passage of the bill he was going to do what he could, because, when asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] whether he was going to attempt to add any prohibition legislation to section 8, he responded by himself making the point of order which struck the section out. I refer the House, without taking time to put it in the RECORD, to the very frank colloquy that took place at that time between the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from California.

Now, as to the matter before the House, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has seen fit to report to the House amendments of two sections of the criminal code which deal with the same subjects as the subject matter of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from California. Clearly, it seems to me, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from California is germane to the bill. I am not sure in my own mind that it is germane to this particular section. I am a good deal in sympathy with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] in that regard, but that is not particularly important, because if the Chair sustains the present point of order, then the Chair has ruled heretofore with undoubted accuracy as to cases where one motion to recommit goes out on a point of order that none has been made and another motion to recommit embracing the same subject matter as a separate section would, it seems to me, be entirely in order, and would be germane to the two sections, because those two sections relate to matters which can be prohibited from the mails.

No citizen has an absolute right to have anything carried in the mails. The Congress can prohibit the transmission of all religious newspapers, for instance, if it sees fit, and it is not necessary that the Congress should take the view that a liquor advertisement is in itself bad. If they want to prohibit it, they can prohibit it. And Congress having seen fit to amend those portions of the Criminal Code, it seems to me clear that if the present motion to recommit is ruled out of order another one embracing the subject matter as a separate section would be in order.

I hope the Chair will not sustain the present point of order.

By leave of the House, I insert the following from Life:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

When I open the pages of Life the first advertisement my eyes rest upon begins, "Are you curious to know what is in this space in the regular edition of Life? We can not tell you here. It's against the law in this State."

I am not curious; I know.

For 16 drab years I was the wife of a drunkard. We are childless. I gave birth to one living child that died in infancy; then came one stillborn; and after that years of suffering. I have heard my husband rave like a madman, drivel like an idiot. I have known hunger, have felt the blow of a drunkard's fury.

Six years ago a change came; he drinks no longer and is to-day a sober man.

You offer a prize of $500 for a criticism of Life. Not for $5,000 would I forego the satisfaction of telling you how I loathe a magazine that will publish a liquor advertisement. Not for $5,000,000 would I go back to the day when your bold headlines, "Are you curious?" would have the power to lure my husband on to drink, drink, drink.

AN ALABAMA WOMAN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule. Some of these things have been talked about and some of these points have been suggested so often and decided so frequently that there is no longer any controversy about them. One of them is that where a section treats of only one subject another can not be added, but when it treats of two or three another may be added. That much has been settled so often, not only by this Speaker but by others, that there is no use in wasting time upon it.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] made a very ingenious and interesting argument, as he always does, but he left out a connecting link. The Chair will read the heading to paragraph 5811 of Hinds' Precedents, Volume V:

Under the later decisions—

He might have said, running back several years—

the principle has been established that an amendment should be germane to the particular paragraph or section to which it is offered.

That is the guiding rule, in addition, of course, to the one that it must be germane. This paragraph in the bill, page 34, line 10, is taken up entirely with the preventing of swindling through the mail, counterfeiting, and swindling devices of every kind. Now the merits of this proposition offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL], the question whether it is a good thing or a bad thing to do, has nothing to do with this point of order. The Chair does not think it is germane to that section, and sustains the point of order against the motion to recommit. The question is——

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, with instructions to report it back forthwith with the following amendment, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDALL moves to recommit to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, with instructions to report the same back forthwith, with the following amendment: Page 34, after line 13, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. —. No letter, postal card, circular, pamphlet, newspaper, or publication of any kind, containing any advertisement or solicitation of a sale of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or who shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of this act, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both. Any person violating this act may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order upon the motion, that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill and that it is not germane to anything contained in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does anybody desire to be heard for it?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I should like to renew the argument I made to the Chair before, with this additional statement, that the legislation engrafted on this bill is an entirety, and that legislation is amending a penal statute by enlarging the matters that are nonmailable by prohibiting certain other things from going through the mail. The subject matter of the legislation is to deny certain articles to the mails. The amendment in question simply provides a new section, dealing with the same subject matter—the denial of the use of the mails to certain articles—and I believe the argument I made before certainly applies to this as a new section, and I do not believe the point of order is good.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia whether he thinks the addition of this matter to the section of the bill would add a new fraud?

Mr. CRISP. If this amendment prevails, it would make it a fraud to deposit in the mails letters, postal cards, or other publications containing liquor advertisements.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that it does not make it a fraud, but a crime.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CRISP. I will answer it the best I can.

The SPEAKER. Is this new legislation?

Mr. CRISP. Undoubtedly.

The SPEAKER. Did not the gentleman, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, rule out section 8 on the point of order made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL]?

Mr. CRISP. I did, because the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, Judge MOON, conceded the point of order, and I did not look further into it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. [Applause.] The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the conference report on the immigration bill (H. R. 10384), and move that the House concur in the conference report; and on that I desire to move the previous question.

Mr. BENNET. The previous question can not be moved until the report is read.

The SPEAKER. Of course not. The clerk will read the report.

The report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1291).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 10384, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 6, 7, and 35.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 36, 37, and 38, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following: "unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties persons who are natives of islands not possessed by the United States adjacent to the Continent of Asia, situate south of the twentieth parallel latitude north, west of the one hundred and sixtieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich, and north of the tenth parallel of latitude south, or who are natives of any country, province, or dependency situate on the Continent of Asia west of the one hundred and tenth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich and east of the fiftieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich and south of the fiftieth parallel of latitude north, except that portion of said territory situate between the fiftieth and the sixty-fourth meridians of longitude east from Greenwich and the twenty-fourth and thirty-eighth parallels of latitude north, and no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

"SEC. 11a. That the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to enter into negotiations, through the Department of State, with countries vessels of which bring aliens to the United States, with a view of detailing inspectors and matrons of the United States Immigration Service for duty on vessels carrying immigrant or emigrant passengers between foreign ports and ports of the United States. When such inspectors and matrons are detailed for said duty they shall remain in that part of the vessel where immigrant passengers are carried; and it shall be their duty to observe such passengers during the voyage and report to the immigration authorities in charge at the port of landing any information of value in determining the admissibility of such passengers that may have become known to them during the voyage."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"All aliens coming to the United States shall be required to state under oath the purposes for which they come, the length of time they intend to remain in the United States, whether or not they intend to abide in the United States permanently and become citizens thereof, and such other items of information regarding themselves as will aid the immigration officials in determining whether they belong to any of the excluded classes enumerated in section 3 hereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "taken up his permanent residence in this country"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN L. BURNETT,
E. A. HAYES,
Managers on the part of the House.
E. D. SMITH,
THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the House bill (H. R. 10384) regulating the immigration of aliens submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect agreed upon and recommended in the conference report:

Amendment No. 1: Amendment No. 1 provides that the act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the general government thereof unless and until it is superseded by an act passed by the Philippine Legislature as authorized in the Philippine government act. The purpose of this, of course, is to avoid any conflict between this act and the recently passed Philippine government act.

Miscellaneous unimportant amendments: Amendments Nos. 2, 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 36, 37, and 38, with respect to all of which it is recommended that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the same, are merely changes perfecting the text by correcting clerical and grammatical errors and errors of punctuation or improving the language without materially changing its effect or bringing different provisions into textual consonance with each other. These, therefore, call for no special comment.

Amendment No. 4: The effect of amendment No. 4, with respect to which it is recommended that the Senate recede, would be to exclude aliens whose intention it is to return to the country whence they come after temporarily engaging in laboring pursuits in the United States and those who, after having been admitted to the United States, return to the country whence they came there to reside or for the purpose of taking part in any war in which such country is involved, unless aliens of the said two descriptions were otherwise qualified for admission and came voluntarily from contiguous foreign territory to seek employment in harvesting crops. Although of apparently but slight practical value because its enforcement would necessitate the accurate ascertainment of the intention of the persons thereby affected, it would not have been difficult for the committee of conference to have agreed to the first part of this amendment (to the second there would seem to be additional obvious objections); but on the attention of the committee being directed to the fact that the entire amendment is in conflict with treaties between the United States and certain foreign countries the recommendation that the Senate recede was determined upon. While amendments Nos. 23 and 28 were inserted by the Senate largely because of the insertion of this amendment, they both seem useful in themselves and, with the change suggested in that numbered 28, unobjectionable.

Amendment No. 5: Concerning the effect of Senate amendment No. 5, with respect to which it is recommended that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the same with amendments, it should be pointed out that two separate and distinct provisions are involved:

(a) The managers on the part of the House agree to so much of this amendment (inserted by the Senate Committee on Immigration) as substitutes for the provision contained in the bill as passed by the House excluding Hindus and persons who can not become eligible for naturalization a provision excluding aliens who are natives of certain islands and mainland territory of Asia defined by longitudinal and latitudinal lines; but with an amendment to the Senate amendment by which a parallel of latitude is selected to form the northern boundary of the continental territory defined, so that Siberia will be excluded therefrom.

(b) So much of this Senate amendment (inserted on the floor of the Senate) as purports to be a nonrepealing clause could not be agreed to in the form in which proposed because it was found, on carefully considering its relation to other parts of the act, that much inconsistency and confusion would be created thereby. It is sufficient to point out that the matter proposed would render the next succeeding provision of the act incorrect in its reference to "the provision next foregoing," and would be in direct conflict with section 38 of the act containing a carefully drawn nonrepealing clause. Therefore the recommendation is made for the insertion, not as a separate provision, but as a part of the provision excluding by geographical lines, of words calculated to accomplish the purpose of the latter part of the Senate amendment has in view.

Amendment No. 6: This amendment is closely related to the preceding one. The conclusion to recommend that the Senate recede therefrom was reached because the difficulty intended to be met thereby is solved by the suggested amendment to amendment No. 5 fixing a northern boundary for the territory geographically defined, taken in conjunction with the exempting provision to which amendment No. 6 relates.

Amendment No. 7: The effect of this amendment, from which it is recommended that the Senate recede, would be to require that aliens who might claim exemption from the operation of the "illiteracy clause" on the ground that they were fleeing from religious persecution should show that the persecution had been such as to deny them the means or opportunity to obtain an education.

Amendments Nos. 8 and 9: With respect to both of these amendments the recommendation is that the House recede from its disagreement. The principal effect of amendment No. 8 and of the latter part of amendment No. 9 is to remove from the law provisions calculated to encourage aliens to declare for ulterior purposes their intention to become citizens of the United States. The first part of amendment No. 9 strikes from the bill a provision of a retaliatory nature, contained therein, when it passed the House authorizing immigration officials to exclude from the United States, whenever any foreign country contiguous thereto excludes certain classes of United States citizens, similar classes of citizens of such contiguous foreign country.

Amendment No. 22: By this amendment the Senate proposed to strike from the measure all of section 11a. When the immigration bill (H. R. 6060) was under consideration in the Sixty-third Congress, the eleventh section thereof was worded substantially the same as section 11a inserted in this measure on the floor of the House. But it was found advisable to change section 11 of that bill to read substantially as section 11 of the present measure reads, because objection had been made by certain foreign countries to the detailing of inspectors and matrons of the United States Immigration Service for duty on vessels sailing under the flags of such foreign countries. The effect of the amendment now proposed to the Senate amendment will be to authorize the Secretary of Labor to negotiate with foreign countries with a view to accomplishing the principal objects of section 11a as passed by the House.

Amendments Nos. 23 and 28: One of the purposes of these amendments was to give effect to amendment No. 4, from which, for reasons hereinbefore stated, it was concluded to recommend that the Senate recede. However, as before stated, that recommendation regarding amendment No. 4 does not destroy the value of those two amendments and requires only a slight change in the latter of them.

Amendment No. 32: The effect of the recommendation that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and agree to the same with the suggested amendment is to permit any alien who, after taking up a permanent residence in this country, sends for his wife or minor child to join him, to have such wife or child, if found on arrival to be afflicted with an easily curable disease, treated in the hospital at the station where examined until cured, or admitted if it is found that admission can occur without danger to other persons.

Amendment No. 35: The recommendation that the Senate recede from this amendment does not involve any change in the meaning of the act. Section 3 provides for the exclusion of aliens convicted or who admit the commission of crimes involving moral turpitude, and also for the exclusion of certain other carefully described classes closely related to the criminal class. But a proviso is attached to said section exempting from exclusion all of those who have been convicted, or who admit the commission, or who teach or advocate the commission of political offenses. The clause to which amendment No. 35 relates makes it a misdemeanor to assist a member of one of the said excluded classes to enter. Of course, no one could be prosecuted for assisting in the entry of one who was within the exempting clause, for such person would have a right to enter.

JOHN L. BURNETT,
E. A. HAYES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the conference report, upon the ground that the conferees have exceeded their authority in connection with the amendment of the Senate numbered 5. Inasmuch as the Chair has on a previous occasion, I regret to say, ruled on this point, I would like to be heard very briefly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BENNET. The Chair is so familiar with the difference in the language that I will not take the time of the House to restate that. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES]——

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Which amendment is this?

Mr. BENNET. The amendment as to Hindus and Japanese.

Mr. GARDNER. What is the number of it?

Mr. BENNET. Amendment numbered 5, on page 7. The gentleman from California, when this matter was before the House on Friday, said that the language inserted by the conferees, which is:

> And no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States—

Was germane to the language stricken from the bill, which had been inserted in the House, which was:

> Hindus and persons who can not become eligible under existing law to become citizens of the United States by naturalization—

And then the exception. It seems to me clear that if the gentleman from California was correct, then the language which was inserted was clearly outside of the powers of the conferees, because the language, as it was in the House provision, is very plain. It says:

> Hindus and persons who can not become eligible under existing law to become citizens of the United States by naturalization—

Shall be excluded. The language inserted by the conferees was:

> And no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman read the language inserted by the Senate?

Mr. BENNET. The Senate language was:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possessions thereof.

Now, the gentleman from California, in his argument, conceded in effect that the language inserted by the conferees was not germane to the Senate language, because he said that the House conferees objected to leaving the possible avenue of immigration open in case the gentleman's amendment should for any reason be annulled, either by agreement of parties, the act of one party, or by lapse of time.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman himself say as to the sameness of these three provisions?

Mr. BENNET. As to the sameness of the three, they are all dissimilar, and I will take up first the Senate language.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman if in the end these three provisions do not amount to the same thing?

Mr. BENNET. They do not, and I think I can demonstrate that to the Chair in about two minutes. The language of the Senate is:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possessions thereof.

I called attention the other day to the fact that that language pertained only to legislation, and has no direct application to the person. Therefore it is dissimilar to the language inserted by the conferees, which was inserted for the express purpose, as the gentleman well said in his argument, of applying directly to the person. So there is no similarity between those two.

The SPEAKER. Is not the whole sum and substance of the three propositions to keep out undesirable classes?

Mr. BENNET. No; because the language inserted by the conferees would keep out a white man born in Europe who never had seen a Chinaman or a Japanese, but who the day prior to this becoming a law had been under existing law excluded from the United States because he was liable to become a public charge.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman suppose that the immigration authorities would make any such ruling as that?

Mr. BENNET. They would if they followed the law; they would have to.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York think that is the reasonable interpretation of the law?

Mr. BENNET. I think it is a reasonable interpretation.

The SPEAKER. Suppose a man came to Ellis Island with the smallpox, and they excluded him because he had the smallpox; that he went back to Europe, got well, and then came back to Ellis Island and wanted to come in. Would this law keep him out?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly, if he was excluded yesterday or the day before the law took effect, because that is what this language says:

No alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

If that is not plain language, I do not know what is. There must be a difference, because if they intended only the other thing—that is, that nothing in this section should repeal any statute—why did they strike the Senate language out? They struck the Senate language out because that only applies to statutes. It provides:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement, in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possession thereof.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] said, and he said truly, that the conferees did not think that went far enough, that it left an opening under which Hindus and Japanese and others could get into the United States. So they struck that out and then put in this wide language:

No alien in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States—

That is, no alien, white, black, red, yellow, brown, or any other color.

Mr. GARDNER. It was the Senate and not the conferees that struck out the Hindu provision, was it not?

Mr. BENNET. I was not talking about the Hindu provision.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. Will not the gentleman admit that another part of the statute provides for the admission of the class to which he refers and to which the Speaker refers?

Mr. BENNET. I think section 19 would provide for that class, but that is one of the grounds of my criticism. Here they are inserting in the bill language diametrically opposed to another portion of the bill. I believe it is a good canon of construction that the court would say the last provision that went into the bill, according to the two Journals, would control.

Mr. HAYES. But the gentleman will admit that the first rule of construction is that the courts shall so construe it as to harmonize all parts of it.

Mr. BENNET. I know that, but where there are sections in the bill that can not be harmonized, the mere existence of a good rule of construction does not confer power on the court to repeal or annul any part of the statute.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Is a man who has recovered from smallpox excluded under the law to-day?

Mr. BENNET. No.

Mr. GARDNER. Does not the conference amendment say that it is only those who are excluded under the law to-day that shall be kept out?

Mr. BENNET. It does not. It says any person now excluded.

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, I will ask the gentleman to read the words and not to paraphrase them.

Mr. BENNET. The words are worse for the gentleman—"No alien now in any way excluded."

Mr. GARDNER. But the gentleman says he is not excluded. A recovered smallpox patient is not excluded to-day and would not be if the law were passed.

Mr. BENNET. The vice of this language is as the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] correctly described it with great accuracy, that it is an amendment which was intended to apply to the persons who had been originally covered by the language of the House bill, and it does cover them with great accuracy and a good deal of intention. Let us take the exact situation. Let us paraphrase the act a little bit, let us imagine that John Smith came along to-day suffering from smallpox—taking the Speaker's illustration—and because he was suffering from smallpox he is necessarily excluded. He becomes actually an alien "now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States." Then to-day we pass this conference report, and let us make the violent assumption that the President should sign the bill; or, at any rate, that the bill should become a law. When John Smith recovered from smallpox he comes back, a year from now, as he might normally do without this provision, and he starts to come in. They would say to him, "Have you ever tried to come here before?" "Yes." "When?" "On the 16th of January, 1917." "What happened to you?" "I had the smallpox, and I was excluded." And then they would say, "Well, on the 16th of January the act of February 20, 1907, was in force, and after that time the act of January or February, 1917, superseded it, and that act contains a provision that any person at the time of the signing of the act—that is now, because the word 'now' speaks either as to the date of the signing of the act or when it took effect, and both would be subsequent to the 16th of January, 1917. Any person who on the 16th day of January, 1917, any alien who was in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States, can not be admitted into the United States," and therefore they would send John Smith back.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] asks, Is there not another portion of the bill that takes care of this? That is a confession that this part of the bill absolutely upholds the argument I am making, and that if this introduces an entirely new class of excluded people, to wit, persons other than Hindus and Japanese who are excluded because of liability to become a public charge or because of disease or anything of that sort, and who might otherwise be admitted at the end of the year and, therefore, the conferees have introduced new matter and have exceeded their authority.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Is a recovered smallpox patient forbidden from coming now under the law?

Mr. BENNET. Not if he stays out for a year.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Then, how would it be possible for this law to exclude him if it only applies to those who are excluded now?

Mr. BENNET. Because in the case of specific individuals, the way the law is drawn he would be excluded. I believe they could take these words and with very slight change obviate the defect, but they have not, and we take the bill as it is and the defect of this statute is that with malice aforethought, as one might say, they have put in a provision which is intended to apply to individuals who are at present excluded from the United States of America for any reason, and they so say.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not classes and not individuals that it is intended to exclude?

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no. That is the vice of it. No alien, no John Smith, no Paul Jones who now in any way—by any statute, vi et armis any way—is excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. Everyone knows what the Congress was trying to do. There is no need for remarks in respect to that. Here is what happened: The House puts in one provision and the Senate is very fond of changing the language of House bills. There can be no question about that proposition. So they put the same idea into the bill in different language, varying a little bit, so that the Senate may have an amendment. In the case of one of these tariff bills that comes back here with six or seven or eight hundred amendments, nine-tenths of them do not amount to a bawbee. They just change a word here and there. The Senate fixed this amendment, and then the conferees got together, and the conferees of the Senate and the conferees of the House are in favor of doing precisely the same thing, but pride of opinion keeps the House conferees from agreeing to the Senate amendment, and then the conferees draw it up, changing the verbiage a little, so as to arrive at precisely the same idea, and all three of these propositions mean the same thing. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for three minutes?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the motion for the previous question, but before doing so I desire to yield to the gentleman from New York for three minutes, and to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] for 10 minutes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I have fought the literacy test for 12 years, but with this amendment in the bill, bad as the literacy test is, it is a mere incident. I am one of the men who wrote into that bill of 1907 the provision by which we peaceably arranged matters so that two nations should be accommodated, Japan and the United States of America. We did not particularly want the Japanese to come, and the Japanese Government did not want their people to come, but they are a proud people, and they said, "We must retain in our own hands the power of keeping our own people out of your country," and we arranged it, and for nine long years they have kept the faith. I said when that Hindu provision went through this House that it would never go through the Senate. Gentlemen laughed at me. The Japanese Government protested to our Government in no uncertain terms, and the provision went out of the bill. Now, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] says, and the Chair has ruled, that the language, "and no alien in any way prevented from entering the United States shall be permitted to enter the United States" is synonymous with the language stricken out of the House bill. All right. The House will pass the conference report with that in, but it will never become the law of the land, because the executive departments, and I am not in close touch with the executive departments, but I have confidence that the President of the United States and the Department of State, knowing what they do about our condition, about conditions on the Pacific coast, about Japan, will never let that bill become the law of the United States and take the chances——

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I have only three minutes, and I can not yield. Take the chances of their just wrath, because it would be the just wrath of a people that have kept their word with us for nine years by saying to them, "Although you have kept your word with us, and have shown that you are a faith-keeping nation, notwithstanding we will put you under bonds," and I say frankly to the membership of this House now, before it is too late, that you can not put the Japanese people, that brave, militant, and aggressive people, under bonds where they are in the right.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many years I have supported the literacy test. I can only say I have supported it as long as I have known about it and as long as it has been considered an active legislative proposition in this House. I believe as firmly as I believe anything that this legislation is in the interest of the country, and that some such legislation must be enacted in order that we may preserve the Republic of the United States. [Applause.] I mean to preserve it as it was and as we would like to have it.

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I made some notes for this brief address. Since then I ran across a piece of news printed in a Washington paper, the Washington Post, and I will read part of it and print the balance in my remarks:

Disclosure that Japan is insisting on a "Monroe doctrine" for China, so far as Chinese financial affairs are concerned, was made here yesterday in discussion of pending plans for the financing of Chinese industries by American and Japanese capital.

This subject is under consideration by the financiers of interest in the United States and Japan, but strong intimation is given in Japanese circles that if American bankers decline to recognize the Japanese financial "Monroe doctrine" the Japanese Government will take up the question with the Government in this country. The basis for Japan's adoption of this policy in China was explained in the phrase, "The political stability of China is essential to Japan."

It is explained that Japan can not permit American financiers to foreclose on a Chinese railroad for which they might have provided the capital and which defaulted on its interest charges. Nor would Japan be willing for Americans to take as security for loans any taxes of any nature, as this might involve the taking over of control of some customs stations and the sequestration of receipts, which would be entirely unsatisfactory to Japan.

The United States, it is explained, hardly would tolerate Japanese control of customs in any country on the American Continent, or in Santo Domingo or Cuba; conversely, Japan does not purpose that the United States shall exercise any such power in China.

That, Mr. Speaker, bears on what I have to say so directly that although I ran across it after I had prepared the notes for this brief address I have taken the liberty of reading it to the House.

The adjustment of the difference between the two Houses on what has been called the Japanese clause of this bill is about the best that could have been reached under the circumstances. No reasonable objection can be urged against it. It is not to be expected that the conferees could do anything that would quite suit the Japanophobe, or meet the full approval of that class of our fellow citizens who believe that this country ought to be the human dumping ground of the universe. But it is a reasonable, if temporary, settlement of the difficulty, and we owe the conferees a debt of gratitude for their skillful work.

Yet, all this sort of thing is patchwork and a makeshift. Some day we must frankly face this question of oriental immigration and try to find a solution. The sooner we undertake in a perfectly candid way its courteous and serious consideration the better it will be for all. There is a just way of solving its perplexities, and no other sort of settlement will do—no other will last. That task should be allotted to men who can understand the situation, and they should also be men who will work in the spirit of the Golden Rule, for which my friend from New York [Mr. BENNET] has just pleaded.

We already have such a mixture of peoples in the United States that many of us believe the situation is full of danger. That is the feeling behind this legislation, and it is a feeling that, sooner or later, is sure to express itself in law.

We can not add an indefinite number of millions of people of alien races without vastly increasing that danger. In my opinion, republics can not thrive with a heterogeneous population, and we want our Republic to live. Neither Japan nor China can have any just quarrel with us for that position, for we accord them the same privilege of invoking the law of self-defense.

My reading convinces me that in the comparatively near future we will have to give attention, not to the Chinese question alone, not to the Japanese question alone, but to the oriental question of immigration, and probably consider it with China and Japan in association. That may seem unlikely now, but when one goes beneath the surface in the study of this particular race problem it begins to appear more reasonable.

While still remembering that in recent times they have been at war, and still have their quarrels, I think I can see many signs that China and Japan are coming together on some questions. At the moment this coming together of the two great countries of Asia may not be exactly to the taste of China, or of her seeking, but it is a fact, none the less. Why should not that be the case? Ethnologically they are of the same general family, and geographically they are neighbors. The control of either by any power of Europe or America would be distasteful to the other. Indeed it will not be tolerated when there is sufficient physical force to prevent it. "Asia for the Asiatics" is an answering cry to our "America for the Americans."

Japan has been nominally at war for two years, but has not been so occupied with her fighting that she has not been diligent in her business. She has prospered amazingly. Her merchants and manufacturers have made a great deal of money. They have actually made Japan a creditor nation and have invested a hundred million dollars in the war loan of her richest ally. That is an important fact that has a bearing on international politics and may concern us more than the casual observer would believe.

Japan has an inadequate supply of certain essential minerals of which China has an abundance. She must perish for lack of them or supply herself from China, either by honest and fair trade, conducted on an amicable basis, or otherwise. Naturally she would be disturbed if these minerals were to pass under the control of citizens of any western country.

Is that an unreasonable position? How would we feel under such circumstances? We all remember the indignation in some quarters and the alarm in others when just a few years ago it was reported that Japanese had acquired fishing rights of doubtful commercial value on the Pacific coast of Mexico in a bay of no great importance surrounded by an arid waste in a region of desolation.

The oriental is beginning to ask what moral right we have to say they shall not colonize in the Western Hemisphere while we exercise political control over a part of Asia.

Such questions as these, if not honestly and courageously met and adjusted in a spirit of perfect fairness, may lead to trouble. Patchwork treaties and agreements are not the statesmanlike way of dealing with them. They are so important that they deserve a thoroughgoing study, and that is why I hope to see a carefully selected body of first-rate men allotted the task of finding their solution. The authorization and naming of such a committee should not be delayed. Let us, then, in time of peace prepare for peace by dealing justly and fairly with other countries.

We mean to keep from our people the dangers of too much alien immigration, but we should not forget that God permits His sun to shine on the other side of the world also, and that the oriental is entitled to his place in a sun that shines on his own continent, and whenever any part of it is occupied by people of the western country it is done to the exclusion of so many Asiatics. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words in view of the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET]. I want to say that the language inserted by the conferees and no language in the bill makes any reference to the Japanese Nation or to Japanese immigration. The bill leaves that immigration to be handled just as it is handled now by the agreement between this country and Japan.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. HAYES. I will.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Is not that agreement between this country and Japan a tacit or gentleman's agreement, and not a written agreement?

Mr. HAYES. It is a written agreement, but it has not the dignity of a treaty. The agreement is in writing. I will admit that while it is true it is left that way it is not entirely pleasing to the people of the Pacific coast. The people of the Pacific coast like the language of the House bill very much better and the only reason why it is changed is because we were advised that the Japanese people thought that that language was intended to affect them only; and therefore the conferees put in a provision which is very general in its nature and does not affect the Japanese agreement at all, leaving it in operation just as it is now. Now, the reason why the Pacific coast would like to have some strong section in this statute is, as is well known, because they are opposed to any large incursion of orientals of any kind into this country; but, yielding to the desire of other sections of the country and especially to the executive officers of the United States, the provision inserted in the bill has been incorporated in it in order that no nation may have any just cause for offense.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAYES. I do.

Mr. FESS. Is there anything in the bill, as it is now written, that the gentleman has any doubt about controvening any existing treaty between us and any nation?

Mr. HAYES. Not any at all. The bill was very carefully gone over with the office of the Secretary of State to see that nothing in the bill should controvene any treaty or agreement with any nation, and I believe I may state that we are all satisfied that no such treaty or agreement will be affected at all by this bill.

So far as the Japanese keeping faith is concerned, I have no doubt myself that they intend to keep the agreement with us to keep their laboring people out of this country, and yet our people have complained latterly that many laborers have been allowed to come into this country under conditions that we think are not covered by that agreement.

But I have no doubt that when this matter is called to the attention of the Japanese authorities they will see that this cause for criticism on our part, if there be cause, is removed. I hope it will be so. I, for one, desire no misunderstanding and no friction of any kind with the Japanese people or anybody else, and I believe the conferees have gone as far as they could in justice to themselves and the people of the United States in order to avoid such friction. I desire to assure the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] that his fears are entirely groundless, in my judgment.

I repeat what I have before stated on this floor, that the people of the Pacific coast are not in any way unfriendly to the Japanese nation or its people. They admire their courage and industry. But they are an alien race to us, and we believe that it will be best for both nations that there be no large immigration of the people of one of them into the territory of the other. We want the freest possible friendly and commercial intercourse with them, but we can not consent, any more than they would consent, under like circumstances, that their laborers may come to the Pacific coast in large numbers and by their fierce competition drive our own laborers across the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the House bill and the provisions in it, in addition to excluding those who can not become citizens of the United States by naturalization, directly excluded by name Hindus, which was much desired in the West from every standpoint, and ought to be the law. Those who can not become citizens of the United States are still excluded in this bill by a different method. Some two years ago my purpose was to bring about general exclusion irrespective of the gentlemen's agreement. There was some discussion, and some thought it did not apply, but I find to-day that the Senate of the United States and the conferees of the Senate and the House have adopted and placed in the bill a method of exclusion by territory, by longitudinal and latitudinal lines, instead of by specific designation as to country, with the exception of the territory of Japan and its adjacent islands, which is provided for in the conference report by virtue of the language:

> And no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be permitted to enter the United States.

In other words, as long as the treaty is in existence, as long as the gentlemen's agreement is in existence, those in the territory not provided in the conference report are permitted to enter. But so soon as that treaty should be set aside, by either party, or the gentlemen's agreement on either side should have been set aside, then the provisions of the bill would apply, and all within that territory would be excluded, including the Japanese, Chinese, and Hindus.

There has been some statement here in the East to the effect that the gentlemen's agreement has been stretched to some extent. I use the word "stretched" to make it as mild as I can. There have been a great many Japanese coming to the western coast, as I am advised, that do not belong there under the gentlemen's agreement. Furthermore, there have been those that are known as "picture brides" coming to the country, notwithstanding the gentlemen's agreement, that ought to exclude them, but we believe that under this law, eventually, with the action of the State Department, they will be in the future.

This bill is a step in the right direction, although it is not strong enough. It is not the real attitude of the American Congress upon the exclusion of Asiatic labor as it ought to be. We are going to meet the question some time face to face, and we ought to meet it fairly and squarely, and to say to the people of the world that this country has a right to determine who shall enter its portals, not those whom we know will bring about a racial question, one that can never be settled and ought not to be continued by the Congress, and ought not to be permitted upon a part of our territory—a question that is bound to increase and bound to get worse from time to time.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House in this connection to how our friends across the water view the situation, as published in the Washington Post here on Wednesday, December 20, 1916. The following is supposed to come from Tokyo:

[From the Washington Post, Wednesday, Dec. 20, 1916.]

SEES UNITED STATES-JAPAN CRISIS.

[By Dr. Suehiro, professor in the Kyoto Imperial University.]

TOKYO, December 19.

We admit that the United States has not the slightest cause to quarrel with Japan, but Japan has very good reason to quarrel with the United States.

Every day the American movement against the Japanese immigration on the Pacific coast is becoming more and more critical, and sooner or later Japan will find herself no more able to submit to the American arrogance with humility.

Very few people, and not one American, will believe me if I state that the Japanese in the United States are being treated like cats and curs; nevertheless, I am telling the truth.

Thus we can never hope to secure the respect of China until we first command the respect of the United States. We will never be able to do this unless we first obtain equal rights and treatment with other civilized nations of the world in the United States of America.

To me the very mention of the so-called friendship between Japan and America is a cruel joke, so long as our nationals in America are not allowed to live under the same conditions that are freely offered to other Europeans. There are three major issues between the two nations of the Pacific, and unless these three outstanding issues are settled, and settled justly, we hardly expect peace.

The first issue is that the American Government is not willing to recognize or admit our conquest of the South Sea Islands from Germany.

The second is that the American Government persists in interfering with Japan's policy of peaceful progress in China.

The third issue is the increasing economic rivalry between Japan and America and the consequent increase of armaments by the United States.

I maintain that Japan will never permit America to interfere with our plans of economic expansion in China. Japan will never permit America to meddle there. Unless America recognizes our supremacy in the Far East and radically changes her anti-Japanese policy within her borders there will never be a real peace between the two countries.

Also as published in the San Francisco Chronicle-Post of date December 18, 1916:

JAPAN LEADER WARNS UNITED STATES ON IMMIGRATION.

["Japan will never permit America to interfere with our (Japan's) plans of economic expansion in China. * * * Sooner or later Japan will find herself no more able to submit to American arrogance with humility."—Dr. Suehiro, professor of Kyoto Imperial University.]

[From Tokyo to-day, through its exclusive news sources, the International News Service obtained the following highly significant statement from Dr. Suehiro, professor in the Kyoto Imperial University. Dr. Suehiro brings an entirely new angle to bear on the peace situation. He opens the issue of whether Japan will be allowed to keep the South Sea Islands, which she captured early in the war, when peace is declared:]

"TOKYO, December 19.

"We admit that the United States have not the slightest cause to quarrel with Japan, but Japan has very good reason to quarrel with the United States.

"Every day the American movement against the Japanese immigration in the Pacific coast is becoming more and more critical, and sooner or later Japan will find herself no more able to submit to the American arrogance with humility.

Unless America recognizes our supremacy in the Far East and radically changes her anti-Japanese policy within her border there never will be a real peace between the two countries."

That is the attitude of those in high authority, as published not only in this paper but in others, to the effect that they are not going to submit to what they consider American arrogance with humility. We, on the other hand, with a country strong in resources, in wealth, and in patriotism, knowing that the subject is one that is bound to bring humility upon this country if permitted, allow legislation to pass along, glossing it over, making it smooth, so that it may be swallowed without naming anyone, and at the same time permit those to come to our country who from every standpoint—while we are not criticizing them as a nation, their ability, or their strength as a nation, or criticizing their ability—can not assimilate with our people; and the queston can be settled no easier than could the question be settled in the South. We are only taking another ground that it will make it stronger than that, and we ought to make our laws sufficiently strong so as to prohibit and exclude all Asiatic laborers now, so that there will be no question in the future. The California alien-land law referred to in these articles is in full, as follows:

CHAPTER 113.

An act relating to the rights, powers, and disabilities of aliens and of certain companies, associations, and corporations with respect to property in this State, providing for escheats in certain cases, prescribing the procedure therein, and repealing all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict herewith.

[Approved May 19, 1913. In effect Aug. 10, 1913.]

The people of the State of California do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. All aliens eligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States may acquire, possess, enjoy, transmit, and inherit real property, or any interest therein, in this State, in the same manner and to the same extent as citizens of the United States, except as otherwise provided by the laws of this State.

SEC. 2. All aliens other than those mentioned in section 1 of this act may acquire, possess, enjoy and transfer real property, or any interest therein, in this State, in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the Government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject, and not otherwise, and may in addition thereto lease lands in this State for agricultural purposes for a term not exceeding three years.

SEC. 3. Any company, association, or corporation organized under the laws of this or any other State or Nation of which a majority of the members are aliens other than those specified in section 1 of this act, or in which a majority of the issued capital stock is owned by such aliens, may acquire, possess, enjoy, and convey real property, or any interest therein, in this State, in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the Government of the United States and the nation or country of which such members or stockholders are citizens or subjects, and not otherwise, and may in addition thereto lease lands in this State for agricultural purposes for a term not exceeding three years.

SEC. 4. Whenever it appears to the court in any probate proceeding that by reason of the provisions of this act any heir or devisee can not take real property in this State which but for said provisions said heir or devisee would take as such, the court, instead of ordering a distribution of such real property to such heir or devisee, shall order a sale of said real property to be made in the manner provided by law for probate sales of real property, and the proceeds of such sale shall be distributed to such heir or devisee in lieu of such real property.

SEC. 5. Any real property hereafter acquired in fee in violation of the provisions of this act by any alien mentioned in section 2 of this act, or by any company, association, or corporation mentioned in section 3 of this act, shall escheat to and become and remain the property of the State of California. The attorney general shall institute proceedings to have the escheat of such real property adjudged and enforced in the manner provided by section 474 of the Political Code and title 8, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the entry of final judgment in such proceedings the title to such real property shall pass to the State of California. The provisions of this section and of sections 2 and 3 of this act shall not apply to any real property hereafter acquired in the enforcement or in satisfaction of any lien now existing upon or interest in such property so long as such real property so acquired shall remain the property of the alien company, association, or corporation acquiring the same in such manner.

SEC. 6. Any leasehold or other interest in real property less than the fee hereafter acquired in violation of the provisions of this act by any alien mentioned in section 2 of this act, or by any company, association, or corporation mentioned in section 3 of this act, shall escheat to the State of California. The attorney general shall institute proceedings to have such escheat adjudged and enforced as provided in section 5 of this act. In such proceedings the court shall determine and adjudge the value of such leasehold or other interest in such real property, and enter judgment for the State for the amount thereof together with costs. Thereupon the court shall order a sale of the real property covered by such leasehold or other interest in the manner provided by section 1271 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Out of the proceeds arising from such sale the amount of the judgment rendered for the State shall be paid into the State treasury and the balance shall be deposited with and distributed by the court in accordance with the interest of the parties therein.

SEC. 7. Nothing in this act shall be construed as a limitation upon the power of the State to enact laws with respect to the acquisition, holding, or disposal by aliens of real property in this State.

SEC. 8. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

(Statutes and amendments to the code, California, 1913, p. 206–208.)

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have the right to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, we had a controversy in the House the other day about revising remarks, and I would like to ask the gentleman what he means by asking unanimous consent to revise his remarks?

Mr. RAKER. I mean that if I have made any grammatical mistake that I may correct it, and I further mean that I may put in my remarks some data.

Mr. MANN. That is the extension.

Mr. RAKER. The extension; yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Any gentleman has the right to correct grammatical errors.

Mr. RAKER. I want both.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the extension, but I do not believe any gentleman ought to be permitted on the floor to get into the habit of making remarks, and having them replied to, and then, under authority to revise, change what he said.

Mr. RAKER. That does not apply here.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether it would or not.

Mr. RAKER. I do not change what I say.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7561. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of United States prisons and for the imprisonment of United States prisoners, and for other purposes," to fix the terms of office of the superintendent of prisons, the wardens, and the deputy wardens, to provide for their appointment, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed joint resolutions of the following titles:

On January 11, 1917:

H. J. Res. 306. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for payment of the deferred installments due on the purchase of tracts of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes in Oklahoma.

On January 15, 1917:

S. J. Res. 187. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress; and

S. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution to continue and extend the time for making report of the joint subcommittee appointed under a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity for further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee," approved July 20, 1916, and providing for the filling of vacancies in said subcommittee.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—EXPENDITURES IN STATE DEPARTMENT (H. DOC. NO. 1941).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on the Expenditures in the State Department and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a statement by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, of appropriations, expenditures, and balances of appropriations under the Department of State for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 16, 1917.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BOOHER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of George Welty, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SHIPMENT OF ARMS AND MUNITIONS INTO MEXICO.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to file from the Committee on the Judiciary an adverse report (No. 1300) on House privileged resolution 423.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Adverse report on House resolution 423 from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the calendar.

Mr. MANN. That is a privileged report, I suppose?

Mr. WEBB. It is a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is a privileged report.

Mr. MANN. It is reported to the House and then it is moved to lay it on the table? It does not go through the basket?

Mr. WEBB. No; I do not present it through the basket.

Mr. MANN. It should be presented to the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask to lay it on the table?

Mr. WEBB. No; because the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] wished to be present when that motion is made. I may do it at some later day.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman wish it to go on the calendar?

Mr. WEBB. Yes. I thought that was the regular order of procedure.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, this House, in passing this immigration bill, is about to change the policy of this Government ever since its foundation. You are about to exclude men and women who come here who can not read or write. Representing a great district in Chicago made up largely of foreigners and the children of foreigners, I can not afford to remain silent and let this bill pass without a protest.

The men you are about to exclude, or the people you are about to exclude, have come here and were welcome ever since this country was discovered, and have done just as much in the work of developing this country and making the country great as many who came here with a college education. It would shut out many friends and relatives of people who live in my district, city, and State, and it certainly is, in my opinion, an unjust law.

If you pass this bill, I am sure you will find later on that you have made a bad mistake. With many of the States passing compulsory educational laws, preventing the youth of the country from going to work before they are 14 or 16 years of age, and Congress lately passing a vocational education law to instruct the youth of our country in trades and other callings, where, in God's name, are you going to get the people to do the work that these poor immigrants would do whom you are shutting out under this bill? And what seems stranger still is that the Representatives here who are strongest for the exclusion of immigrants and who are lined up to-day most solidly for the passage of this act are the men who represent a section of this country that needs these toilers more than any other part of the United States.

It is amazing that the Members who represent States that need these immigrants are so short-sighted, because I do not know where, in God's world, they are going to get the people to do the hard manual labor that these poor aliens have to do that come here, and with conditions as they are to-day I can not see for the life of me who is going to do the hard work the poor laboring man is now compelled to do in the future. I am sure the graduates of our schools will not do it. I am sure that the youth of our country you are going to prepare for toil under the new vocational education bill that you have just passed will not do it, and the work will remain undone, because you will not be able to get men to work upon the streets, in the sewers, upon the railroads, or upon the farms, and the need for domestic servants will be even greater than ever.

Now, go ahead and pass this bill—I know you are going to do it—and you will find that you are doing a great injustice to the immigrant as well as to the country at large. But I protest against its passage, and I hope that the President in his wisdom will veto it as he did before, and I am pretty sure he will. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I want only five minutes to conclude, and then I shall move the previous question.

Mr. Speaker, the matter of the illiteracy test that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] has referred to has been thrashed out so often on this floor that it is unnecessary for me to waste any time on that proposition now. The gentleman from Illinois says it is amazing how shortsighted the 307 men are who last spring voted for this bill in this House, with the illiteracy test in it, with only 87 so farsighted that they could see the shortsightedness of all the rest of us. It is another illustration, Mr. Speaker, of the case of the 11 stubborn jurors.

Now, as I said, the illiteracy test does not come into this question now, because it has been settled. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has made an appeal, warning us against getting the bill into such shape that the President will veto it, foretelling a veto because it contains the provision he objected to.

The gentleman seems to have changed his views in regard to the poor immigrants. Heretofore he posed as the great friend of the poor immigrant, but only the other day, when our conference agreement gave the immigrant until the 1st day of July to study this bill and prepare for its requirements, the gentleman's desire to pose as a great parliamentarian got the better of his love for the poor immigrant, and largely at his instance the bill was sent back to conference, and we were forced to make it effective May 1, two months' shorter time than the conferees desired to give him. Now, the gentleman is foretelling what the President is going to do to the bill because we have in it a provision which he criticizes in regard to the Japanese.

Mr. Speaker, the President vetoed the bill two years ago, but at that time we had in the bill a reference to a gentleman's agreement and excluding those who could not become citizens by naturalization. And yet our President then made no reference whatever to that as being any ground for his veto.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is mistaken and is stirring up an unnecessary mare's nest when he talks about our undertaking to embarrass or to insult the great, brave Japanese people. Mr. Speaker, there was in the bill as it passed the House a reference to an agreement, and there were some gentlemen who believed that it might be thought by our Japanese friends that that language was directed against them; and therefore, in order that we might remove the idea of any purpose to intentionally insult the Japanese Government, we have stricken out even that little word and provided that no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from coming to this country shall be admitted.

I do not challenge the statement of the gentleman from New York that the Japanese people have kept that agreement for these nine years, and that very fact, Mr. Speaker, entitles them to the very consideration which I think we have given them, that nothing should be in the bill that could be fairly understood or interpreted as an insult to those people.

I agree with gentlemen from the Pacific coast that these questions are racial and not economic, but we desire to accomplish the best that we can for the whole people without giving offense to any nation, and if, as my friend from New York has said, they are observing that gentlemen's agreement—a statement which I will not question—there is not a word or a syllable in this bill at which that great nation can take any just offense.

Mr. Speaker, having said this much, I move the previous question. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BURNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the immigration bill.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I make the same request.

Mr. LANGLEY. I make a similar request.

Mr. SIEGEL. I make a similar request.

Mr. PLATT. I make a similar request.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the point of order on the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to any of these requests?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 408 (H. Rept. No. 1301).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18994) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, etc.; that in the committee the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with; that there shall be not to exceed four hours of general debate, two hours to be under the control of the gentleman from Florida, Mr. CLARK, and two hours to be under the control of the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MOONEY, said debate to be confined to the subject matter of the bill; that at the conclusion of the general debate the bill shall be read by paragraphs for amendment; that at the conclusion of such reading the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and amendments to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the rule.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman moves the previous question——

Mr. HENRY. I withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOONEY] is absent on account of illness, and therefore will not be here to control the time on the minority side. I think perhaps the gentleman had better give me the time.

Mr. HENRY. Does any other gentleman desire the time?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am a member of the committee, and I have no objection to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] controlling the time, but it does seem to me that the time ought to be controlled, not by party complexion, but by members of the committee who are in favor of the bill, and members of the committee who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection whatever to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] controlling the time, if I can be sure of getting some time for this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] opposed to the bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am.

Mr. HENRY. So is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. ASHBROOK. But he is not a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The usual practice is for the control of the time to go to the minority.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] that his name be substituted in the place of that of Mr. MOONEY to control the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HENRY. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent that the name of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] be substituted for that of Mr. MOONEY, Mr. ASHBROOK being opposed to the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill; but even though I were in favor of it, I would be opposed to this rule, which brings up this bill for consideration at this time, for the reason that there are bills now pending before this House, and applications now pending before the Committee on Rules, for the consideration of bills of very much greater importance to the country than is this bill. I am opposed to the bill itself, not because I am opposed to public buildings being very generously provided throughout the United States. I am not opposed to Federal buildings being eventually constructed in all towns in the United States whose postal receipts are in excess of $10,000 a year. I need not go into the reasons for that now, but I say this to make it plain that I am not opposed to this bill because there are items in it providing for buildings in small cities, but because in the present condition of the Treasury there is absolutely no defense for the consideration of this bill involving an expenditure of $38,000,000. And the amazing thing is that the Democratic side of this House, responsible for the appropriations that are made, with a $300,000,000 deficit staring them in the face to-day, with the Committee on Ways and Means at their wit's end to know where revenue is to be found to meet the absolutely necessary expenditures of this Government, should bring in this $38,000,000 proposition at this time, when no man will stand on this floor and say that the major portion of the items of this bill are absolutely necessary at this time, although they may be desirable when the Treasury is in a condition to warrant them.

That is the situation that we have on this floor to-day. I said a moment ago that there were bills now pending on the calendars with applications before the Committee on Rules for special rules for them of very much greater importance to the country than is this bill. Yet those bills must wait, and in all probability never will be considered at this session at all, in order that the membership of this House, not treating this question as a national question, not looking at these things from the standpoint of the national good, may be able to go home on the 4th of March and say to their constituents, "I got so much money out of the National Treasury for a public building in my district."

One of the bills that I refer to came up yesterday on the Unanimous-Consent Calendar and was objected to because it was stated that it would take three or four days to consider it. That was the bill known as the stock and bond bill, relating to the issuance of securities by railroads. Every one knows that that bill is a hundredfold more important to the United States at this moment than is this public-biuldings bill, and yet in a few moments I anticipate that the membership of this House is going to vote to bring the public-buildings bill before the House, which will mean that the regulation of the stock and bonds of railroads, affecting all the people of this country and involving millions and millions of dollars to all the people of this country must sleep in the pigeonhole in order that Members of this House may go home to their constituents and say, "We got something for you."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate fully the position that Members feel that they are in with reference to this bill. Nearly every Member of this House has an item in this bill. Many Members feel that if they oppose this bill that when it comes to the particular item affecting their own district, they will be estopped from opposing any motion to strike out their particular item. I have an item in this bill for my own district, one that comes within the law in the rule laid down of $10,000 postoffice receipts, and is just as meritorious as the majority of items in the bill. I want to serve notice now upon anyone that when it comes to this item in this bill, if the bill is to be considered, I shall feel perfectly free to oppose a motion to strike out that item unless you will also at the same time strike out all other items of a like character, and that I will be willing to do.

We have a perfect right, Mr. Speaker, to oppose a policy as I am opposing it now, but if that policy is to be adopted by the House, then we who oppose it on the floor have the right to insist that because of our opposition to it in the public interest our own district shall not be discriminated against, but be treated exactly the same as the other districts are treated.

I am confident that if the membership of this House could fully realize that consistent position, we might be able to defeat this bill now. For I will undertake to say that if every Member of this House would consult his own conscientious conviction, under the condition of the Treasury to-day, knowing the uncertainty of the future with regard to it, he would not at this time vote either for the rule or for the bill. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I occupied?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied eight minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. If I should occupy as much as 15 minutes, I would like to be notified.

I anticipate that it will be said by those in favor of the rule and the bill that this bill makes no appropriation. That is true, but with each authorizing section you find this language: "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for the erection and completion," and so forth.

When this bill is once adopted and enacted into law an appropriation must follow as a matter of course, and the liability is as clearly fixed in this bill as if the appropriation itself was contained in it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been stated informally, and I presume will be stated on the floor, that this bill only carries about $28,000,000. I have here a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury which I shall not take the time to read in full, but after analyzing the bill, he says:

> The entire amount therefore authorized in the new bill is $39,376,200. Deducting the amount that is already authorized, which involves only reappropriation of previous amounts, and revised methods, $1,185,000, the net authorization contained in the bill is $38,191,200.

Why, Mr. Speaker, because of the exigencies of the case, because the Treasury is in such a condition that it can not stand the drain, the clerks of the United States Government, with the high cost of living, will be compelled to forego that little 5 and 10 per cent increase that has been granted to them in the various bills by the House. We can not give the clerks working for $800 a year or less a little increase of 10 per cent—$80 a year in order to keep themselves and their families from absolute hardship and want for the necessities of life, but we can, if we adopt this rule, take $38,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of erecting public buildings in various districts of this country where no one will say, except in some cases, that they are absolutely necessary at this time.

But, Mr. Speaker, it will be said, I anticipate, that there is some beneficial legislation contained in this bill that will be of great benefit in the way of economy in the future. Granted, and if that is the desire, gentlemen could bring in a bill with that legislation alone, without any new expenditure, and there would be no difficulty in passing it; there would be no opposition to it on either side of the aisle, if that is the result desired. But the real purpose of incorporating in this bill some beneficial legislation is to use it as a means for defending the real purpose of the bill, the $38,000,000 in money. Oh, Mr. Speaker, it is a sad commentary upon the membership of this House when this thing shall be done. It means that the membership of this House, when it comes to appropriations for their own districts, are willing to forget their Nation, are willing to forget the great national purposes of this Government, are willing to forego the consideration of great matters of legislation of tremendous importance to this Government in order that they may enact legislation taking money out of the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of our own particular districts.

Mr. Speaker, this can not be defended. This bill at this time can not be passed on its merits, because of the condition that the Treasury is now in, with every reason to believe that it will so continue when appropriations will have to be made under this bill. We have every reason to believe the same conditions will then prevail as now prevail. I suppose it is useless to appeal to the Members of this House, but I do ask you to remember this country as a whole rather than your own particular district; and if you do, you will vote down this rule to-day.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I did not deem it necessary to say anything on the rule. I want to state that the rule presented by the Committee on Rules is absolutely fair. I want to say that this is the first time I think during my service in Congress when a public-buildings bill has been thrown absolutely open to inspection for discussion and for amendment in its every paragraph. The time is equally divided, and there has been so much talk in the press of the country about this particular bill that I think this House owes it to itself to consider it and pass upon it. Let the House determine whether these statements are true. It is true, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has said, that we have annexed to this bill legislation which we think is valuable, provisions for the standardization of buildings, provisions for the purchase of sufficient land, so as to be able to add to buildings in the future without selling them at a sacrifice and building others, provisions for the building of office or box-type buildings for post offices in this country. This bill carries in its authorization from 40 to 50 per cent less for the same sized towns as was carried in former bills. There can be no possible objection to the consideration of this measure now, because four years have passed since a public-buildings bill was reported to this House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman inform the House how near up with the authorizations already made the Treasury is with the construction of these buildings?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can not do that. I think it is considerably behind, but the purpose of this legislation is to reorganize the public-building force of this Government in such a way that they can keep abreast of the authorizations, and we believe that if this legislation, while not perfect, is adopted it will be a long step in that direction, and will result ultimately in economies that mean millions and millions of dollars to the people of the United States.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Kentucky, I may say of one case with which I am familiar, and I think it is typical of many in the bill of 1913, where a building was authorized, but that nothing has been done except to buy the site, and I think there are several other similar cases.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is the difficulty. The delay is costing the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars in the purchase of sites alone, and it has cost the Government many more hundreds of thousands of dollars because of the advance in building materials.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Lest the House should infer that all the sites authorized by the bill of 1913 have been purchased, I desire to state that there are still a great many sites authorized by that bill that have not been purchased.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. A great many have been, and contracts have been made for some buildings authorized in that bill, I understand; but, Mr. Speaker, the point is that we are taking a long step in advance in this legislation toward the correction of the evils which we all admit exist.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. By any possibility could the aggregate amount appropriated in this bill be expended in one year?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is not possible.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Over how many years would the expenditure of this aggregate sum be extended?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the Treasury Department pursued its usual course, it would be at least four years, because they have issued orders to build only 25 per cent in any one year.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. About how much would that be each year?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. A little over $7,000,000; and none of this money, practically none of it, except for the purchase of a few sites, will be needed for a year and a half or two years hence, and surely the Treasury of the United States will not be forever in the deplorable condition in which gentlemen depict it now.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Did not the gentleman state before the Committee on Rules when he appeared before that committee that if this bill were passed the Treasury Department could catch up in eight months?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think not. I think I said about a year and a half. The gentleman misunderstood me. I think I said 18 months.

Mr. LENROOT. I may have misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think the gentleman certainly did, because I never have had that in mind, but I do think that with the reorganization of the building force in the department, as we propose to reorganize it, they will catch up within a year and a half or two years at the furthest.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for this rule, and I hope that I am going to vote for the bill; but I am not going to vote for the bill unless the items which have no merit are cut out by amendment.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. For the information of the House would the gentleman give us those items that are without merit?

Mr. GARDNER. I have no doubt that that will be done. I hope that those items, of which there are many, that are without merit will be cut out by amendment, but if they are not cut out, in spite of the fact that this bill contains an appropriation for a post office in the city of Salem in my district, a city of over 40,000 inhabitants without a post office, nevertheless I shall vote against the bill.

I listened very carefully to the very intelligent discussion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. He made three principal arguments against this bill. They may all be sound, but only one of them goes to show that we ought not even to consider the measure. The gentleman says or implies that this bill contains items which are not meritorious. Obviously that is the case. It also contains many items which are highly meritorious. Must this House confess beforehand that it has so little self-control that it can not even consider a bill which contains items which are not meritorious. Are we so much afraid of ourselves that we do not even dare to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and at least make an attempt to cut the pork out of his bill? The gentleman from Wisconsin went on to say that the Treasury could not afford an omnibus public-building act this year, even if each of its items were meritorious.

There never was a time in the history of this country and there probably will not be a time for a good many years to come when taxes will be as little felt as in the flush times that we have at present. If there ever was a time when it was wise to go ahead and complete these needed improvements that the gentleman from Wisconsin admits that we ought to have, now is that time.

The gentleman made a very impressive presentation of the case; but there was only one of his arguments which tended to show us why we ought to vote against this rule for the consideration of the omnibus public-buildings bill. The argument did not convince me, but it was a strong argument. He says that there are pending before the Committee on Rules a great many meritorious propositions which we can not find time to consider in this House. I admit that this bill, if we vote to consider it, will use up at least two days. Somehow or other my experience in Congress leads me to the conclusion that if the Committee on Rules is really desirous of bringing matters before this House, time will be found in which to do so.

Mr. Speaker, if the Members of long standing in this House would look over that assortment of propositions pending before the Committee on Rules I venture to say that they would recognize many old friends which, no matter how meritorious they may be, the Committee on Rules invariably finds that the House has not the time to consider.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret to see a difference of opinion between my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] and my other distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and I trust it forebodes no political disaster. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to inquire whether you prefer the word "caucus" to "conference"?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We will cross that bridge when we reach it.

I am not surprised that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] opposes this measure, but I am surprised that in doing so he should appeal to our consistency, because in the same breath the gentleman from Wisconsin informs us that while he proposes to vote against this bill because it is in substance a graft measure, he does not propose to vote against those particular items in the bill in which he is interested. This is a new form of consistency which I commend in particular to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Now, the State of Wisconsin is a great State and is worthy of consideration in a bill of this kind, and apparently it has had such consideration in the formation of this bill. So I challenge some of the gentlemen from Wisconsin to rise in their own time, when I am through, and say whether they will move to strike out the particular items in this bill in which Wisconsin is interested. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] move to strike out the item of $100,000 for Westside, Wis.? Will he or any other gentleman from Wisconsin rise in his place and move to strike out the item of $50,000 for Appleton, Wis.? Will he or any other gentleman from Wisconsin rise and move to strike out the item of $75,000 for Kenosha, Wis.? Will any other gentleman from Wisconsin—and I am particularly interested in all the gentlemen from Wisconsin just now—oppose an appropriation of $70,000 for Grand Rapids? Will my friend from Wisconsin, Mr. FREAR, who has spoken eloquently on this bill, and whose speech caused a great deal of newspaper comment, rise when the time comes and move to strike out any of these items? Will he move to strike out $35,000 for Ladysmith, Wis.? Will he rise and move to strike out $57,000 for Portage, Wis.? Will any Member from Wisconsin rise and move to strike out $40,000 for Reedsburg, $40,000 for Sturgeon Bay, $10,000 for Menasha, Wis., or $10,000 for Two Rivers, Wis.? The gentleman from Wisconsin will not permit graft in this bill—oh, no—so here is the opportunity of a lifetime for some one to rise and move to strike out any one of 10 Wisconsin items in this bill. [Applause.] Will the gentleman do it?

Mr. GARDNER. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any reason why the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] should get up and move to strike out a particular item?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] will speak for himself in his own time as the gentleman from Massachusetts always does, on any side of a question. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the committee for this rule, and I shall vote for it in the House. I shall then listen to the discussion on the bill, and when that is concluded I shall vote for or against the bill as I may then be advised, but I shall not join the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], my colleague on the committee, in any attempt to gag this House.

Away back in the Sixty-first Congress he and I were on opposite sides of this question. He was opposed to the Rules Committee, because it deprived the majority of the House of the opportunity of voting on bills. I was the other way. I have come to the conclusion that the gentleman from Wisconsin was then right, and having once been converted on a subject I do not intend to be a backslider. I shall not be a party to any proposition which prevents this House from voting on a bill it wants to vote on, a bill of much size and importance.

I used to vote with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in those days. I came to the conclusion that he was unselfishly, gloriously, governmentally wrong, and that the Democrats and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and his friends were selfishly, governmentally, accidentally right. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Wisconsin can go back to the old system if he wants to; I would not. The defect of the position of the gentleman from Illinois, the then Speaker, was this—the same mistake Porfirio Diaz made in Mexico, and the same that great, strong leaders always make and always will make who realize that they can do a good thing for a country at a particular time—Mr. CANNON saved Congressmen their seats and, which was of much more importance, saved the country millions of dollars, saved the country from bad legislation. But the tendency of concentration of rule in the hands of a few was then, and always will be, to keep the others, who ought to have had an equal share in the responsibilities, from cultivating that fiber necessary to continued good government.

The Democratic Party and the gentleman from Wisconsin were right governmentally, although there is much to be said in admiration of the generous, splendid statesmanlike course of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and those who followed him. I do not regret having voted with him and having gone down with him in 1910. [Applause.] But he was governmentally wrong and I am not going to now, under the leadership of my colleague on the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], go back to the old system where any three or four men, whether their names are LENROOT, BENNET, and HENRY, or CANNON, Dalzell, and CLARK—I am not going back again to the old system whereby, when the majority felt that they wanted to vote on a bill for or against it that three or four men sitting in some room in secret session for reasons that seemed best to them could deprive the House of its right to vote on a bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the gentleman in favor of bringing in a special rule upon every bill that is on the present calendars of this House?

Mr. BENNET. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the gentleman's argument falls to the ground.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET. In a moment; let me answer this. But a question of large importance which has filled columns in the public press and on which a majority of the House is informed one way or the other can be and ought to be considered. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman in his reformed faith feel that there is any impropriety in action on a bill being refused not by three or four Members, but by a majority of the House?

Mr. BENNET. Why, certainly not.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then a man can vote against the rule.

Mr. BENNET. Of course; but I am in favor of bringing it up and letting it be voted on and not of keeping it in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Under leave of the House I desire to say, simply, that I have confidence to believe that in time, if the Committee on Rules remembers that it is merely an agency of the House and that it is the duty of the committee to permit the House to vote on the larger questions as to which the House has formed an opinion, the House will develop a quality of courage which will lead it to do for itself just what Speaker CANNON and the then Committee on Rules used to do as its substitute—that is, save the country from a whole lot of bad legislation. Until the House does develop that courage it will continue to pass undesirable legislation and to waste money. That the House shall develop that courage is essential to the Government itself.

An attempt on the part of the Committee on Rules to constitute itself a reservoir of courage for the House would merely retard the development of the House.

The deposition of Speaker CANNON has cost the country millions upon millions. In the abstract, though, Speaker CANNON was generously and patriotically wrong. Whether it was worth the money it has cost to maintain an abstract principle I do not know; but having lost the money anyway, we must not now substitute a new oligarchy in the place of the old and then, some years later, again start to develop courage in another Congress.

Porfirio Diaz was a power for good in Mexico, but his autocratic sway prevented the development of governmental ability in anyone else. Mexico, therefore, is now governmental chaos. The exercise of power by Speaker CANNON was a good thing for our country. His power was taken from him and the House has not developed, collectively, the skill and ability which he displayed individually. Will it ever? If the theory on which popular government rests is correct, it will. At any rate, we must try it out fairly.

I append two remarkable editorials from the New York Sun:

[From the New York Sun, Jan. 1, 1917.]

IS THE MODERN PORK BARREL BORN OF CHANGES IN THE HOUSE RULES?—CANNONISM, WHICH NOW IS HELD TO HAVE BEEN VINDICATED, LODGED POWER IN THE SPEAKER TO CHECK EXTRAVAGANCE.

"Cannonism!" replied one of the Democratic leaders of the House when asked to explain the drawing power of the pork barrel. "Cannonism threw the House into a fit of hysteria which led directly to the pork barrel under various names for progressive legislation, all of which reached into the Federal Treasury. We downed Cannonism, doubled the annual appropriations, and changed a Treasury surplus into a deficit. There you have the short and simple annals of the pork barrel of to-day, traced right back to Uncle JOE, and he sitting on the floor laughing at the Democratic predicament. We got a lot of temporary glory out of Cannonism as the arch enemy of democracy and progress, but there are few Democrats in the House conscious of their responsibility who do not wish we had something like Cannonism to hold back the rush on the pork barrel and act as a brake on the riot of extravagance which now prevails at both ends of the Capitol.

"Funny, significant, too, that the first outburst against Cannonism was over a pork-barrel public-building bill 10 years ago. The balance in the Treasury was low, or Speaker CANNON thought is was, and so did Jim Hemenway, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. They combined to hold down appropriations to necessities; but the boys wanted a public-building bill, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds prepared one of the most generous and general bills I ever saw, carefully distributing the pork so that fully three-fourths of the Members had a slice. They did not forget the Speaker and the chairman of Appropriations, for the committee realized that the passage of the bill depended on the consent of those two important officials of the House. The bill was practically agreed to by the committee, but as it was not privileged under the rules the chairman called on Speaker CANNON to arrange for a place for the bill on the legislative program.

"Uncle JOE talked about the possibility of a Treasury deficit, the necessity for economy, and other things, but showed no interest in even a new public building for Danville, Ill. Chairman GILLETT was discouraged and reported the situation to his committee. The members of the committee consulted others who were interested in the proposed distribution of pork, and the agreement of opinion was that they were numerous enough to force the Speaker's hand. They got up a round robin addressed to the Committee on Rules, and the signatures of full two-thirds of the Members of the House were attached to it. They petitioned the Committee on Rules for a special rule to consider the public-building bill, and Chairman GILLETT was accompanied by all the members of his committee when he presented his petition.

"The Speaker was then chairman of the Committee on Rules, and the round robin had to be presented to him. He greeted the boys pleasantly, read the text, looked down the long list of signatures, and began to talk about the condition of the Treasury. He did not think it a good time for a public-building bill, however desirable Federal buildings were when scattered over the country as monuments of national unity and authority. Then he pulled out of his desk a carefully prepared analysis of our bill, showing that the cost of maintenance of the new buildings would in many instances be double the rent and cost of fuel, light, and janitor service then paid by the Government, not to mention the millions to be spent for sites and new marble and granite buildings. Uncle JOE was prepared for the attack and we were flabbergasted for a minute, but Chairman GILLETT perked up and, calling attention to the long list of Members who had signed the round robin, asked if the Speaker proposed to ignore a respectful petition from two-thirds of the membership of the House. He reminded the Speaker that he was the servant of the House, and he made quite a clever speech, we thought.

"Uncle JOE looked us over and smiled as he said that he realized the truth of all the chairman had said. He was the servant of the House, and the House had placed certain responsibilities upon him, one of them to use his best endeavors to keep the expenditures within the revenues, and he proposed to consider that responsibility while it rested upon his shoulders. If as Speaker he recognized Mr. GILLETT to call up that bill, the House would shift responsibility to his shoulders because the House in its standing rule had given the Speaker the power of recognition in bringing forward such legislation. It had given no such power to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. If as chairman of the Committee on Rules he voted for a special rule to consider the bill, he again had to assume responsibility for the bill. He did not see how he could help the committee get its bill before the House.

"'But,' asked the chairman, 'is there no way by which a majority of the House can work its will?'

"'Yes,' promptly replied Uncle JOE, still smiling, but quite seriously. 'You elected me Speaker, conscious of the power you placed in my hands, and you can declare the chair vacant at any hour of any day when a majority of the House believes or pretends to believe that I am abusing that power; and you can elect a new Speaker, even on this issue, one committed to this bill. If you believe that your bill comes within the necessary legislation of this session I would advise that course, for while I remain in the Speaker's chair I will not use the power of that office to enact such legislation so long as there is danger of exceeding the revenues and creating a deficit in the Treasury.'

"We all realized that Uncle JOE was seriously considering his duty as the chief servant of the House and was not simply stubborn. We went back to the committee room and after full discussion concluded not to report the bill. It was left in the committee as though never considered, for none of us was willing to assume the responsibility which the Speaker would not shoulder.

"That was the incident which inspired the first outburst against Cannonism. It did not come from our committee, but from some of those whom we had disappointed in the nondistribution of pork. Representative Adams, of Wisconsin, had been disappointed over his failure to double the appropriation for the agricultural experiment stations, and in a speech in New York he assailed the Speaker as a czar. A little later Representative SHACKLEFORD, father of the good-roads bill, made a bitter speech in the House against Cannonism. SHACKLEFORD was, I think, author of the new word. It attracted attention, made headlines in the newspapers, especially after the publishers had failed to secure from the Ways and Means Committee a favorable report for their bill to remove the duty on print paper, and Cannonism became such a slogan that Mr. Bryan had it written into his platform in 1908.

"Cannonism became the biggest political bugaboo we had in years, and in some parts of the country it was used to frighten children into obedience. The Democratic Party was committed to opposition to all the old order of procedure in the House, going back to the beginning of the Government, because the name of Cannonism had been given it. So in 1910 we joined the Republican insurgents in a revolution to overthrow Cannonism and create a new Committee on Rules, of which the Speaker should not be a member. When the Democrats came into control of the House they had to go a step further and elect the standing committees, leaving the Speaker as a sort of parliamentary eunuch, who could exercise no influence on legislation—not as much as he had as minority leader. We have seven committees preparing appropriation bills and a Committee on Rules jealous of its new power to control legislation. We have rivalry all along the line, and appropriations have become the chief work of Congress, until the annual appropriations are now more than double those in the days of Cannonism.

"Public buildings and river and harbor appropriations are not alone responsible for the conditions. There is much other legislation under various titles, such as good roads, to bring the producer and consumer closer together; flood control, to prevent the ravages of the Mississippi River; rural sanitation, to conserve the health of the people; agricultural extension; vocational education; and many other new national projects which sound well, but all of it running direct to the Federal Treasury, for the purpose of disbursing public money in various parts of the country, and it is all promoted in the same way that the more common pork appropriations are promoted. It all helps to strain the hoops on the pork barrel, and there is the smell of pork about much of it because the appropriations behind the projects are the motive power.

"We have gained such momentum with the pork barrel pushing us that we are in the position of Sut Lovengood's father when he yoked himself up with the bull calf, and like him we are yelling for somebody to head us off to prevent the runaway from ending in a complete smash. It's all due to Cannonism, or the overthrow of the old system, which placed responsibility on the organization of the House and enabled the Speaker to secure cooperation and coordination from the chairman of the committee so that Congress could be held responsible for the conservation of the Treasury and protect it from the pork barrel. If we only had Cannonism back, we would not be in such a muddle with Treasury deficits, new taxes, and bond issues staring us in the face. Did any statesman or politician, as you will, ever have a sweeter revenge on those who created a revolution to strip him of power? Uncle Joe is here to smile at our struggle with the pork barrel, which he had the power to control."

ECONOMIST.

[From the New York Sun, Jan. 8, 1917.]

THE GRAVEST RESULT OF THE ABOLITION OF CANNONISM, SO CALLED—BY CHANGING ITS RULES THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES HAS FORFEITED ITS INDEPENDENCE AND ABDICATED TO THE PRESIDENT.

I have read with much interest the article on "Cannonism" signed "Economist," appearing in the Sun of January 1. Having been in a position where I could not fail to observe, I am able to indorse all the writer says concerning the results which have followed the abolition of "Cannonism," so called. The path has been straight to the Treasury, it is true, and inevitably so, as must always follow a diffusion of power such as was formerly lodged in the Speakership. But this has not been the only nor yet the most direful result of the change in the rules of the House of Representatives.

It was confidently expected by Mr. CLARK and Mr. (Senator) UNDERWOOD that in stripping the Speaker of power that power would pass to the floor and be lodged in the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the majority floor leader. The Norris resolution removing the Speaker from the Committee on Rules meant nothing, so far as curbing the Speaker's power was concerned, and really did nothing more than provide a platform on which to stage a spectacular all-night session for sparring purposes, because after it had passed and the Speaker was removed from the Committee on Rules the right in the Speaker to appoint that committee and all other committees was in no wise changed.

It will be recalled that when the real change in the rules of the House of Representatives occurred Mr. Taft was President. The Sixty-second Congress, which came in following the rejection in Canada of Mr. Taft's Canadian reciprocity pact, was overwhelmingly Democratic. Mr. CLARK was elected Speaker, and when it came to adopting rules he was stripped of power, for there was taken from him the right to name committees, and that right, the source of the Speaker's power, was lodged in the Committee on Ways and Means.

Until that time responsibility for leadership in legislation and parliamentary control in the House of Representatives rested with the speakership. The Speaker became, as "Economist," well says, "a parliamentary eunuch." Mr. UNDERWOOD was chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and as such became floor leader. This change in the rules of the House of Representatives, however, instead of reposing in one committee or in its chairman this great power of leadership in legislative and parliamentary control, brought about a vastly different result. It soon became evident that what had resulted was a diffusion and not a concentration of legislative and parliamentary control. The legislative ship began to drift, there was no one at the helm.

Now, if the only result of the theatrical execution of "Cannonism" had been that to which "Economist" refers, a saturnalia of profligate appropriation, we might view the wake it left with nothing more than mild alarm, for that is a condition incidental which can be readily though tardily corrected. But something else has happened, something infinitely worse, something insidious in its workings—something going to the very vitals of our institutions. The legislative branch of our Government has been practically eliminated. When Mr. Wilson became President, leadership in the legislative and parliamentary control of the House of Representatives, with its tremendous responsibilities, reposed in no one committee, in no one man. In fact, it reposed nowhere. It had been diffused.

The floor leader had lost control of the helm, the Speaker was a figurehead (for a time even his right of recognition was impaired), he was like a moderator in a town meeting—there was not even a steering committee. What happened? Naturally the Executive stepped in and assumed control, and in that moment and so swiftly no one noticed it, there was eliminated, in so far as its independent existence safeguarded the rights of the people, the legislative branch of our Government, and there remains now only the judicial branch to stand between an elective monarchical form of government and what remains of a republican form of government. Unless the legislative branch is redeemed how long does anyone suppose the judicial will remain a bulkwark?

The President to-day has complete legislative and parliamentary control in the House of Representatives, and exercises it. A glance at the legislative history of the past three years will convince a skeptic that whatever public legislation has been accomplished has been at the positive direction of the Executive. So complete has been the revolution in our form of government that at this moment there is before the President the river and harbor appropriation bill, that he may examine it before it is subjected to the necessary form of mere legislative enactment. The blame for this must not be laid at Mr. Wilson's door. He is merely employing a situation he found upon his becoming President. Any other Executive would have done likewise. The structure which a short-sighted Democratic minority raised, in combination with a band of disgruntled Republican insurgents, has fallen upon them. They thought they would destroy a hideous monster called Cannonism, and in doing so they have shorn the legislative branch of our Government of its independent existence.

It seems to me that a political revolution so momentous in its consequences as to eliminate a coordinate branch of our Government should be called to public attention; and it is because it is momentous that I ask your indulgence in taking up so much of your valuable space; and also because I want to enlist in an effort to redeem the legislative branch of our Government the most potent editorial voice in the country.

ONLOOKER.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, there was no division in the Committee on Rules upon this question along party lines, just as the divisions in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds touching the bill itself were not along party lines, as I understand. I was one of those who felt constrained to oppose this rule, not because there is anything unfair about the rule itself, because there is nothing unfair about the rule in itself, but because on the policy that is involved in it I had and have very decided convictions. I feel quite certain that my duties elsewhere as a member of the Committee on Rules during the next two or three days, while this bill will be under discussion, will be of such a character that I shall not have an opportunity to express my views when the bill itself is under debate, and in consequence I take advantage of this opportunity to say just these few words.

I believe the House should think quite calmly upon this question, and I say to you that according to the statement of the gentleman from Florida himself, my very good friend, whom I regret exceedingly to oppose, that according to the statement of the gentleman from Florida himself made just a few minutes ago there exists no present exigency for the passage of this bill, and no such exigency will exist during this session of Congress, because the gentleman himself told us that in all events it must be at least a year and a half before there can be a movement looking toward the enforcement of any of the authorizations that are being made in the bill which is shortly to be brought before the House. I say that as a Democrat, due to the conditions of the Treasury, I have been alive to the suggestions which have been forcibly made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, placing it up to the Democrats that the responsibility rests upon them. We do know, as was stated by him, that now the revenue-raising committee of this House, the Democratic members of that committee, are struggling night and day to find the revenues with which to meet the immediate demands of this Government. And yet we are called upon here at the short session of Congress, with matters of great importance and moment pressing upon us from every direction, to take up and consider a bill, the chairman of the committee which reported it himself admitting there can not exist a single necessity for its passage for at least a year and a half or two years from this time. For that reason I try to exercise what I hope I have—that is, common sense—and so oppose this rule and the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules carefully considered this question, and they came to the conclusion that the bill is full of merit. For one, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the smaller towns of this country are as much entitled to public buildings as the larger cities. I voted, or at least favored, the proposition for the pneumatic-tube service in the cities because I believe the country is entitled to that service in the cities, but I think the people who live out in the sparsely populated sections of this country, in towns of sufficient size, are entitled to some consideration. For one I do not believe that all of our money should be squandered on great armies and navies and great buildings for the cities. I believe this bill is all right, and, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 141, noes 47.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of no quorum present——

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, in deference to the wishes of my friends I will withdraw the point of no quorum, but I give notice I will demand a roll-call vote on the passage of the bill.

So the resolution was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 18994, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] will take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 18994, the omnibus public-buildings bill, with Mr. CLINE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 18994, the omnibus public-buildings bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18994) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of certain public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for certain public buildings; to abolish the Office of Supervising Architect of the Treasury and to create and organize in the Treasury Department a Bureau of Public Buildings and define its duties, powers, and jurisdiction; to create and establish the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings; to fix the salary and prescribe the duties and powers of the said Commissioner of Public Buildings; to create a board of estimates and prescribe its duties and powers; to provide for the standardization of certain classes of public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading is dispensed with under the rule.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Very well. Mr. Chairman, when I have proceeded for 40 minutes I wish to be notified.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I crave the indulgence of the committee while I present certain facts with relation to this bill. This bill has probably been more widely discussed in the metropolitan press of the country and in the magazines of the land than any other bill which has appeared in this Congress during my membership in it.

I want to say that for very many years it has been the practice of Congress—and gentlemen now opposing this bill have participated in that practice—to "railroad" through the House public-buildings bills with only a few moments of discussion, without any opportunity for amendment or anything of that character. These gentlemen are now the loudest opponents of this bill, a bill which we throw wide open for inspection, wide open for discussion, wide open for amendment. And I desire to say here and now, as chairman of this committee, that the sole purpose of the committee has been to attempt to reconstruct the public-buildings laws of the country and get the public-building operations of the Government placed upon a common-sense, economical, and expeditious basis; and if any gentleman upon this floor can offer an amendment looking to the perfection of the legislation so as to reach these ends, I think he will find a practically unanimous committee approving his suggestions.

Mr. Chairman, the bill has not only been commented upon in the public press, but it has been commented upon in speeches upon this floor by gentlemen who, to say the least of it, were not advised as to the facts.

Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent at this point to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, because I can not confine myself to my manuscript.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. As I was saying, gentlemen on the floor have delivered speeches in which they have sought to bring this bill into disrepute. They have selected scattered items here and there, small towns, and have paraded them before the country and given the country to understand that the whole bill is made up of items such as they present in their speeches.

I want to call the attention of the committee to these facts: The act of 1913, the last public-buildings act, approved by President Taft on the 4th of March, 1913, carried a provision of law suggested at the other end of the Capitol and agreed to in conference. That provision was to the effect that thereafter no site should be provided for a public building unless the postal receipts amounted to $6,000 per annum, and that no building should be provided unless those receipts amounted to $10,000 per annum. I say that proposition came from the other end of the Capitol and was accepted by the House conferees, and finally was written into the law.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. That was confined to cases where the buildings were for post-office purposes alone?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; that was confined to cases where the buildings were intended for post-office purposes alone. The gentleman can see that no particular rule could be established for those towns where there were activities other than those of the post office, and for that reason this rule was made to apply solely to post-office towns where there were no other activities. Yet gentlemen in discussing this subject have referred to the post-office receipts in towns below $10,000, and have given the Congress and the public to understand that there were no activities there other than those of the post office, when that was not true.

Take the town of Lewisburg, W. Va., as an example. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], in his speech on this subject, quoted that as one of the places where the Treasury had been ravished by a committee of Congress. The fact is that the census of 1910 did show that there were only eight hundred and some odd citizens of Lewisburg, W. Va.; but the hearings, which were accessible to the gentleman, show the further facts that Lewisburg is one of the oldest towns in the State of West Virginia, that a Federal court sits there, and that the limits of the town were contracted to the original lines, and that those lines have never been extended, but that as a matter of fact—and that fact was stated by the judge of their court, and by the postmaster of that town, and by the clerk of the court, three prominent gentlemen from there—the population to-day, and at the time of the hearings, amounted to over 2,500 people. With a post office and a Federal court also to be housed, the committee allowed only some $82,000 to build the Federal courthouse and post office at Lewisburg; and yet we are said to be "ravishing the Treasury" when we do a thing of that sort.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, that is not all. Lewisburg to-day, as shown by the receipts of the last quarter, has gone beyond $10,000—it went beyond $10,000 before this bill was ever considered in the House. It has been the practice of the committee, I want to say, to do this: When we have a hearing with reference to a particular town we get the record of the receipts, not only for the last fiscal year when there is any doubt about it, but when we find they fall below the $10,000 limit we get the receipts for the last quarter, and the last half year, and sometimes for the last calendar year; and in these cases the growth in receipts has been found to be so much, sometimes, that the committee had the right to conclude that it would go beyond the limit before the bill ever came up in Congress. In a few instances of that kind, in the case of live, progressive towns, the committee has allowed a site for a building. In the law of 1913 a number of sites were purchased by the Government at places where the receipts were under $10,000. They were provided for in the bill and bought.

When this bill came to be considered by the committee, the question came up as to what should be done at these places. The Government already owned the land. The receipts in some cases did not come up to the $10,000 limit. The committee was acting upon the theory that hereafter under this legislation, if it is adopted, we propose to cut out this site proposition entirely. We propose to fix one limit for site and building, and we propose to have the receipts go to $10,000 or over for three successive years, so as to show substantiality before the committee provides for a site or a building. But we had these sites. The Government owned them, the money had been paid, and the land had been bought, and the committee said, "Shall we let these sites lie there idle for years to come with the money of the Government invested, or shall we authorize modest buildings to be placed upon them?" And the committee decided that in all those cases, where the sites had already been bought and the Government's money had been invested, they would provide for modest buildings to be put upon them, and that has been done in this bill.

I want to say this, too, gentlemen. I have made this statement repeatedly upon this floor, and I want to say that it is bearing fruit down in the Treasury Department. Lately they have let some contracts for several thousand dollars less than the authorizations, a thing almost unheard of before in the history of the Government. But we have been calling attention to this matter; that if there was any waste, if there was any wrongful or useless expenditure of public money, it did not lie upon the shoulders of Congress, but it lay upon the officials who were executing the law. We called attention to the fact that they had the right and it was their duty under every authorization to visit the place through their agents, to examine the town, and to place there such a building as in their judgment would meet the necessities of the case, the only limitation being that they should not go beyond the authorization we had fixed. They could go as far below it as they saw fit, but not beyond it. And I say that lately they have been letting some contracts for a good many thousands of dollars less than the authorization. But in this bill we have fixed it so that there can not possibly hereafter be any question about it. We have solemnly declared in the bill itself that it is our purpose in naming these limits of cost simply to name a figure beyond which they shall not go, and that they are at liberty in their discretion to build for as much less as they see fit.

So in all these cases where sites have been bought heretofore they could put up a $10,000 building, if they thought that would answer the purpose, or they could put up a $5,000 building, and there is no power on earth to stay their hands. It is absolutely in their discretion, and nobody else has any control over it, and necessarily we have got to have somebody in whom to lodge discretion. Congress can not tell, no committee of Congress can tell to a dollar what a building should cost in a town in any

State in the Union. We have to fix a limit and then lodge discretion in some officials and let them determine the character of building that ought to be put there.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to do the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] an injustice, but I never see him here unless there is a river and harbor bill or a public-buildings bill to be considered. In the speech of my friend from Wisconsin he says it is a sectional bill; that the South is in the saddle; and that we are taking all the money out of the Treasury to build monuments at crossroads in the Southern States. Now, my friend, I am going to show you how much sectionalism there is in this bill and where it goes if there is any sectionalism in it. I believe every gentleman on this floor will give me credit for being at least conservative. I want to say that no man has ever been known before, on this side or on that side of this House, since my time here of 12 years, to charge the Public Buildings Committee with being either sectional or partisan until the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] made the charge. I have served upon that committee under Republican administrations. I have served upon it under Democratic administrations, and there has never been any politics, any partisanship, or any sectionalism of any character in that committee. [Applause.] But the gentleman says it is a sectional bill. I would not refer to this if he had not started it. I do not think we ought to discuss it, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] constantly refers to "the Democratic public-buildings bill of 1913." My dear Christian friend, it was not a Democratic public-buildings bill. The truth of history is against you. A Democratic House originated the bill, a Republican Senate added millions to it, and a Republican President signed it. How can you get a Democratic bill out of that? It is a hybrid. That is what I call it. It is one-third Democratic and two-thirds Republican. It was a pretty good bill, too. But my friend says it was sectional. Let us see. I have not time to state all the figures, but I will put them all in the RECORD. The gentleman goes on to compare a Southern State with a Northern State. He takes Alabama and Michigan, for instance, and he says Alabama has 10 Representatives in Congress, Michigan has 13; that Alabama paid only a very small amount of income tax, and that Michigan paid a whole lot of income tax. Yet Alabama got 10 items in the bill and Michigan got 10. I presume the gentleman meant by that sort of reasoning that we ought to construct these buildings according to congressional districts and give every congressional district an item. If that would not be pork barrel I do not know what it would be. That would be the very height of logrolling.

But perhaps the gentleman thought these buildings ought to be constructed according to the amount of income tax paid. That would be another pork proposition, I think. I want to remind my friend that the income tax is not the only tax paid by the people of the United States. They pay internal-revenue taxes, they pay tariff taxes and corporation taxes, and various other kinds of taxes. The income tax is not all. But take that, and what do you find when you figure up these 10 items for Alabama and 10 items for Michigan? You find that Alabama got $460,000 in the bill and Michigan got $1,712,500. That is sectionalism with a vengeance, is it not? [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. About four times as much.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. About four times as much goes to Michigan, and yet the gentleman says it is a sectional bill. I want to tell the gentleman that if he will go further and take the 11 strictly Southern States, and count up every dollar they have got in this bill, the State of Illinois alone gets almost as much as the entire 11 Southern States. Take Illinois, Massachusetts, and New York and add them together, and then take the 11 Southern States and the five border States of Oklahoma, Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, and Maryland, making 16 in all, and these three Northern States get more than $3,000,000 more than the 16 States. [Applause.] Yet the gentleman says it is a sectional bill. Oh, gentlemen!

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] compares my own State with the State of Minnesota. Florida gets in this bill $135,000; that is all. Minnesota gets $776,000, or over six times as much as Florida gets. Yet it is a sectional proposition. Mr. Chairman, if you will take the facts and go through the bill, you will be able to see how sectional a bill this is. I want to say right here that, as an American citizen, and as a Member of this Congress, under my oath as a Member, and serving upon that committee as an American citizen, it never entered my head where the State was that got the appropriation. We were looking to the towns and to their necessities, and the man who is not broad enough to do that has no business holding a seat in Congress, let alone a place on this committee. [Applause.]

Nobody considered whether it was one State or another. We took care of the necessities of the different cities and towns as far as we could. Why, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of small items to which the gentleman from Wisconsin called attention, but I will not take up the time of the House to go through them now. I will put in the RECORD every one that he has called attention to or animadverted upon. I have discussed the gentleman's figures, and I want to say that in practically every case the gentleman was wrong, and we stuck to the law as it was laid down in the books.

Now, some gentlemen may have all they want in the way of "pork." That may explain the opposition of some other gentlemen to this bill. I know gentlemen who have gotten buildings heretofore, when bills were put through under whip and spur, who never opened their mouths in opposition, and yet they are violently opposed to it to-day. These gentlemen have many items in their district.

I want to say, as chairman of this committee, that if there had been any pork in this bill the chairman would have managed to get his part. [Laughter.] I represent a district in this House, and you know how much goes to my district—the measly little sum of $45,000. That is every dollar that goes to the district I represent. In all these items I think you will find that those for the members of the committee are exceedingly small.

Now, I want to say with reference to these items that you will find upon investigation that the receipts to-day—and this is the test that we settled upon—that practically not one of them which we authorized falls below the limit of the act of 1913, or they have other Federal activities to be taken care of, one or the other. It is barely possible that there may be one or two items in this bill where we do not come up to that, and it may be, gentlemen, if I had had the absolute drafting of the bill all by myself, I would have drawn a different bill. But this bill represents the best judgment of this committee, with one or two exceptions. We are proposing legislation here which provides that hereafter the towns must show postal receipts for three successive years of $10,000. We have provided in this bill that in any advertisement for bids to construct buildings in the future the department must ask for three separate bids, contemplating three different kinds of material, and a local material shall be one of them—that is, one bid shall involve the use of local material if there be any in the State where the building is to be erected.

Talk about waste! The Treasury Department a few years ago advertised for bids for the construction of a building in the State of Washington and prescribed that the material should be Indiana limestone and southern pine. The result was that the building stone was hauled from the middle of the country across the continent, and the pine timber went from my own State, in the southeastern end of the Nation to the northwestern corner of it, went into a State that has more timber than any other State in the Union. [Laughter.] We put that provision in the bill to stop that kind of practice by the Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has referred to legislation requiring towns to show at least postal receipts to the amount of $10,000. Does that apply to the sites in this bill and to the post offices provided for in this bill?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It does not.

Mr. GOOD. So that any town in this bill, if it has a population of 300 or 400 and receipts of one or two thousand dollars, could get a post office?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think there is any such item in the bill.

Mr. GOOD. There are some items where the receipts are only $3,000 or $4,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think so, but if there are there are other Federal activities at those places.

Mr. GOOD. If such items are authorized in this bill they would be entitled to have a post office, notwithstanding this language.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Undoubtedly, if Congress passes the bill. I say there might possibly be a case or two where they did not come up to the limit of the receipts, but if they do not there are other Federal activities.

Mr. GOOD. The information I was trying to get is whether or not this language in the bill applied to the provisions of this bill or was put in to govern it in the future.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. To govern it in the future. It says that hereafter they are to come up to that limit for three successive years.

Now, we have in this bill provided for a system of standardization. The Treasury Department—and that is one reason why they are so behind in their work to-day, because for every one of these little buildings they have had to draw separate plans and specifications, at a great expense and loss of time.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. The chairman of the committee says they had to draw separate plans and specifications. That was purely a whim of the department, was it not?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They did do it, but they did not have to do it. The fact is they did do it, and wasted time and incurred great expense. We put this provision in to force them to abandon that method. We have divided the States of the Union into groups by letter, according to topography and climate, and we have divided the towns and cities into classes, numbering them according to the postal receipts, and the smallest being $10,000 receipts a year. We have provided that whenever they draw plans and specifications for a town in one of these groups under a certain authorization they must use it for towns of that same size in the same group thereafter. That will save a great deal of money to the Government of the United States.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. Those were divided into groups on the theory that a building that suited one section of the country would not be economically fit for another section, and therefore we have taken into consideration the contiguity and the climate.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Exactly. In other words, what would suit Florida would not suit Vermont. And, gentlemen, we have done another thing here. It has been the case heretofore, especially in the larger cities, that when the public business outgrew the building—the monumental buildings that have been constructed more for show than for service—when they were outgrown by business they have come to Congress every time and asked to sell the old one, buy a new site, and erect a new building, because they could not add to the old one without destroying its appearance, and in many cases they did not have the land upon which to permit an addition to it, and they could not build higher because the foundation was not sufficient. We provide that they shall buy sufficient land, so that hereafter they may add to the structure when the business expands, without being forced to buy additional adjoining land at an exorbitant price and without destroying the symmetry of the building itself. That provision is in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any provision in this new legislation recommended by the committee changing the law as to the distance the building line of the post office must be from other adjacent buildings?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; we have a provision in the bill which provides that hereafter the Commissioner of Public Buildings, who is to supplant the Supervising Architect, and the Bureau of Public Buildings are to purchase land without regard to whether it is bounded on the sides by more than one street, and they are given specific power to buy inside lots, if they see fit, in the middle of a block in a town or city.

Mr. STAFFORD. What provision has been made as to the building lines of the Government buildings to be erected? Do we require them to be so many feet distant from other buildings, as at present?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We have not any requirement of that sort in the bill. We have it fixed so that they can buy a lot right in the middle of a block, if they desire to do so, but they may never have to do it. The fact has been that in all the towns and small cities in the country there are usually two or three corner lots, and when it is known that the Government is forced to buy a corner lot the price goes up at once, and if they have the power to buy an inside lot they then are apt to get the corner lot at something like its fair value.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it not true that in a number of cases we have had to pass special laws authorizing the purchase of land not corner lots, because the corner lots could not be obtained without paying an exorbitant price, in a number of cases?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely. Then I want to say that we have provided in this bill for the abolition of the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. To-day we have no Supervising Architect of the Treasury. A lawyer down there is pretending to act as Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury, a departmental lawyer—not even a real lawyer, but one of these departmental lawyers who has been there for ages drawing contracts with printed blanks, with nothing in God's world to do but to fill in the date, the names of the parties, and the contract price.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. What experience in the way of training had the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who has charge of this public-buildings business, before he took that position?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think that he had any, but I want to say that the fact is that the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury has been all of the time drafting plans for monumental buildings. Nobody wants a marble palace in a small town in which to transact the public business. It overshadows everything else in the community, and looks like a man with a pair of blue-jean trousers stuck in his boots, wearing a plug hat.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would like to inquire of the chairman if this proposed legislation abolishing the Supervising Architect's Office and creating a bureau of public buildings has any provision for carrying on the various buildings now under construction, and if not, what will be the consequence?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The provision of the law is that there shall be a commissioner of public buildings to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; that there is also to be a bureau of public buildings in the Treasury Department composed of the commissioner of public buildings and two others to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury from among the officers and employees now in the Supervising Architect's Office. This will be organized, and they will go right on with the work, of course as it is being carried on now, or in a good deal better shape, I should say.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Has any consideration been given in this proposed legislation to the repealing of the existing laws?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We simply abolish the Supervising Architect's Office. That is about the best way to repeal it. When we abolish it, that knocks it clean out of the box. I do not think we ought to say that the law establishing the Supervising Architect's Office is hereby repealed. We put him out of business and put this other fellow in.

Mr. BURNETT. If we take the jurisdiction from him there certainly is nothing left for him.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely nothing. We get the commissioner of public buildings, and we have provided also for a bureau of estimates in the Bureau of Public Buildings, and they are to gather certain facts. Whenever a bill is introduced in Congress asking for a public building the bill is to be immediately referred to the commissioner of public buildings, and he is to refer it to the field force in the group of States where the place is located. They are to make an investigation of the city or town and report to the chief inspector of that group and he in turn is to forward it to the commissioner of public buildings, and then it is to be forwarded to the committee having jurisdiction of the bill. He is to find out all of the following facts: The postal receipts for the last three fiscal years, the different Federal activities to be provided for, the number of employees for each Federal activity to be housed, the population according to the last Federal census and the preceding one, the estimated population at the time of making the report, what important industries, if any, are located in or adjacent to the town or city, how many railroads, whether a county seat or not, the character of the public and business buildings, of the municipal improvements, the present needs as to space and probable needs within 10 years, the character of the rented quarters occupied by the Government at the time of making the report, the amount of rent being paid annually in the town or city by the Government at the time of making the report, the distance of the post office from the union station or the depot of the railroad to which the bulk of the mail is brought at the time of making the report, the amount being paid annually by the Government for the carriage of mail to and fro between the depots and wharves and the post office at the time of making the report, and any further fact or facts showing or tending to show the advisability of providing for a Federal building at the place named in the bill.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. Is there anything in all this information intended to be obtained through this agent that could not be obtained from the local postmaster without any cost whatever to the Government?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There might be; but I want to say this: That we have provided for a chief inspector and inspectors of buildings in these groups who are to have charge of the custody and maintenance of the public buildings.

They are there now. They are there to look after these buildings and report upon them from time to time as to their condition, the number of employees housed there, whether repairs are needed, whether an addition is needed or anything of that kind, and they are on the ground, and therefore we thought it wise to ask from them this information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to notify the gentleman he has occupied 40 minutes. The gentleman desired to be notified at the expiration of that time.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. JAMES. Is there anything regarding the cost of the proposed buildings and interest on the investment?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to talk just a moment on that. I want to say this: I want to say right here, gentlemen, the fight against these small buildings is not the main fight against the bill. I do not mean this with reference to the position of certain gentlemen here, but the fight that has been inaugurated against the bill is not because of a few little buildings in small towns here and there. The American Institute of Architects is the Architectural Trust of the United States. They have been getting the "pork" for all these years. [Applause.] They hung around the committee room for days and weeks, and they wanted to write the legislation in this bill. The Supervising Architect's Office has not for years constructed one of these large buildings in the great cities or in the city of Washington. It has always been farmed out to the American Institute of Architects or their members, and they got 6 per cent on the gross cost of the building. On a $3,000,000 building they would pull down $180,000 for drawing the plans and specifications, and I am here to say I believe, and the committee believes, that the United States Government ought to have men competent to do that work in their own public-buildings office without going outside to hire these people to do it.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; if the gentleman will make it a brief one.

Mr. HULBERT. I will make it very brief. In the town I was brought up in there was an authorization for the construction of a post office so many years ago I do not remember when it was. It has been advertised now, I think, three times, and each time it has been advertised bids have been within a couple of thousands of dollars within the amount appropriated, and each time the bids have been thrown out by the Treasury Department, necessitating readvertisement. While the population is only about 4,000, and while the receipts of the post office may be only $10,000, there are distilleries located in that town which pay a revenue to the Government of more than a million dollars per annum, and it is intended to place a deputy collector of internal revenue in this building. That condition has obtained now for a matter of 10 or 15 years, and I would like to know whether there is anything in this bill that will seek to correct such a system of inefficiency as that?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think there is any doubt about it when we get this legislation enacted and get this public-buildings commission, with the machinery which we have attempted to give them in motion. I want to say this: We do not claim that this legislation is perfect. It is going to take years to perfect it, but we do say that this is a long step in the right direction toward the economical and exepditious construction of public buildings.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he had any information as to the approximate percentage of the buildings authorized in the act of 1913 which are now even under way?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I have not; but very small, I am sure.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman give some of the proportions?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I can not.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Are any completed?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Hardly any——

Mr. LANGLEY. Not a single one.

Mr. KENT. If the gentleman will permit, I was very much interested in what the gentleman said about the American Institute of Architects. I have been told that one of the great difficulties with these buildings in the past was the common practice of insisting upon increases in cost, thereby adding extras to both the contract and the architect.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely, and I was going to touch on that. I was going to say this: It has been the practice of these people to contract to draw the plans and specifications at these enormous figures. In nearly every case they have come back to Congress—come back to the committee and asked for an increased limit of cost by reason of the addition of these new gewgaws and jimcracks to the building. Now, I want to say this: As I said a moment ago the fight is not on this bill because of a few little buildings here and there, but these gentlemen could not write the bill. We want to save this 6 per cent for the Government and get architects, if we have not got them, who are capable of drawing plans for any building Congress will authorize. Then, I want to say another thing about this upkeep business. It is the most ridiculous proposition on God's earth. The gentleman asked me about the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is in charge of public buildings, and whenever a bill is introduced we send a copy of it and ask for a report of facts. That is all we ask for. He got in the habit of not only giving the facts as to the postal receipts, but also he began to stick a little paragraph down at the bottom of his report to the effect that the department "felt constrained to advise against this building," and I sat down one day, after three or four of these came, and I wrote to him and I said we wanted from him a very simple statement of the facts, and that whenever we wanted his advice as to the advisability of constructing a building at a particular place we would ask him for it, but in the meantime we would be obliged if he would confine himself to the simple statement of the facts asked for. Well, then he began to put in these reports estimates as to the upkeep charges of these buildings, and, gentlemen, this bill cuts half in two the authorizations of towns of the same size in former bills. In other words, where we used to authorize $50,000 and $60,000 for a building of a certain size, we cut the authorization down to $25,000 and $30,000 for the same size town in this bill.

Now, then, he puts in his upkeep charges, and what are they? Janitor service, $1,200; supplies, $900. Do you know what the supplies are? They are soap and towels and things like that in a little one-horse post office.

Mr. JAMES. Does he not also include fuel, electric light, and things of that kind in the $900?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It may be possible. A large part of it is for soap, towels, and things of that kind for the use of the employees.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman has stated that the larger buildings are constructed by the Institute of American Architects.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not constructed. The plans and specifications are drawn by them.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Do you know whether the city post office in Washington came under that institute or not?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; I think so.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I am told that the tables in the corridors in the new city post office cost over $3,000 and that some of the chandeliers there cost $6,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; and they have bronze slips in the doors for letters to be put through, and there is no use on earth for them at this time, and they cost a lot of money.

Mr. ASHBROOK. While I believe it is true, the amounts authorized in this bill are somewhat less than formerly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Do you not know that they are a great deal less?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Does not the gentleman believe that the buildings will be constructed for the amounts authorized in the bill? As a matter of fact, will they not come back and ask for more than we appropriate?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If this legislation is enacted, they will be constructed for less than the authorizations, and a good deal less. You take a town to-day with a post office that is rented, and the owners of the property are going to get—and they do get, for I have gone over it—from 6 to 15 per cent as rental from the United States Government. Now, then, they do not have any janitors to take care of these rented buildings. How are they kept clean? They are kept clean, and the Government-owned building can be kept in the same way, and there is no necessity for a janitor at $1,200 a year in a little one-horse town to take care of a little one-horse building.

Mr. ASHBROOK. As a matter of fact, is not a janitor provided for all public buildings?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Is it not a fact that they should be provided for these buildings that are authorized under this bill?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly not, at $100 a month.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly not, at any such price as that. And I think the committee will stand by me and agree to put an amendment in this bill that there shall not be any at these places. You can get a charwoman for $5 or $10 a month to go there occasionally and clean it up.

Mr. ADAIR. These janitors in some places receive $55 a month, with $50 for the assistant.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And I know places in this country where they put elevators in little one-horse buildings, when there was not another elevator within 100 miles of the place. People would go there for miles around, in order to ride up and down, in order to see what the thing looked like.

Mr. ALMON. You say but a very small percentage of buildings authorized four years ago have been constructed?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The number is very small. I do not think any of them have been constructed.

Mr. ALMON. Is it not true that it is usually four to six years after authorization before they are constructed?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. To what do you attribute that delay, and do you not think it unreasonable?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For one thing, I attribute it to the lack of standardization. I attribute it to erecting monumental buildings in small towns. I asked the Supervising Architect once, the architect who preceded the present acting architect, why they did not put up the building at Smyrna, Del., where a site had been purchased and a building authorized for several years, and he said he could not draw plans for a little $20,000 building. I said, "You do not mean that you can not draw plans for a $20,000 building?" He said, "I mean that I can not draw plans for a $20,000 building."

Mr. TOWNER. In any event, whatever expense is incurred for janitor and upkeep of the building is exclusively within the control of the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely.

Mr. TOWNER. And if extravagance is used or shown in the executive department this bill is not responsible for it?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not at all.

Now, I want to say, gentlemen, that there was a public buildings bill in 1906. There was another in 1908, and there was another in 1910—four omnibus bills within a period of four years—and they carried approximately $94,000,000 altogether. Here is one bill in four years. There has not been another; and when the deductions are made which should be made, it carries only $31,000,000 and a few hundred thousand. The bill foots up about $37,000,000, but we have provided in Dallas, Tex., for $1,800,000, but with the sale of the property there which we already now own for $1,000,000 it reduces it to $800,000 there.

The building for the Department of Justice is carried in here for $3,000,000, but that was provided for by a former Congress and should not be charged to this bill. And in a number of other instances deductions should be made, which will put the bill at approximately $31,000,000 in four years, a little over $7,000,000 a year.

I want to say further that out of the $31,000,000 only about $6,000,000 goes to the small cities and towns throughout the United States. [Applause.] That is, about a million and a half a year for four years goes to the rural communities of this Republic. And yet they say it is a "pork barrel." These people, they say, are entitled to nothing at the hands of the Government. They pay their taxes. They fight the battles if war comes upon us. They support the Nation in time of peace, because they are the producers of the land. And all that they ever see in a beneficial way of the Government is the mail that is handed out to them by the postal employees.

Ah, the gentleman talks about the income tax; that it is paid by these great States. Take New York; it pays millions. But I remember that there are a good many people in New York, like ex-Senator Clark, of Montana, for instance, with his millions of money, paying his income tax, where the great State of New York gets credit for it, but the wealth that enables him to pay it he dug out of the bowels of the State of Montana. [Applause.]

Again, take Mr. Hines, the great lumber magnate of Chicago. He pays a great part of the income tax, and Illinois gets the credit for it. But the wealth that enables him to pay it comes from the rural districts of the South and the West, the timberlands of the country——

Mr. LANGLEY. And the coal mines of Kentucky and Virginia.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; and the coal mines of Kentucky and Virginia. Ah, my friends, take the Southern Railway, that permeates every section of the Southland, that goes into every nook and corner of it. The bondholders of the Southern Railway live in New York, in Boston, in Chicago. They pay their income taxes. New York and Illinois and Massachusetts get the benefit and credit of it, but the wealth that enables them to pay it comes from that much abused southern land. Take also the case of the Seaboard Air Line, another railroad going into the farthermost recesses of my section of the country, pouring the wealth of that land into the laps of these people in New York and Chicago and Boston. The stockholders and bondholders pay the income tax, but they get it from that supposedly impoverished country. Where do they get it from? Who should have the credit for it—the man who sits in New York in a swivel chair and pays it or the toilers in the mines and in the forests and on the farms who produce it?

Yet gentlemen would raise that question of the payment of the income tax. Destroy the western and southern country to-day if you will. Let it be destroyed and wiped off the map. New York and Chicago and Boston and the other great cities of the land will see the grass growing in their streets and the cattle straying into their brownstone fronts. [Applause.]

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Of course there is no doubt but that the Seaboard Air Line and the Atlantic Coast Line and the Southern Railway have made the South what it is?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, there is a good deal of difference of opinion. The South made them, while they made the South.

Mr. HULBERT. Well, you raised the money in cities like New York, Chicago, Boston, Baltimore, and Philadelphia for investment in the railways of the South.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. They forged mortgages on the living and plastered the unborn with fictitious debts to get the money. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I did not raise that question myself, and if I could not defeat a bill without appealing to sentiments that ought to have been dead years ago I would not stand upon the floor of Congress and attempt to do it. I view this from a national standpoint. I want to see the day come when there shall be a building, modest though it may be, in every town of presidential size to take care of the post-office business of this country. You can do it, and do it for less money than the present service is now costing you. The Government can get money for 3 per cent. You are paying from 6 to 15 per cent for rent for inferior, unsuitable, and insanitary quarters in almost all the cases. And you can put up a pretty nice little Government building in some of these towns for $10,000 or $15,000, or $20,000. It can be done; a building that will be a credit to the Government, and one that will be economical in the administration of its affairs. I want to see the time come when this will be done, and when the flag of the United States shall float upon every one of these buildings for every secular day in the year. [Applause.]

The bill now under consideration, and which has caused such a storm of criticism and misrepresentation to be leveled at the heads of the members of this committee and of Congress, carries upon its face total authorizations amounting to $37,201,200, but a considerable portion of this amount should not be charged to the pending bill.

The Department of Justice building, carried in this bill, was authorized by a previous Congress, and the $3,000,000 which it is to cost should be deducted from the total.

In the case of Dallas, Tex., the committee has provided for the sale of the present Government holdings in that city for not less than $1,000,000, which likewise should be deducted.

The item for Rock Hill, S. C., appears upon its face to carry $125,000, but provision is made for the sale of the present property, which at the lowest estimate will bring $25,000, which should be deducted.

At Okmulgee, Okla., there is on the face of the bill an authorization of $135,000—$65,000 for the purchase of property from the Creek Nation worth more than $100,000, and therefore $35,000 should be deducted from that item.

At Pittsburgh, Pa., the bill carries an item for $50,000 for the enlargement of the present post-office building, and it also carries an authorization for the sale of the lot purchased by the Government several years ago at a cost of $940,000. The amount for which this lot is to be sold is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, but surely it should bring as much as $500,000, which would entitle the bill to a further reduction of $450,000.

The National Guard Armory in the city of Washington appears upon its face to carry an authorization of $800,000, but it is provided that one-half of this shall be paid for by the District of Columbia, and therefore the bill should be further reduced $400,000.

Greenwood, S. C., $25,000; San Juan, P. I., $62,200; Washington, D. C., equipment shops, $200,000.

It should be further reduced by subtracting $62,200 for property at San Juan, P. I., and $25,000 for property at Greenwood, S. C., to be sold, and $200,000 for equipment shops at Washington, D. C., stricken from the bill.

Hagerstown, Md., carries an authorization of $100,000, but $30,000 of this has been authorized in a previous bill, and therefore that amount should be deducted.

Then there is an item in the bill for an increase of $250,000 for Syracuse, N. Y., but it is likewise provided that the present property shall be sold for not less than $250,000, which is to be covered into the Treasury, and therefore the total of the bill should be further reduced by $250,000 on this account.

It will be seen further that for Duluth, Minn., there is an item for $300,000 for the construction of a building upon a lot now owned by the Government. There is a further provision for the sale of the building now occupied for a price not less than $150,000, which, of course, should be deducted from the total of the bill.

These deductions amount to $5,627,200, which, subtracted from the total as stated, leaves the bill carrying in new authorizations $31,574,000.

The gentleman from Wisconsin repeatedly in his speech refers to the omnibus public-buildings bill of March 4, 1913, as a "Democratic public-buildings bill." Mr. Chairman, the act of March 4, 1913, did originate in a Democratic House of Representatives, but a Republican Senate sat at the other end of the Capitol and a Republican President, Mr. Taft, sat in the White House.

When the 1913 bill left the House it carried a little over $25,000,000; but when it was finally approved by the President, it carried over $42,000,000, this increase being made by the Senate. The fact is, that if it had not been for the insistence of the House conferees, the bill would have carried vastly more than $42,000,000. I mention these facts in no spirit of political controversy, but simply in the interest of the truth of history. The act of March 4, 1913, was constructed by a Democratic House and a Republican Senate, and was approved by a Republican President, and therefore it is not what the gentleman from Wisconsin says it is: "The Democratic public-buildings bill of 1913."

Mr. Chairman, this is the first omnibus public-building bill reported by the Public Buildings Committee since 1913, and therefore a period of about four years has elapsed since the approval of the last omnibus public-buildings bill. In 1906 an omnibus public-buildings bill was passed and approved by the President on June 30 of that year. That this bill when reported to the House carried a total of $21,061,000, from which $500,000 should be deducted on account of the sale of the old buildings at Atlanta, Ga., and Houston, Tex., leaving a net authorization of $20,561,000. To this the Senate added $7,038,000, and the act as finally approved carried $27,599,000.

The next omnibus public-buildings bill was approved on May 30, 1908, and when it was reported to the House, it carried authorizations amounting to $23,128,000. The Senate added amendments of over $10,000,000, and the act as it was finally approved carried $33,368,500.

The next omnibus public-buildings bill was approved June 25, 1910, and when reported to the House carried a total of $22,383,500, and to this the Senate added over $10,000,000, and the act as finally approved carried $33,011,500. It will be noted that these three omnibus public-buildings bills, running from June 30, 1906, to June 25, 1910, were all passed and approved within a period of four years, and that they carried in the aggregate $93,979,000.

Now, in no spirit of controversy, but as stated, simply in the interest of the truth of history, I desire to say—and I would not say this if the gentleman from Wisconsin had not raised the issue—that these three bills carrying $93,979,000 in a period of four years were every one passed when the Republican Party had absolute and undisputed control of the House, Senate, and the Presidency. Since the Democratic Party has been in absolute control of both Houses of Congress and the Presidency, for a period now of four years, we have reported but one omnibus public-buildings bill, and it carries only $31,574,000, or about one-third of what the three bills referred to carried in the four-year period mentioned.

I mention these facts, Mr. Chairman, not to condemn our friends on the other side of the aisle; not to intimate that they did anything wrong; because I believe that this Government can indulge in no better legislation than in taking care of the internal improvements of the country and having proper facilities for the conduct of the public business. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not attempting to follow the gentleman from Wisconsin in his wild meanderings with reference to the 1913 bill. That bill has passed into and belongs to history. I desire to discuss the pending bill, and meet, if I may, the objections that have been raised to it.

It has been charged by various metropolitan newspapers and magazines, and reiterated by the gentleman from Wisconsin upon this floor, that this bill is a sectional bill; and in order to prove his statements, he undertakes to draw comparisons as to the number of items contained in the bill for certain Southern States and the number of items contained in the bill for certain Northern States.

The utter fallacy of his reasoning is apparent upon the face of it. For instance, he compares the States of Alabama and Michigan. Alabama, he says, has 10 items in the bill and Michigan, he states, has 10 items in the bill. He then proceeds to show the amount of income taxes paid by Alabama and the amount of income taxes paid by Michigan, with the idea, I presume, that these buildings should be handed out to the States in proportion to the amount of income taxes they pay. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the oldest legislator upon this floor has never heard such a theory of legislative government advanced. He makes the statement that Alabama has 10 congressional districts and that Michigan has 13. Therefore, I presume, he means us to infer that if Alabama gets 10 items in the bill, Michigan ought to have 13. The gentleman from Wisconsin, if his ideas were to obtain in the construction of an omnibus public-buildings bill, would have a real scientific "pork" distribution.

But, Mr. Chairman, let us see if Michigan has been discriminated against. I judge that he states the items correctly and Alabama has 10 items and Michigan has 10 items. If you will foot up these items in dollars and cents you will find that while Alabama gets $460,000 in the bill, Michigan gets the munificent sum of $1,712,500, and yet we have discriminated against Michigan.

The gentleman right on the next page of his speech compares Kentucky and Massachusetts. He says that Kentucky and Massachusetts each have 13 items in the bill, but Kentucky only paid $576,957 income taxes in 1915, whereas Massachusetts paid $4,536,141 of income taxes the same year. He also mentions the fact that Kentucky has only 11 congressional districts while Massachusetts has 16. If the gentleman will again count up these items in dollars and cents he will find that Kentucky gets $310,000 in this bill, while Massachusetts gets the magnificent sum of $2,805,000, or more than nine times as much. This is indeed a sectional bill and Massachusetts has been very much discriminated against.

Again, he compares Illinois and North Carolina; that Illinois has 13 items in the bill and North Carolina has 16. Illinois paid income taxes of $5,654,151, while North Carolina only paid $381,078. He also mentions the further fact that North Carolina has only 10 congressional districts, while Illinois has 27. Again I call on the gentleman to take his pencil and figure up in dollars and cents what these two States get in the pending bill. North Carolina items amount to only $334,000, while Illinois gets the princely sum of $4,865,000.

The gentleman then compares my own State of Florida with the State of Minnesota. He says each State has 7 items in the bill. Florida has only 4 congressional districts while Minnesota has 10, and Florida paid only $229,509 in income taxes, while Minnesota paid $2,033,523. If the gentleman will take his pencil again, he will find that the entire State of Florida only gets $135,000 in this bill, while Minnesota gets $776,000 in the bill.

I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Wisconsin in his wonderful figuring thought he had reached a point where there could be no discussion when he compared the State of Georgia to the three States of Iowa, Maine, and New Hampshire. He figures that Georgia has only 12 congressional districts; that there are 17 districts in the three States; that Georgia only paid $440,000 in income taxes, whereas these three States, including Vermont, four States, paid $1,859,091 in income taxes. Again, Mr. Chairman, I call upon the gentleman from Wisconsin to consider the matter in dollars and cents. If he will do this, he will find that while those three States that he mentions got 19 items in the bill, and the State of Georgia also got 19 items in the bill, he will find that Georgia's items only amount to $216,000, while the three States he mentions get, in the aggregate, $1,126,500.

The gentleman then compares his own State of Wisconsin with the State of Tennessee. He says that Wisconsin gets 10 items and Tennessee gets 9 items; Wisconsin has 11 congressional districts and Tennessee has 10; Tennessee paid $410,204 in income taxes and Wisconsin paid $875,352, or a little more than twice as much, and yet when we come to dollars and cents we find that the State of Tennessee in this entire bill gets only $100,000, while the State of Wisconsin gets $487,000, and while Wisconsin pays twice as much income taxes as Tennessee, she gets in the bill nearly six times as much in appropriations.

The gentleman then compares the great State of New York with the State of Missouri. He says that each of them has 21 items in the bill; that Missouri has only 16 congressional districts and New York has 43; that Missouri paid only $2,789,965, while New York paid $45,230,685. Let the gentleman again abandon the idea of items and come to dollars and cents. He will find that Missouri gets $1,679,000 in this bill, while New York gets $2,268,000.

The gentleman from Wisconsin states that the 32 most important House committeees, Mr. FITZGERALD is the only chairman from any Northern State. I do not know which he designates as the 32 most important, but the fact remains that the Hon. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK, of Ohio, is chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, an important committee; Hon. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, of Ohio, is chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, one of the most important committees; Hon. MARTIN D. FOSTER, of Illinois, is chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining; Hon. MARTIN A. MORRISON, of Indiana, is chairman of the Committee on Patents; Hon. JOHN A. KEY, of Ohio, is chairman of the Committee on Pensions; and there are others. Why, in the face of these facts, does the gentleman make such a statement?

The gentleman makes the statement that it is not a rule to consider places of less than $6,000 postal receipts for the purchase of a site, or less than $10,000 for the construction of a building, and states further that one hundred or more projects in this bill violate the $10,000 rule, and that the House rejected such a proposition by nearly 100 majority. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the rule to which he refers is a part of the law of the land, enacted in the omnibus bill of March 4, 1913. I shall not go through with all of the misstatements which occur in the gentleman's speech against this bill. Time will not permit it. However, I desire to call attention to one statement which he makes which is a fair sample of his criticism of the entire bill. In referring to the 1913 bill, he says:

> Think what joy came to Marianna, Fla., with its 1,915 souls, upon learning that a good shepherd has given to its people a $70,000 monument at $35 per capita. Think of Kissimmee, with 2,157 souls, now living on a stream dry eight months in the year—

And so forth.

Mr. Chairman, it is true Marianna shows by the 1910 census to have a population of 1,915, but Marianna is one of the most rapidly growing towns in Florida, located in a rich agricultural region, and to-day has a population of at least 3,000 people, and in addition to the post office, which has the required amount of postal receipts, the United States District Court for that district holds terms at Marianna, and the $70,000 was to provide a building capable of taking care of the post office and Federal court.

With reference to Kissimmee, I desire to say that Kissimmee is a town to-day of at least 4,000 people and it is not on a "stream" at all. The gentleman is a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and he has had a great deal to say about the river and harbor bill, and it would be supposed that the gentleman would have some little knowledge as to the geography of this country, at least, so far as it affected navigable streams. The city of Kissimmee, Fla., is located on Lake Tohopekaliga and is at least 70 miles from the Kissimmee River, to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers.

Again, he refers to Key West—the "little city" gets $80,000—and asks this question, "Is that the site secured by a representative of the Flagler road who haunted the committee before the 1913 bill was reported?" Mr. Chairman, I can not understand the recklessness with which some gentlemen will make statements about an important matter. The gentleman does not say that the "representative of the Flagler road haunted the committee," but he does make that charge, by inuendo, by asking the question, "Is that the site secured by the representative of the Flagler road who haunted the committee?" I want to say, Mr. Chairman—and I speak with authority—that no "representative of the Flagler road," either verbally or in writing, ever said one word to the committee about the item of a site for the city of Key West. No representative of the Flagler road ever offered any intimation that the Flagler road desired the Government to buy a site at Key West. I think I know to what the gentleman refers, but he is sadly off with reference to the facts. The city of Key West at one time had a representative in Washington, in the person of Col. T. J. L. Brown, now deceased. The city of Key West paid him a salary to look after certain matters of theirs in the departments. He was in no sense a representative of the Flagler road, but was a representative of the city of Key West. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the city of Key West is peculiar to itself. It sits in the Gulf of Mexico on a very small island. It is a thriving city of some thirty or forty thousand population. It is the extreme southern point in the United States and occupies a very strategic position for this Government. It will undoubtedly at some time in the progress of our affairs be made a great naval base for the United States. It has already a great harbor and is a flourishing, thriving little city, and lots are extremely high. Mr. Flagler had just finished building his road "across the sea" from the mainland of Florida to the city of Key West, at an expense of millions of dollars to himself, and Key West, with its Federal court, with its post-office business, with its internal revenue, with its customs service, with its immigration officials, and all these activities of the Government, needed, and now needs badly, more room in which to conduct the public business. If ever an item was justified in the bill, the item for Key West is certainly justified.

Mr. Chairman, as another evidence that the gentleman from Wisconsin does not understand the pending bill, I want to call attention to the fact that he states that in this bill Nogales, Ariz., gets $120,000, while the fact is that the 1913 bill authorized $110,000 to secure a site and building for a customhouse and $10,000 for a separate post-office site. The present bill simply consolidates these items and makes the $120,000 available to buy one site and erect one building for all purposes. This the gentleman from Wisconsin could have ascertained by simply reading the bill.

The gentleman also inveighs against Flagstaff and Yuma, both of these towns being located in the State of Arizona. Flagstaff in 1905 had postal receipts amounting to $5,972.02, but in 1915, so rapid had been the growth of the place, they showed $15,850.55. The bill carries $7,000 for a site at Flagstaff, and yet the gentleman from Wisconsin denounces this as unwarranted extravagance. Yuma, Ariz., had postal receipts in 1905 amounting to $5,807.77, but in 1915 the annual postal receipts were $14,038.77. In addition to the post office, the customs service, Interior Department, Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Labor each have officials at Yuma to be housed, and the bill only carries $6,000 for a site. But, Mr. Chairman, I shall take up the items in the bill separately and demonstrate that the committee has not been extravagant and has not violated any rule. Let it be understood in the beginning that the act of March 4, 1913, provided that no building should be erected in a town or city unless the postal receipts amounted to $10,000 annually and that no site should be authorized to be purchased unless the annual postal receipts amounted to $6,000. This, of course, applied to towns and cities where there was no Federal activity other than the post office. Under the rule and under the law, if a town had other Federal activities, then it was not within this inhibition. In other words, a town might have only six or seven thousand dollars in postal receipts, but if a Federal court was held there, or if there was a customs office, internal revenue, Forestry Service, and other Government activities, this $10,000 and $6,000 limit would not apply. I want to say that in the framing of the bill now pending it appeared that there were a number of towns and cities with no Federal activity except the post office; and where the receipts did not reach $10,000 annually but where the Government had already purchased a site, the committee decided that it would be better to arrange for the erection of a building along modest lines at such places rather than to allow the land which the Government already owned to lie idle, and it will be found that there are a number of cases of this character in the bill. With that understanding, I invite your attention to the bill itself, and in discussing it I shall only refer to those places which have been criticized either by the gentleman from Wisconsin or some of the newspapers and magazines which have seen fit to attack it.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have shown that this is not a sectional bill. I think I have shown that conclusively. I think I have pointed out all the items against which attacks have been made; but if gentlemen point out other particular items in addition, I will make answer to them and put them in the RECORD.

But I would like to know why this sudden change of mind has come on the part of some gentlemen who have always stood for this kind of legislation, who have stood for rushing it through without its being considered at all, and who now oppose it when we propose to consider the bill in all its details.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I am in a sort of a paradoxical situation. I am a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and have been for a good many years. I have helped to report and pass some bills in the past, and I have no patience with a whole lot of the criticism that is being heaped upon public-building propositions in general. I think that the cry of "pork" is very largely buncombe; but I am opposed to this bill for other reasons.

In the beginning I am going to say this much for the chairman of the committee [Mr. CLARK of Florida]: I agree with him in many of his positions, and he is an accomplished authority on public-buildings matters.

Some one here has said that public buildings in the smaller cities do not pay. Courthouses do not pay in cash returns, schoolhouses do not pay, jails do not pay, libraries do not pay, and even good comfortable homes do not pay in a cash sense of the word.

Another thing: It is charged that in these public-buildings bills cities are provided for that are not deserving, and you will observe that that hue and cry usually comes from the big city newspaper and the big city Representatives, who have had all the so-called pork they want, and, dog-in-the-manger like, do not want anybody else to have any.

But I am opposed to the enactment of this bill at this time for two or three reasons. First of all, I want to disagree with the chairman of my committee in the proposition that we ought to couple the good legislation that is in this bill with the provisions for a whole lot of public buildings, because we can not place the two before the country without exciting suspicion that we are trying to put something across. I am heartily in favor of the provisions of this bill providing for doing away with the present inefficient management of the public-buildings department of this Government. I am heartily in favor of taking out of the hands of the Treasury Department the possibility of so manipulating the planning and construction of public buildings that certain interests apparently have influence in the work that is done. I know you men on the other side of the aisle who smile and nod assent to this statement are agreeing with me, and will also do so when I say that this situation is not of recent origin. It has been prevailing there in all of the 9 or 10 years that I have been here, and will continue to prevail there until we enact some legislation that will correct it. Therefore that part of this bill is wholesome, necessary, and important legislation. But the fear I have is that when this bill goes to another branch of the Congress of the United States the influence of the Treasury Department and of the American Institute of Architects, which, I hear, are opposing this bill, might be sufficient that this feature of the bill will be stricken out and the public buildings will be left in, and the present inefficient management of public-buildings construction in the United States will continue to have charge of these improvements that we know are needed, and which under the present course of procedure can not be accomplished economically nor within the next 6 or 8 or 10 years.

There is another thing that I ought to speak of, to be fair to the committee. I have not been as active in the consideration of this bill and this legislation as I might have been, because a misfortune of life prevented my being present during much of the time the most important consideration of the bill was being given. And still another thing, I have to talk a little about my own political household affairs in this speech, and I do not like very well to do that; but I am here as a representative of the best interests of people of my district and of my country. I have been sent here a good many times, regardless of politics, and therefore I do believe that I ought to say what I am going to say about this bill, and that I ought to vote against it, and continue to vote against public-buildings bills until we can have matters corrected in the Treasury Department, in such a way as to give the country what it needs, and give it in such a way that the people will not be unduly taxed in order to do it. Also, we are expending at this time enormous sums of money, and no one of us individually is responsible for that. It seems to be the emotion of the hour that we shall indulge in costly and experimental enterprises like Alaskan railway building, ship purchases, high commissions, and so forth, and we are piling up these expenses on the people so rapidly that our Ways and Means Committee are now sitting up and burning the midnight oil in order to try to provide ways by which we can get the money from the people to pay for these unusually heavy and more or less questionable appropriations of the Congress.

But what I especially want to say in this respect is that the present organization of the Public Buildings Division in the Treasury Department is incompetent. From many Members of Congress I hear complaints of the utter disregard of public opinion by the Treasury Department in locating and building public buildings in out-of-the-way and objectionable places and in ridiculously extravagant ways. I say I have heard this from many Members, and in all fairness to my own home city and to myself I want to give you one instance of my own observation. In my home city every business man who could be seen by an unbiased committee petitioned the Treasury Department to locate the public building there in the business center, and agreed to raise the necessary money to pay the extra cost of the location, where the post office has been satisfactorily located for many, many years. But instead, a location was selected immediately across a narrow street from the county and city jail, fronting the cell department of the jail, and immediately across an alley from a large horse-breeding barn.

When I appealed to the officials, stating that it was not fair to the people of my city that the women and children for all time to come should be compelled to betake themselves to such an environment to get their mail and to look after their post-office business, the reply came back virtually that it was none of the public's business, that the Treasury Department assumed full responsibility, and I understand that reply came from a man whose chief qualification for the important business position which he holds was a schooling as publicity agent for some special interests or some special man. Under the present conditions, gentlemen, when we put through an authorization like this, the Treasury Department's Public Building Division takes it, and by the time it gets ready to act, by the time it has delayed matters sufficiently, so that it can go to the Secretary of the Treasury and say, "We have to have outside help from architects," the price of real estate in that city has so increased that the lands that might have been secured to the satisfaction of the people have so rapidly increased in value they can not be purchased for the amount of the appropriation. The result is that they come back to Congress for increased authorizations or else go out to some out of the way place that is unsatisfactory and inconvenient to all concerned and who must necessarily furnish the money to pay for the improvement.

Mr. BURNETT. Will my colleague permit me just a brief question?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it not the purpose of this bill to remedy just that condition by taking it away from the control of these very officials? And let me ask the gentleman, if we do not pass this bill, will not that same condition prevail as to all the authorizations that have heretofore been made?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I answered that in my opening statement by saying that this feature of the bill is indeed commendable, and I heartily subscribe to it. But I fear that this feature of the bill being opposed, as I understand it is, by the Treasury Department and the American Institute of Architects there might be sufficient influence exerted on another branch of the Congress to defeat that feature of the bill and then we would be left with simply the appropriations and expenditures in charge of men who I say—and I know what I am talking about—are unfit to take charge of public-building enterprises. That is the difficulty about this legislation.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman, is that we ought to be careful in our course of procedure at this particular time. You know that the frenzy of militarism seems to so possess the people of our country, and especially in the big cities, that we have been called upon to make enormous appropriations. We have to raise the money to pay these bills somehow and some time, and therefore I am opposed to this bill as I have opposed a good many others when we have appropriated funds for things for which we could well afford to wait. I believe that the burden of taxation that we are now shouldering on the people of this country is going to be felt for almost a generation to come.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. I know that the gentleman is honestly opposing this bill, judging from his experience and perfect fairness, but I would like to ask him this question: Will it make any difference in the amount of money actually appropriated whether we pass this bill or not? In other words, is it not true that the total sum appropriated for each year runs from eight to ten million dollars, and that this bill will not increase the yearly amount appropriated if we do pass the bill?

Mr. BARNHART. I might answer that best by saying that if it does not cost anything to build $40,000,000 worth of public buildings it will not increase the appropriation, but if it does cost $40,000,000 it is some time going to cost it.

Mr. TOWNER. That does not hardly answer my question. My proposition is that, no matter what authorizations are made, the Treasury Department is sending to the Committee on Appropriations never exceeding eight or ten million dollars a year. I think the gentleman knows that, and if we do pass this bill these annual appropriations will not be increased. Of course, I do not mean that the total amount eventually will not be increased. The gentleman knows that we must build new buildings, and unless the present policy is changed, the annual appropriation for this purpose will not be over eight or ten million dollars each year.

Mr. BARNHART. The answer to that is that it simply authorizes so much more for appropriations, and when the buildings are authorized it becomes the duty of the Committee on Appropriations under existing law to make appropriations and provide the money from time to time to carry out the building program that we are attempting to adopt. Yes; it is spending money.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would like to say a word in reply to what the gentleman from Iowa has said, that if the assertion of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds can be relied upon, and I think it can, if the Supervising Architect's Office is abolished, that in 18 months they will get caught up in the work, then this $40,000,000 would be appropriated for, as the plans for the buildings would be ready.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I know that the doctrine that the needs of our home people should have some share of the plunging we are doing in expenditures is forceful and consistent, and yet, if we are to save our country from oppressive tax burdens, we must quit piling up appropriations. And especially is this important where we have men in charge of expenditures who are demonstrating that they are not competent to make practical use of the money to be expended by them. For these reasons I believe that this bill ought to be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, on December 16, 1916, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, said in part as follows:

> I have heretofore referred to the fact that the estimates submitted to Congress disclose that there will be a deficit in the next fiscal year of $284,000,000, but that does not tell all. * * * Other items will be submitted from time to time, of which we now have no knowledge, but it is clearly apparent that in the next fiscal year there will be a deficit in the Treasury in excess of $300,000,000.

In the Washington Times of January 7, 1917, we read in part as follows:

> REVENUE PROBLEM PUZZLE TO SOLONS—FINANCE COMMITTEES OF BOTH HOUSES WRESTLING WITH PROSPECTS OF DEFICIT—COFFEE TARIFF PROPOSED—LEADERS FEAR IT WILL RAISE STORM OVER COUNTRY IF INSISTED UPON.
> While the Ways and Means Committee are wrestling with the revenue question at one end of the Capitol, Senators on the Finance Committee, especially Democrats, are racking their brains over it.
> Stared in the face by prospects of an enormous deficit, the leaders are wondering how to meet it and not stir up the wrath of the country.
> COFFEE TAX PROPOSED.
> The coffee tariff is one of the things that is proposed. It seems sure to make trouble if insisted upon. Strong opposition is felt in the country either to a tariff on tea or coffee, and this feeling is reflected in Congress.

Why should the "wrath of the country" be stirred up because it is proposed to tax the necessities of life in order to give Eminence, Ky., with its population of 1,274, its postal receipts of $4,402.53 a $40,000 building at an expense of $3,700 per annum to the Government? In addition, Eminence was granted a $6,850 site in 1915.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. What place is the gentleman referring to?

Mr. JAMES. To Eminence, Ky.

Why should the people of the country complain about paying a tax on every cup of tea they drink as long as they have the satisfaction of knowing that Falmouth, Ky., with its population of 1,180 and its postal receipts of $5,638.24 is to receive a public monument of $25,000 at a yearly expense of $3,480? This in addition to the site of $5,000 granted in 1914.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman state what place he is referring to?

Mr. JAMES. Falmouth, Ky., where the receipts are $5,638.

Will not every cup of coffee taste sweeter, although taxed, when you think that part of your tax goes to maintain a public building in the little town of Rossville, Ga., with its $5,000 site and $25,000 building and its postal receipts of $8,062.48? Why worry about the $3,742.50 it costs each year to maintain? Population, 1,201.

Would not your chocolate or cocoa taste better if you knew that your tax was being used for the partial benefit of a public building of $82,000 in Lewisburg, W. Va., with its 803 population and its postal receipts of $8,017.37? Why worry about the $7,000 annual expense?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. JAMES. I will.

In the late campaign in my district some of the supporters of my Democratic opponent criticized me, because they claimed I had not been sufficiently active in securing public buildings, pensions, and so forth, for my district.

One Democratic orator who calls himself "colonel"—and whose claim to "colonel" is as much a fake as the affidavits he used in securing himself a pension—claimed that if my opponent was elected he would secure "a public building inside of two years or he would know the reason why."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to state that the last quarter receipts at Falmouth show $1,105.15, which multiplied by four would make $6,020.64. That is one of the towns in which a site had already been provided.

Mr. JAMES. I so mentioned.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, as to Rossville, Ga., that is directly across the line from Tennessee, and Georgia runs right through the town, and the population is only given for the Georgia side, and the post office is on that side. The receipts are $9,582.96.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman in these estimates give the receipts of the returns for the last quarter as a basis for the yearly returns?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We have receipts for the last fiscal year, and in order to determine what it would be for this fiscal year we take the last quarter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman realize that the receipts of the quarter ending January 1 are much larger than the receipts for the other three quarters, because it is the holiday season?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not always.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will say to the gentleman that I have seen a number of instances where it was directly the contrary to what is stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin; that is, where the receipts for the last quarter were not as large as the receipts for the preceding quarters.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I admitted that I was against public buildings in towns where the population and the postal receipts did not warrant their erection. I admitted that I had voted against the Key bill, the Ashbrook bill, and that I expected if sent back to continue to vote that way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Has the gentleman determined upon what figure would warrant a town in having a building erected?

Mr. JAMES. I will come to that later. I stated further that I expected to vote against any pension bill that was intended to aid wealthy pensioners, deserters, and those whose only sickness resulted from indecent diseases.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Not now. Every one of my Spanish War comrades, except one, who secured a pension by false affidavits, and another who wanted to, but could not, approved of my stand. Neither of these belonged to my regiment. I am willing to state that under the law to-day it is possible for a man who is in the Regular Army for two months to desert and be apprehended, tried at a general court-martial, and found guilty of desertion, and sent to jail for one or two years for desertion, receive a dishonorable discharge at the end of that time for desertion, and still be eligible for a pension.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. How could that be possible? Will the gentleman please explain?

Mr. JAMES. Under the law all that is necessary is for a man to receive a discharge. A man who served four years in the Civil War and who received an honorable discharge, or who served in the Spanish-American War, and who received an honorable discharge, is exactly upon the same basis as the man who deserts. All that is necessary is that you shall have a discharge.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. But he must have an honorable discharge?

Mr. JAMES. No.

Mr. LANGLEY. What pension law does the gentleman refer to? I am afraid my friend has not carefully examined the pension laws of the country, although he is on one of the committees, I know. I am curious to know.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, this is the last time I shall yield for an interruption, but I want to read a letter that I received from the Bureau of Pensions in order to prove what I say. I had introduced a bill, after finding a man could desert and get a pension, providing that a deserter could not receive a pension. A short time afterwards I had a letter from one Stuhlmann, and upon looking him up I found that he not only deserted the Army but deserted his wife and family. He had read an editorial in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch favoring the bill. He had a wrong impression of what my bill was. He thought it was to pension deserters, although it was the exact opposite. I found that he had applied for a pension, and I shall read a letter from the Bureau of Pensions to show that it is possible to do this:

In reply to your letter of the 5th instant, relative to the claim for pension under the general law, No. 1408625, of William D. Stuhlmann, whose address is Evansville, Mont., and who served in Troop G, Eleventh United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, I have the honor to inform you that Mr. Stuhlmann enlisted May 12, 1904, deserted July 21, 1904, was apprehended August 15, 1904, tried by a general court-martial, found guilty of desertion, and sentenced to be dishonorably discharged and to be confined at hard labor for 12 months. So much of the sentence as provided for confinement at hard labor for 12 months was remitted, and the soldier was dishonorably discharged December 3, 1904.

Mr. Stuhlmann has never been allowed pension. His claim based on disease of kidneys and bladder was rejected April 17, 1913, on the ground that said disabilities were not incurred while in line of duty, but, according to the claimant's statement, were incurred about August 12, 1904, at which time he was in desertion from his command, as shown by the records of the War Department.

Mr. LANGLEY. Let me interrupt, please. There is only one class of pensioners who have a status notwithstanding a dishonorable discharge, and that is where they prove their suffering now is on account of a disability contracted while they were in the service and in the line of duty.

Mr. JAMES. But they get it in spite of the fact that they have received a dishonorable discharge for desertion.

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly; and that is the only class of cases; but the great mass of pensioners are now pensioned under other statutes. I do not want the gentleman to create the idea that deserters are pensioned.

Mr. JAMES. I stated in the Regular Army. The letter then goes on as follows:

On January 21, 1916, he filed another claim based on disease of kidneys and bladder, and on February 19, 1916, said claim was dismissed as a duplicate of the former rejected claim.

Papers recently filed here now being considered with a view to determining whether reopening of the soldier's rejected claims is warranted, and the result of such consideration will be promptly communicated to both you and the claimant.

Very truly, yours,

G. M. SALTZGABER,
Commissioner.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. But he did not get the pension.

Mr. JAMES. He will get it. Mr. Chairman, in spite of the fact that my opponent, through financial assistance from the Democratic national committee, the Democratic State central committee, Democratic postmasters, and those who were willing to be, spent about seven times as much money as myself, he is still practicing law, while his Republican opponent was elected by over ten thousand. This is good evidence that one's constituents are not so anxious that their Congressman shall "bring back the bacon" that some people would lead us to believe.

This Congress has spent far more money than it should have spent as it is. Some measures carrying millions this year and millions for years to come went through the House with practically no consideration.

The Ashbrook bill went through very quickly. No one advocating the bill, in report or on the floor, was in position to state very accurately what it would cost. Some thought about $6,000,000 the first year. There have been 144,000 claims filed for increase already, of which 133,000, or approximately $13,300,000, have already been allowed, and the bill has only been in effect a few months. In addition, there have been 10,664 original claims from widows who remarried and whose second husbands are dead; 24,863 claims have been filed on account of the year having been moved from 1890 to 1915 and about 12,825 other claims. It will cost closer to $25,000,000 than to $6,000,000.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. My recollection is that the rule provides that this discussion shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct in that. The gentleman must confine himself to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. MANN. He is confining himself to it by giving illustrations.

Mr. LANGLEY. A deserter is not an illustration of a public-buildings bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I think he is making a very valuable contribution to this debate.

Mr. LANGLEY. Very well; I do not insist upon the point, though I think the point is well taken.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought not to be so tender when he is hit.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will answer that in my own time.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, when you add to this the flood-control bill, the nitrate-plant bill, the rivers and harbors and similar bills, we have gone far enough, without adding this $35,000,000 more.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his late report, page 21, was absolutely right when he said in part:

I am convinced that the methods pursued by the Congress for the past 15 years of providing Federal buildings through so-called omnibus building bills have resulted in the construction of many public buildings in small towns and localities where they were not needed, and at a cost which is clearly unjustified by any actual requirements of the communities in which they are erected. The conclusion is irresistible that authorizations for public buildings in these small communities are too frequently dictated by local reasons and without regard to the best interests of the Government. In the past two decades the Congress has authorized and appropriated approximately $180,000,000 for public buildings, and the major part of this great sum has been expended on costly structures in small localities, where neither the Government business nor the convenience of the people justified their construction; and while the initial cost of these buildings represents a large waste of public funds, this is not the worst of it. The most serious aspect is this: The annual operation and maintenance of these buildings impose on the Treasury a permanent and constantly increasing burden. There are now more than 1,000 Federal buildings to be operated and maintained, and this number is being increased at the rate of a new building every fourth day in the year. * * * Common sense and business judgment would seem to demand that structures for the transaction of Government business should be authorized only in localities where they are imperatively needed, and that buildings should not be erected where no public necessity can be shown. This result could be accomplished by divorcing the public-buildings question from all local or political considerations, and authorizing no public buildings until a thorough and intelligent investigation of each proposed building or project has been submitted to the Congress. If such reports were followed by the introduction and passage of separate measures to cover each proposed building project, the abuses and evils of the omnibus-bill method would be eradicated.

Part of section 29, pages 61 and 62, provides, in part, that the following information shall be secured: Postal receipts of the last fiscal year; different Federal activities to be provided for; population last Federal census and the preceding one; estimated population; important industries; present needs as to space and probable needs within 10 years; and amount of rent being paid annually. This is very good as far as it goes. It ought also to provide for the reference to the Secretary of the Treasury of every bill for investigation and report; this report should include among the things mentioned above: Approximate cost annually of maintaining such new building, the estimated cost of equipment, estimated cost of repairs, depreciation, and interest on cost of site and building. In his report the Secretary of the Treasury should also state whether in his judgment the needs and interests of the Government service require the enactment of the bill, whether the expense is justified, and also the lowest cost at which a building found necessary or advisable may be erected consistently with economy and efficiency.

I introduced a bill along these lines on April 12, 1916, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings, and which reads as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14535) requiring all public-building bills to be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for investigation and report as to whether proposed buildings and sites are needed and the expenditure justified, and as to the lowest cost at which buildings found necessary may be erected with economy and efficiency.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever a bill is introduced for the erection of a Federal building, or the purchase of a site therefor, or for both such building and site, said bill shall be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury for investigation and report. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shall set forth the following specific information:

First. Population of the municipality, according to the latest Federal or State census, wherein such building is proposed to be erected, and the population as shown by the next preceding Federal census.

Second. Total postal receipts of the office of such municipality for the preceding year; also the postal receipts for the preceding tenth year and the estimated postal receipts for the tenth succeeding year.

Third. Total square-foot space at present occupied by the several branches of the public service and estimated square-foot area required in new building to accommodate the present business and for the increase of business during the succeeding 10 years.

Fourth. Annual rental of building, or buildings, then being used for such post-office purposes and for other branches of the Federal service.

Fifth. Amount of expenditures for the erection of such new building recommended by the Treasury Department.

Sixth. Approximate annual cost of maintaining such new building, the estimated cost of equipment, estimated cost of repairs, depreciation, and interest on cost of site and building.

Seventh. The branches of the Government to be accommodated and such other items as may enable him to make a comprehensive report to Congress.

SEC. 2. That in ascertaining the needs of the Government service he shall consult such other departments of the Government as require accommodation in the city or town for which the bill has been introduced, and in such cases as he deems it necessary or desirable, shall cause examinations of the conditions involved to be made locally and reported upon to him by employees especially designated for the purpose.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall lay before Congress the result of his investigation, and shall state whether, in his judgment, the needs and interests of the Government service require the enactment of the bill, whether the expense is justified, and also the lowest cost at which a building found necessary or advisable may be erected consistently with economy and efficiency.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to submit to Congress annually estimates of appropriation for the compensation, traveling expenses, and subsistence of such force of inspectors as he deems necessary to make the examinations locally as authorized in section 2 hereof.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY. Are these towns in the bill?

Mr. JAMES. I do not say they are all in the bill, but these are bills introduced.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to ask the gentleman this: Greenville, Ga., is not in this bill.

Mr. JAMES. I do not say Greenville; I said Booneville, Ky.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, it is not——

Mr. JAMES. I did not say it was in the bill. I said the following bills have been introduced.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the gentleman on the ground that he is not discussing the subject matter of the bill. There is no provision for these towns.

Mr. JAMES. I will say, Mr. Chairman, these are bills gentlemen would like to put in if they could.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the whole subject matter of public buildings and grounds is under discussion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Although it may affect the risibilities of the genial gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Kentucky is not out of humor, he will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, but he merely wanted to see orderly procedure.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to talk a little while about McKee, Ky., because that seems to be the worst pork item introduced at this session of Congress.

Mr. LANGLEY. Suppose the gentleman discusses Hazard, Ky.; that is in the bill.

Mr. JAMES. I believe that Congress ought to be as careful in spending the people's money as they would their own.

No business man doing a business of $1,000 a month would think of putting up a $60,000 building to carry on his business, as the interest would more than equal his net profits, and yet Uncle Sam is doing this every year.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] well expressed the truth when he said some time ago, "There are half a dozen places in my district where Federal buildings are being erected at a cost to the Government far in excess of the actual needs of the communities. Take Uvalde, my home town, for instance. We are putting up a post office down there at a cost of $60,000 when a $5,000 building would be entirely adequate for our needs."

One of the worst examples is the bill introduced for a $75,000 post-office building at McKee, Ky., with a population of 146. The postal receipts amount to only $526 annually, and yet this happy community expects to be favored with a gift from the Treasury of the United States equal to $500 for every man, woman, and child in McKee.

As the postal receipts are only $526 annually I was a little curious to know what it would cost this Government for a post office in this town of 146 people and took the matter up with the Treasury Department, and the following letter explains itself:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 15, 1916.

Hon. W. FRANK JAMES,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Referring further to your leter of the 17th ultimo in regard to the pending public-building bill, and requesting information relative to the probable cost of maintenance, etc., of a Federal building in places similar in size to McKee, Ky., the following data is furnished you:

The department estimate for a building at a place of this size and of similar postal receipts, for post-office purposes only, would probably be $25,000 for the building itself and $5,000 for the site. It is estimated that to furnish the building would require $3,000 additional, making a total outlay of $33,000.

Calculating 3 per cent on this investment, the interest charge would be $990. The yearly depreciation of the building and furniture, together with the approximate cost of annual repairs, would amount to 2½ per cent on the amount invested in the project, exclusive of cost of site, viz, on $28,000, which would be $700. Janitors are not provided for buildings of this size, but an employee known as fireman-laborer at $665 per annum, with a charwoman at $300 per annum, making a total expenditure for this service of $960. The cost of fuel, lights, and other supplies is estimated at $960 per annum.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. NEWTON, Assistant Secretary.

You will note that the Treasury Department figures interest at $990; depreciation on building and furniture at $700 annually; janitor, and so forth, at $960; fuel, lights, and so forth, at about $900; or a total of $3,550. You will also note that the department figures that building would cost $25,000, whereas the bill calls for a $75,000 building. If we figure interest on an additional $50,000, it would make an additional $1,500 for interest alone. What business man would think of spending from $3,550 to $5,000 per year when his receipts amounted to $526 annually?

Sundance, Wyo., with a population of 281 people—only one-half of what it was 20 years ago—is asking for a $75,000 building.

Susanville, Cal., 628 people, wants a $60,000 building.
Booneville, Ky., 236 people, wants a $75,000 building.
Saylersville, Ky., 310 people, wants a $75,000 building.
Franklin, N. C., 379 people, wants a $75,000 building.
And there are many others in the same class.

When a business man gets into a bad business venture, he can go into bankruptcy, but your Uncle Sam keeps on paying out $3,000 and more each year on buildings where the receipts are $526 or less. Indirectly we are all paying the loss.

Personally I believe that only towns that need them should get public buildings, and that the cost of the buildings should depend upon the receipts of the office, and the prospective growth of the town.

In making appropriations for public buildings, some attention ought to be paid to the postal receipts in a town, and its prospective growth.

In 1906, Lander, Wyo., was granted $7,500 for a site, and in 1908 it was granted $115,000 for a building, a total of $122,500. Its population in 1910 was only 1,812, and its postal receipts in 1913 were $7,502.86.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JAMES. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman know what other activities were at Lander, Wyo., except the post office?

Mr. JAMES. I do not.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman think it is fair to state it that way without stating that there are other activities or there were not, whatever it was there?

Mr. JAMES. When the time comes I will put information in the RECORD showing where I get that information.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think I know where the gentleman got it.

Mr. JAMES. Park City, Utah, had nearly twice the population in 1910, its postal receipts were $8,352.76 in 1913, and yet it only received $30,000 for building and site. Population in 1910, 3,439. Nearly twice the population of Lander, more receipts, and only gets about one-fourth as much money.

In the present bill, Tyrone, Pa., asks for $125,000 and receives $80,000—$42,500 less than Lander, Wyo., although its population in 1910 was 7,176 in comparison with the 1,812 of Lander. Its receipts this year are $98,485, as compared with about $7,502.86 of Lander. I can not account for this very material cut except for the fact that the committee knew that the introducer of the bill [Mr. BAILEY] was a pacifist and would not fight for his bill.

In the present bill Newburgh, N. Y., with its population of 27,805 in 1910, its postal receipts of $91,896, receives the same amount as Norwalk, Conn., with its population of 24,211 in 1910, and its postal receipts of $27,246. Each is granted $140,000 in this bill.

The postal receipts of Eminence, Ky., Falmouth, Ky., Green River, Wyo., Mount Olive, N. C., Rossville, Ga., Huntingdon, Tenn., Clearwater, Fla., Hazard, Ky., Lewisburg, W. Va., Norton, Kans., Pittsfield, Ill., Albertville Ala., Attalla, Ala., Barbourville, Ky., combined, amounts to $91,528.62, while Newburgh, N. Y., alone has postal receipts of $91,896, or $367.38 more than the above 14 towns. The population of the 14 towns combined makes 19,234, while Newburgh has 8,571 more than this, or 27,805. Were Newburgh, N. Y., to be judged by the same standards as these 14 towns it would be given $517,350 for building and site instead of the $140,000 granted in this bill. The above towns, some dead and others dying, are granted $487,000 in this bill, in addition to $30,350 previously granted for sites, or a total of $517,350.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I know the gentleman wants to be correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman referred to Norwalk, Conn. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Norwalk and South Norwalk and Rowayton have all been consolidated and that the receipts for those three places for 1913 were $74,041.20. That is the place the building is provided for.

Mr. JAMES. I have not talked about Norwalk.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Norwalk, Conn.?

Mr. JAMES. No, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I thought the gentleman said something about that place.

Mr. JAMES. In 1908 Goldfield, Nev., was awarded $75,000 for building and site. At that time the population was about 18,000. In 1910 it was 4,838, or a decline of about 13,000. The Treasury Department has not yet closed a deal for even a site.

Although the following places have declined in population in the last 10 or 20 years they have been granted additional money to complete buildings. The average business man would not make this error.

Bath, Me., had 10,477 in 1900 and 9,396 in 1910, or a loss of 1,083 in 10 years, and still it received an additional $10,000.

Hinton, W. Va., declined from 3,763 in 1900 to 3,656 in 1910, or a net loss of 107, and yet it received $15,000 more out of Uncle Sam's Treasury.

Narragansett Pier, R. I., had 1,523 in 1900 and only 1,250 in 1910, or a loss of 273—but this remarkable loss of nearly 30 per cent of its population does not prevent it from getting an additional $10,000. It might be said in passing that it has 158 less than it had in 1890.

Park City, Utah, had 3,759 in 1900 and only 3,439—a loss of 320—in 1910, and it also received an additional $10,000 in this bill.

Findlay, Ohio, declined from 18,553 in 1890 to 17,613 in 1900, and a still further decline to 14,858 in 1910—or a net loss of 3,695 in 20 years—and still it gets an additional $50,000 in this bill.

Fort Scott, Kans., has about 1,500 less population than it had 20 years ago, but it has the good fortune to get an additional $5,000 in this bill. Fort Scott had 11,946 in 1890, 10,322 in 1900, and 10,464 in 1910.

Very few business men would think of putting up buildings in towns that are on the decline, but Uncle Sam and his servants are far more generous.

This bill provides for buildings in at least 26 towns that have less population than they had in 1890 or 1900.

Bath, N. Y., had 3,884 in 1910 and 4,994 in 1900, or a loss of 1,010 in 10 years, and asks for $75,000 and received $50,000 for building and site in this bill.

Edenton, N. C., had 3,046 in 1900 and only 2,789 in 1910, a net loss of 257, but is given the sum of $25,000 in this bill.

Green River, Wyo., declined from 1,723 in 1890 to 1,361 in 1900, and a still further decline to 1,313 in 1910—a net loss of 410 in 20 years. Regardless of the fact that it has lost about 25 per cent of its population in 20 years it has the courage to ask for $75,000 for building and site. The committee only allows $25,000 in this bill—$25,000 too much. Postal receipts, by the way, are $4,370.

Holton, Kans., had 2,842 in 1910 and 3,082 in 1900—loss of 240—but is allowed $35,000.

Huntingdon, Tenn., boasted of 1,332 in 1900 and only 1,112 in 1910—a loss of 220—and it secures $25,000 in this bill.

Huntsville, Tex., declined from 2,485 in 1900 to 2,072—a loss of 413 in 10 years—and it gets a $30,000 post-office building and site.

Lyons, N. Y., had 4,475 in 1890 and 4,460 in 1910—a loss of 15 in 20 years—and received $40,000.

Marengo, Iowa, had 2,007 in 1900 and only 1,786 in 1910, and it asks for $50,000 and received $30,000.

Provincetown, Mass., claimed a population of 4,642 in 1890, 4,247 in 1900, and 4,369 in 1910, or a loss of 273 in 20 years, but manages to get away with $30,000 in this bill.

Bowling Green, Mo., declined from 1,902 in 1900 to 1,585 in 1910, or a loss of 317. Bowling Green gets a $40,000 appropriation.

Circleville, Ohio, gets a $65,000 amount, although its population shows a loss of 247 in 10 years—6,744 in 1910 and 6,991 in 1900.

Corning, Iowa, does not fare so well, having to be content with an appropriation of $35,000. Corning shows a loss of 443 in 10 years, having declined from 2,145 in 1900 to 1,702 in 1910.

Eagle Grove, Iowa, also received $35,000 in this bill, although its population also shows a decrease during the last 10 years. It had 3,557 in 1900 and only 3,387 in 1910, or a net loss of 170.

Farmington, Me., although showing a net loss of 78 people in 10 years, receives a $45,000 building and site. It shows a net gain of 3 people in 20 years. Farmington had 3,210 in 1910, 3,288 in 1900, and 3,207 in 1890.

Lewisburg, W. Va., had over 200 less in 1910 than in 1890, and still it gets an $82,000 appropriation. It declined from 1,016 in 1890 to 872 in 1900 to 803 in 1910, a net decline of 213 in 20 years—more than a 20 per cent decline in 20 years. Postal receipts, $8,017.

Lewiston, Ill., declined from 2,504 in 1900 to 2,312 in 1910, and it received $30,000 in this bill.

Galva, Ill., declined from 2,682 in 1900 to 2,498 in 1910, or a loss of 184 in 10 years, and received $45,000 in this bill.

Rogersville, Tenn., has 144 less people in 1910 than it had 10 years before, but gets $25,000 in this bill—1910, 1,242; 1900, 1,386.

Unionville, Mo., goes from 2,050 in 1900 to 2,000 in 1910, but is allowed a present of $30,000.

Algona, Iowa, had 3 less in 1910 than it had in 1900, but does a little better than Unionville in the matter of appropriation, receiving $45,000. Algona had 2,908 in 1910 and 2,911 in 1900.

The population of a town in my own State of Michigan—Marshall—declined from 4,370 in 1900 to 4,236 in 1910, and received a $75,000 appropriation. As the receipts, postal, are over $60,000 annually, it helps the situation somewhat.

Olathe, Kans., had 4,351 in 1900 and only 3,272 in 1910, or a decline of 1,079—practically a 25 per cent decrease in 10 years—and yet it has the good fortune to receive a present of $55,000 from the Treasury of Uncle Sam. Olathe had 3,294 in 1890, or a net loss of 22 in 20 years.

Middletown, Pa., also shows a decline—5,608 in 1900 and 5,374 in 1910, or a loss of 234—and yet it receives an allowance of $65,000 in this bill.

Oswego, another Kansas town, gets a good appropriation, although showing a net loss in 20 years. It lost 257 in 20 years. Oswego had 2,574 in 1890, 2,317 in 1910, and 2,208 in 1900. Oswego gets $50,000 in this bill.

Pittsfield, Ill., went from 2,295 in 1890 to 2,293 in 1900 and to 2,095 in 1910, or a net loss of 200 in 20 years, and still it is allowed $35,000.

Portage, Wis., had a population of 5,459 in 1900 and 5,440 in 1910, and received a public-building appropriation of $57,000 in spite of its 19 loss in 10 years.

St. Johns, another town in my own State, had 3,388 in 1900 and only 3,154 in 1910, or a loss of 234 in 10 years, and yet believes it is entitled to a little gift from the Treasury. It asks for $75,000 for building and site and receives $55,000.

Appropriations are also asked for in this bill for sites in 13 or more towns that have declined in population in the last 10 or 20 years; some of them show very material declines.

Eaton Rapids, of my own State of Michigan, had 2,103 in 1900 and only 2,094 in 1910—loss of 7 in 10 years—and yet is allowed $7,500 for a site.

Ellicott City, Md., declined from 1,488 in 1890 to 1,331 in 1900, and a still further decline to 1,151 in 1910—or a net loss of 337, nearly 25 per cent loss—in 20 years, and yet it asks for and received $7,500 for a site.

The town of Galion, Ohio, declined from 7,282 in 1900 to 7,214 in 1910—loss of 68 in 10 years—and asks for $20,000 for a site alone, and is granted the sum of $15,000 by the committee.

Lawrenceburg, Ind., boasted of a population of 4,326 in 1900 and only 3,930 in 1910—or a loss of 396 in 10 years—and still it is allowed $10,000 for a site by the committee. Lawrenceburg had 4,284 in 1890, or a loss of 354 in 20 years. As the bill as introduced called for $100,000 for building and site, it seems to be doing fairly well for a declining town.

Lewisburg, Pa., received $10,000 for a site, although it shows a loss of 376 in 10 years and a loss of 167 in 20 years. Lewisburg shows 3,081 in 1910, 3,457 in 1900, and 3,248 in 1890. Notwithstanding this remarkable decrease, the bill as introduced called for $100,000 for building and site.

Paris, Mo., declined from 1,487 in 1890 to 1,474 in 1910—loss of 13 in 20 years—and asks and receives the sum of $5,000 for a site.

Ponca City, Okla., gained 1 vote from 1890 to 1900 and then lost 8 from 1900 to 1910—or a net loss of 7 in 20 years—and yet it receives $7,500 for a site. There is nothing slow about Ponca City. The fact that its population declined from 2,528 in 1890 to 2,521 in 1910 does not prevent it from asking for an appropriation of $150,000 for a building and site.

Another town in Missouri, Rich Hill, declined from 4,053 in 1900 to 2,755 in 1910, or a loss of 1,298 in 10 years. This is over a 30 per cent loss, and still it asks for and received $5,000 for a site. I might say in passing that Rich Hill had 4,008 in 1890, or a loss of 1,255 in 20 years. Its postal receipts are $7,611.

Westboro, Mass., only shows an increase of 46 in 10 years. Westboro had 5,400 in 1900 and 5,446 in 1910. It had to be content, however, with a $15,000 site.

Winona, Miss., with postal receipts of $8,716, wanted another one hundred thousand appropriation for post office and building, and received $7,500 for a site only. Winona shows a net increase of 57 in 10 years—2,455 in 1900 and 2,512 in 1910.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Not now.

The following towns have had an increase of less than 100 in the last 10 or 20 years, and still are granted appropriations for buildings and sites—10 towns in all.

Brinkley, Ark., had 1,688 in 1900 and 1,740 in 1910, or a gain of only 92 in 10 years, and yet it received $25,000 in this bill.

Falmouth, Ky., had 1,180 in 1910 and 1,134 in 1900 and 1,146 in 1890, or a gain of only 34 in 20 years, and it receives an allowance of $25,000 in this bill. Postal receipts, by the way, only amount to $5,638.

Vermilion, S. Dak., can only show a gain of 4 in 10 years, and it has the good fortune to get a $35,000 present in this bill. Vermilion had 2,183 in 1900 and 2,187 in 1910.

West Plains, Mo., does a little better both in increase in population and allowance for building and site. West Plains makes a gain of 12 in 10 years—2,902 in 1900 and 2,914 in 1910—and receives as a reward $40,000.

West Point, Va., shows a little larger increase in population, showing a gain of 90 in 10 years, and is allowed $25,000 in the present bill. West Point grew from 1,307 in 1900 to 1,397 in 1910.

A little town in Michigan, Clare by name, grew from 1,326 in 1900 to 1,350 in 1910—not much to brag about—net gain of 24 in 10 years, and yet has the good fortune to get an appropriation of $35,000 in this bill, or a little over $25 for every man, woman, and child lucky enough to live in the town.

Easton, Md., does a good deal better. It showed an increase of 9 in 10 years, and only 143 in 20 years, and received a $65,000 present. Easton had 2,939 in 1890, 3,074 in 1900, and 3,083 in 1910.

Eaton, Ohio, had 3,155 in 1900 and 3,187 in 1910, or a gain of only 32 in 10 years, and received a $35,000 gift.

Litchfield, Minn., received $35,000 in this bill, although it only shows a gain of 53 in 10 years—2,280 in 1900 and 2,333 in 1910.

Another Minnesota town, Northfield, received $51,000, although the population only increased from 3,210 in 1900 to 3,265 in 1910, or a net gain of only 55.

Great Barrington, Mass., only gains 72 in 10 years—5,926 in 1910 and 5,854 in 1900—but is granted $50,000 in this bill.

This bill awards to the following towns, nine in all, appropriations for sites, although they show less than 100 gain in population in the last 10 or 20 years:

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., never had the population to warrant putting up a Government building, having only 864 in 1910 and 781 in 1900, and yet it asks for and receives an appropriation of $10,000 for a site alone.

There is nothing slow about Cameron, Mo. It has only gained 1 vote, Democratic or otherwise, in 10 years, and yet it has the courage to ask for $100,000 for a public building and site, and received $5,000 from the committee for a site alone at this time. It has only gained 63 people in 20 years. It had 2,917 in 1890, 2,979 in 1900, and 2,980 in 1910.

Duncan, Okla., also asked for a $100,000 building and site, and it also received $5,000 for a site alone. Duncan has gained 26 persons in 10 years, having 2,477 in 1910 and 2,451 in 1900. Postal receipts only amount to $8,272, but that does not prevent them from asking for a $100,000 grab.

Indianola, Iowa, shows an increase of 118 in 10 years, and believes that it is entitled to $50,000 of Uncle Sam's money. It has to be content at this time with $5,000 for a site. Indianola had 3,261 in 1900 and 3,283 in 1910.

Owenton, Ky., shows the remarkable increase of 10—1 per year—from 1900 to 1910, and asks for and receives $7,500 for a site. Real estate must be high in that dead town—1,024 in 1910 and 1,014 in 1900. The postal receipts annually are only $4,760.

Pineville, another Kentucky town, wants $100,000 of Uncle Sam's money for a public monument, although it only had a population of 2,072 in 1900 and 2,161 in 1910, or a net gain of 91 in 10 years. The postal receipts, by the way, are only $7,369. Pineville has to be contented at this time, however, with $5,000 for a site.

Wayne, Nebr., received $5,000 for a site, although only showing a gain of 21 in 10 years—2,140 in 1910 and 2,119 in 1900.

Another town in Missouri—Salisbury—declined from 1,847 in 1900 to 1,834 in 1910, or 13 in 10 years; and it also asks for and receives $5,000 now for a site and more to follow for a building. Salisbury's postal receipts are only $6,808.

Seward, Nebr., had 2,108 in 1890 and 2,106 in 1910, or a net loss of 2 in 20 years, and gets $6,000 for a site. The bill as introduced called for $60,000 for building and site.

Stanford, Ky., showed 129 less people in 1910 than in 1900, and asks for $10,000 for a site, and receives $5,000. Stanford had 1,651 in 1900 and 1,532 in 1910. Stanford has postal receipts of $6,228.

Summerville, S. C., decreased from 2,420 in 1900 to 2,355 in 1910, a loss of 65 in 10 years, and it also asks $10,000 for a site, and it also has to be content at present with $5,000.

Thomaston, Ga., loses 69 people in 10 years and asks for $60,000 for a building and site, but receives $5,000 for a site in this bill. In 1900 Thomaston had 1,714 and only 1,645 in 1910. Postal receipts are $6,144.

It is recommended that no building shall be authorized where the post-office receipts are less than $10,000.

In the consideration of each project a comparison of rental value for suitable quarters, together with the cost of maintenance and operation, including interest at 3 per cent on the investment for the building proposed, shall be made, in order that it may be determined whether its erection should be a desirable or proper investment.

Many of the items in this bill could not qualify under the above.

We read in the Sunday Star, January 14, 1917, in part, as follows:

By a strict party vote the subcommittee on appropriations of the Senate yesterday afternoon struck from the legislative appropriation bill the increases in salaries to employees granted by the House. Democratic members of the committee would not discuss their action, but they insisted in committee that the refusal to grant the increases made by the House was due entirely to the state of the finances and the revenues and not to any spirit of hostility to the clerks and their appeal for better compensation.

In view of the above action, the statement made upon the floor of the House by Mr. FITZGERALD, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and other members of that committee, members of the Ways and Means Committee, and the prospect that we shall soon be asked to vote for bonds to take care of part of the deficit, it seems to me that it would be unwise to pass this bill at this time, and I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLINE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18994 and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGE OF BILL TO UNION CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The bill H. R. 20047, a bill for the control and regulation of the waters of the Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes, is on the House Calendar, and ought to be on the Union Calendar. Without objection, it will be rereferred.

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. on Thursday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BOARD OF REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 194, which provides for the appointment of John B. Henderson as a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair lays before the House the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GRONNA. I present a letter in the form of a memorial from the North Dakota State Federation of Labor, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NORTH DAKOTA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Grand Forks, N. Dak., January 12, 1917.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: There is before the Congress of the United States a rider to the Post Office appropriation bill which the members of the State Federation of Labor of the State of North Dakota believe is going to work a great hardship upon hundreds of thousands of people in the United States, especially in the printing trades.

There is no question but what if this rider is passed in its present form, it is bound to put completely out of business a great number of nationally circulated newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals.

You gentlemen have heard enough of the print-paper situation to know that the daily papers, magazines, and all allied products are now laboring under a strain which has already forced a large number entirely out of business, and which seriously threatens the life of even our largest and strongest periodicals. To add the burden of increased postal rates at the present time will be placing the last straw upon the camel's back, and a great many will sink under the load.

You may not be sufficiently familiar with the printing business to realize what a very large portion of the expense of any periodical is invested in labor which it employs in the form of editors, reporters, linotype operators, stereotypers, pressmen, binders, and various other kinds of allied labor. Therefore, you may not realize that when a printing establishment is put out of business it forces out of employment a larger proportion of individual citizens to the volume of business done than most any other line of endeavor.

We can not too forcibly impress upon you the untold hardships that the enforcement of the zone-rate plan will bring to our vast body of people who are endeavoring to become good citizens of the State of North Dakota and of the United States.

If action on this bill can even be deferred until after the news-print situation becomes normal again, it will prove a great relief to all periodical publishers and will insure continued employment for many who will doubtless be forced to seek vocations other than those for which they are equipped, should the bill be passed in its present form.

Therefore the State Federation of Labor of the State of North Dakota trusts that you will use every effort to defeat or even delay the passage of this measure. May we have an expression from you?

Respectfully submitted.

NORTH DAKOTA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
WM. ENGLISH, Secretary.

Mr. GRONNA. I also present a letter from Dr. Aline Bradley, legislative superintendent of the Fourth Division Drys, of Fairbanks, Alaska, which I should like to have printed in the RECORD. It refers to prohibition. It shows that out of 12,000 votes cast in the election, more than 8,000 votes were cast in favor of abolishing the saloon. It also has reference to the school question. If it has not been printed, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FOURTH DIVISION DRYS,
Fairbanks, Alaska, December 20, 1916.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: You are aware that Alaska voted dry on November 7 by a majority of more than 2 to 1 in her four judicial divisions.

You will admit that when the Alaska of dance-hall, gambling, and saloon fame thus registers her protest against the liquor traffic—when more than 8,000 voters out of approximately 12,000 sign their names to such a gigantic petition against alcohol—the petitioners are entitled to their demand.

Make no mistake, liquor has had the ruling hand in Alaska as well as the robbing hand, hence the vote against it; which vote was not simply a protest against alcohol, but even more a vote against Alaska's rule by alcohol in all channels—local, Territorial, and judicial.

The plebiscite asked that Alaska be made dry after January 1, 1918. There is no good reason, however, why Alaska should wait for the memorial from her Territorial legislature before securing the passage of a bill by Congress prohibiting the sale, manufacture, and importation of alcoholic beverages into Alaska.

We therefore beg to ask your earnest consideration of the reasons why Alaska's prohibition bill should be passed during the present session of Congress.

1. Section 410, Compiled Laws of Alaska, creating a Legislative Assembly for Alaska provides that "the authority herein granted * * * shall not extend to * * * the establishment and maintenance of schools * * *."

Before the 1917 spring session, the authority of the Alaska Territorial Legislature as regards the "establishment and maintenance of" her schools must be given with absolute certainty. Otherwise the school revenue, which will begin to fail as licenses expire in 1917, would not be replaced in time; district schools (Nelson) would be closed for lack of funds, while those in incorporated towns would be crippled for the same reason. Our helpless Territorial legislature could not remedy the condition until its next session in the spring of 1919.

Alaska's children simply can not face two years without proper school revenue.

2. Barring the beers of domestic manufacture, all liquors consumed in Alaska come into the southeastern portion through its ports of entry and into the interior by one of three routes—St. Michael, White Pass R. E. via Skagway, and via Valdez or Cordova over the trail into Fairbanks and other points. Hence, Alaska can be made dry as a bone if Congress so elects.

3. Having no fear that Alaska would go dry on her first vote, the liquor interests shipped into interior Alaska last summer only the usual tonnage of liquors, which supply must last the vast interior territory until the summer of 1917, unless brought in over the trail at a prohibitive cost.

Should the importation of liquors go unchecked next summer, the quantities shipped in will be beyond computation. The liquor interests, through their three wholesale dealers in Alaska, can afford to place as large a stock as they may wish—no limits. The liquor remaining on hand after licenses expire and after January, 1918, will supply material for a profitable bootlegging business for several years to come.

After reading the foregoing we believe you will admit that Alaska needs three things:

1. A prohibition measure which will prohibit the sale and manufacture of liquor in Alaska after January 1, 1918.

2. A clause in the above prohibition measure prohibiting the importation of liquors into Alaska after May 31, 1917. This last and most important clause in order to cut off the bootleggers' supply and settle the bootlegging problem.

3. A sister measure giving Alaska the right to control her schools, bearing in mind that from the Territorial revenues must come the substitute for the liquor license revenues. These two measures must be enacted concurrently by this session of Congress.

In conclusion, will you introduce and support or secure and work for the introduction and passage of the above measures for Alaska? Telegraph rates from Alaska are prohibitive. Alaska too far away for the usual methods of influencing Congress. We are therefore appealing to your sense of fairness and justice in the only manner open to us. Will you aid us and work for us?

Respectfully, yours,

ALINE BRADLEY,
Legislative Superintendent.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I present the following communication which I have received from Mr. Santiago Iglesias, president of the Porto Rico Federation of Labor, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD. In conjunction with it I have a telegram on the same subject which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C.

Senator JAMES E. MARTINE.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is respectfully called to an important subject matter which received the consideration of the Thirty-sixth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor held in Baltimore, Md., November 13–25, 1916.

When, as a result of the Spanish-American War, the United States took possession of Porto Rico in 1898, the promise was made that the inhabitants of Porto Rico would be recognized in all respects as Americans and that citizenship with all its inherent rights and benefits would be fully accorded. Thus far this promise of citizenship has remained unfulfilled. The people of the island are practically without a country they may call their own.

There is now pending before the Senate H. R. 9533, which, if it becomes a law, will grant American citizenship to the people of that island, defining forever the status of the people of Porto Rico. The bill, however, contains several features to which the labor people as well as the people in general of Porto Rico emphatically protest.

For your information I inclose extracts of a letter I have received from Mr. Santiago Iglesias, president of the Free Federation of Workingmen of Porto Rico, which are important and self-explanatory.

The recent convention of the American Federation of Labor indorsed the petitions of the workers of Porto Rico that they should not be deprived the civil rights that they now possess and enjoy.

I trust that the above matters may commend themselves to your favorable consideration and action, and request that your support be given to maintaining the rights of the people of Porto Rico.

Very respectfully, yours,

SAML. GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 4, 1916.

STATEMENT BY SANTIAGO IGLESIAS, PRESIDENT OF PORTO RICO FEDERATION OF LABOR, ON PORTO RICAN BILL.

[This statement in full was handed to President Wilson by President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, at the White House, Dec. 4, 1916.]

I now want to make particular reference to the constant failure of Congress during the last few years to enact a law as to the status of the people of Porto Rico. There is now pending before the Senate a bill which, if it becomes law, certainly will define forever the status of the people of Porto Rico. The bill contains several clauses of a reactionary character, against which the Free Federation of Workingmen of Porto Rico emphatically protest.

Before entering into the presentation of the features of the bill to which the labor people, as well as the people in general, of Porto Rico protest, let me quote the Hon. JOHN J. SHAFROTH, chairman of the Committee of the Senate on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, in an address to the Senate:

"Mr. President, in the formation of our Republic we put forth to the world new principles of government, which seemed so plain to us that we declared them to be self-evident truths. We declared that all men are created equal, not in intellect, not in height, not in strength, not in color, and not in many other respects, but equal in rights. We declared that man is entitled, as an inalienable right, to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We said in that declaration that so sacred are these rights against tyranny that they not only shall not be invaded by others, but they can not be bartered away even by ourselves."

The working people of Porto Rico wonder why Senator SHAFROTH has not followed the splendid policy he outlined in the framing of the Porto Rican bill.

Section 26 of the Jones bill, with amendments by the Senate committee of which Senator SHAFROTH is chairman, says:

"No person shall be a member of the senate of Porto Rico * * * who does not own * * * taxable property in Porto Rico to the value of no less than $1,000 * * *."

Section 27 of the same bill says:

"No person shall be a member of the house of representatives * * * who does not own * * * and pay taxes upon property of the assessed value of no less than $500 * * *."

The only argument which Gov. Yager advanced in advocating the property and the literacy qualifications is that he has proof that the corporations practically control the votes of large groups of working people.

The labor movement of Porto Rico, as expressed through the Free Federation of Workingmen, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, has been and is now the most potential and influential factor in the island to Americanize the people of Porto Rico to the American standard of political action and freedom, and it has succeeded in a great measure in freeing them from the influence of the employers, politically as well as economically. It is a dangerous proposition at this time to impose a property qualification on members to be elected for the senate, as well as for the house of legislature of Porto Rico. To give to only those with property qualification the right to control the affairs of the people of the island will have a tendency to strengthen and encourage the agitation and propaganda of those who are already preaching anti-American sentiments and striving for the independence of the island.

Section 35 of the same bill states "that no person shall be allowed to register as a voter or to vote in Porto Rico unless * * * he is able to read and write or * * * he is a bona fide taxpayer." This has been amended by adding these words: "That all legally qualified electors of Porto Rico at the last election shall be entitled to register and vote at elections for 10 years from and after the passage of this act."

If Congress enacts the bill containing the clause quoted, it will disfranchise three out of every four voters of Porto Rico; the provision will practically disfranchise 175,000 workingmen out of a total of 205,000 voters of the whole island. The adoption of that clause would be a great political mistake and a national wrong imposed upon the people of the island.

The people of Porto Rico exercised the franchise for the last 16 years, and even under the Spanish Monarchy. Such rights were accorded to our people by the Cortes of Spain and our local legislature, and now the Congress of the United States is being advised to take away those rights that our people enjoy and possess. It is, indeed, a very serious question that the same bill which purports to grant American citizenship to the people of Porto Rico shall take away the civil rights that our people enjoy and possess, so it will clearly appear to the minds of the people that in being honorably granted citizenship of the United States they are going to lose their civil rights, and a property qualification is to be required for those who make the laws and rule the working people, who constitute ninety-odd per cent of the people of the island.

On the other hand, no means are provided to enable some 300,000 children to attend schools, which amounts to 60 per cent of the total electoral population, who, because of the inability to obtain an education, will be deprived of the right of franchise. Moreover, under the proposed law only such citizens as pay a tax will be privileged to be representatives in the legislature of the island. Workingmen, however bright and intelligent they may be, if they pay no taxes, will be disqualified and robbed of the right to be representatives.

Recently Gov. Yager, of Porto Rico, was quoted by the press as saying that it is absolutely necessary that the Jones bill be passed in Congress before the holiday recess in order to check forever the anti-American and independence agitation in the island.

Recently in a conversation with Gen. Frank McIntyre, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs in the War Department, I tried to convey to him the influences, ideas, and political conditions that now exist in Porto Rico, and he made the following remark, referring specially to that section of the bill relative to the civil rights of Porto Rico: "Those clauses are not essential to the principles of the bill and could very well be eliminated." While the Jones bill grants to the people of Porto Rico American citizenship, that same bill forces upon our people theories of government which have long ago been repudiated by the progressive force of American democracy, as well as the progressive force of Porto Rico.

If the condition of the people of Porto Rico is ever to be raised to a standard at all compatible with that prevailing in the United States, the civil and political rights that we now enjoy and possess must be guaranteed and extended in the new organic law now pending before the Senate.

The Free Federation of Workingmen of Porto Rico maintains fully the same declarations and petitions duly made to the President of the United States in Congress year after year.

The people of the island want to solve a great economic problem by the right guaranteed by the new constitution to use the government, whose upholders they are, to obtain loans at a low rate of interest, the government in making such loans to do away with the dreadful usury prevailing through the country. In so doing the government would also hamper and lessen the social and industrial oppression of the masses and help thereby in diffusing the wealth.

The banking system and the credit have both been left in the hands of private manipulation. Both speculation and monopoly, as well as the control of the local government, has fallen into the hands of the most powerful corporations.

The private monopoly of vital interests of the community of the island is detrimental to the well-being of the people, and such monopoly and control of the wealth produced by the people are creating among the popular minds a moral state of indignation against the hateful industrial oppression which has been the cause of so much wretchedness, privation, and hunger among the working masses.

We hope the United States Congress will enact a constitution furthering the common good of all the people of Porto Rico, and in the general interest of the island, relieving the masses of the social and industrial oppression they suffer, oppression which is casting discredit upon the American flag. Congress should suppress the monopoly effected by the corporations, the exportation of the wealth produced by Porto Rican workers should be regulated so as to retain the great part for the benefit of the inhabitants of the island. Now, more than 60 per cent is exported, a circumstance which turns the island into a trading post operated by underfed and barefoot laborers, and in this way the constitution would benefit the whole people, and not a specially privileged class or party. Such a measure would promote the diffusion of wealth and comfort, intelligence, virtue, and equal opportunity, which are the chief aims and aspirations of the wise, democratic American institutions.

NEW YORK, January 16, 1917.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

We, the undersigned, representing over 2,000 Porto Ricans, workers in several occupations, resident of the city of New York, respectfully indorse the statements of Mr. Santiago Iglesias, labor commissioner of Porto Rico, before the Senate. We certainly believe that if the Jones bill, now pending before the Senate, is passed with the clauses that practically disfranchise three of every four votes of the workers of Porto Rico and impose a property qualification on members to be elected to the senate as well as for the house of Porto Rico, that will have a tendency to strengthen and encourage the anti-Americanism of those who are discontent and want the independence of the island. This very Jones bill, that purports to grant us American citizenship, is taking away the civil rights that our people enjoy and possess since the Spanish domination there. We have the right to vote and to be elected to the legislature without any property qualifications whatever, and have had it for the last 19 years, and we want the same rights at this time. We also have about 300,000 children without any facilities to attend school, therefore even the future generations are being menaced with the unjust and reactionary clauses of the Jones bill.

CHANGE OF NAME OF STEAMERS.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the following bills:

A bill (S. 7779) to authorize the change of name of the steamer Frank H. Peavey to William A. Reiss (S. Rept. No. 941);

A bill (S. 7780) to authorize change of name of the steamer Frank T. Heffelfinger to the Clemens A. Reiss (S. Rept. No. 942);

A bill (S. 7782) to authorize the change of name of the steamer Frederick B. Wells to Otto M. Reiss (S. Rept. No. 944).

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who introduced these bills, is not here. I see no objection to action upon the bills, and I prefer a request for unanimous consent that they be acted upon at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I ask that the titles be read.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bills change the names of four steamers.

Mr. GALLINGER. It simply changes the names?

Mr. FLETCHER. It simply changes the names. The Department of Commerce does not object.

Mr. GALLINGER. I really can not understand it. There must be a good reason for it. Has not the owner of a steamer the right to change the name?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; he could not. It requires special legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, I do not object.

The bill (S. 7779) to authorize the change of name of the steamer Frank H. Peavey to William A. Reiss was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 7780) to authorize change of name of the steamer Frank T. Heffelfinger to the Clemens A. Reiss was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment providing that the creditable Civil War service of survivors still in the Navy shall be accounted as having been equivalent to incident of service wherever requisite, but without change of any present pay, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the sundry civil appropriation bill, making an appropriation in aid of the education of immigrants to the United States in the public schools of the States, to be expended under the Naturalization Bureau of the Labor Department. I ask to have the amendment printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

APPOINTMENT OF DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. WORKS. I submit a resolution, which I send to the desk and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from California will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 320), as follows:

Whereas it is understood that certain persons have been appointed or designated to represent the Government or the President of the United States in foreign countries, and to negotiate with such Governments and report to and advise with the officials of this Government as to conditions in other countries, and to perform the duties of diplomatic officials, or to perform other duties, without being nominated to or confirmed by the Senate; and

Whereas the standing of such persons and their authority to act as such diplomatic representatives, or otherwise, is in doubt: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to report to the Senate:

1. What, if any, persons have been appointed or designated, without confirmation by the Senate, to represent the Government or the President in any other country.

2. The nature of their appointments and by whom made, the services required of them, to what countries they were appointed and for what term, how long they have served, their names, where located, what was the designation of their offices, respectively, and the salary paid to each of them, respectively, and who of them are still in service under such appointments or designations without being confirmed by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has just been read.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I object. I should like to suggest that the resolution embraces a matter which evidently ought to go to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it is only a resolution inquiring for information, and I see no good reason why it should not be adopted by the Senate, as is usual in cases of that kind.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I will let the resolution go over until to-morrow, so that we may have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. WORKS. Of course, if the Senator desires it, I have no wish to prevent the consideration of the resolution by the Committee on Foreign Relations. We are now just about to resume relations with somebody in Mexico; hardly the government of Mexico, because I think there is no government down there. If we are to take up our diplomatic relations in the regular way, I think it is a good time to inquire about who is to represent us down there now. That is the only object of the resolution—to get information on the subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I prefer to have the resolution go to the committee; but if the Senator desires to have the resolution go over until to-morrow he has that right.

Mr. WORKS. I have no desire to have the resolution go over until to-morrow for the purpose of discussing it, for I have no such intention. The resolution is not offered with that object in view at all. It is simply offered for the purpose of obtaining the information that is asked for. If, however, the Senator from Nebraska insists upon the resolution going to the committee, I shall not object.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that the resolution go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORT OF NAVY-YARD COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 1946).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, as required by the provisions of the act of Congress making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the first preliminary report of the Navy Yard Commission, the appointment of which was authorized by said act.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 17, 1917.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 19410. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, and so forth, appropriation bill.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, on Monday last there was some sort of an understanding that to-day we should proceed, at the close of the routine morning business, with the calendar. I do not want to interfere with the consideration of this important appropriation bill, but I desire to repeat what I said on Monday. There are a great many Senate bills upon the calendar as to which, if they are not considered here very soon, there will be no chance at all of getting them to the other House, so that they can be considered there and passed at this session. All that is necessary as to many of these bills is merely to have them come up, for there is no objection to them; some of them are private bills, and I think Members of the Senate have a right to insist upon some time being given for the consideration of these bills on the calendar. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] on Monday stated that he would endeavor to have an arrangement made with Senators on the other side of the Chamber, so that the calendar would be taken up to-day. I should like to ask what has become of that assurance?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] will permit me, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] evidently refers to a colloquy on the floor of the Senate between himself and me. I then supposed that the Senate would now be devoting most of its time to the consideration of the water-power bill, the unfinished business. The appropriation bill, however, as the Senator knows, has taken up most of the intervening time. I trust that we shall get that bill out of the way as speedily as possible. I continue to feel, as I did on Monday, that the request made by the Senator from Pennsylvania is a very reasonable one; and I assure him that I shall make every effort to get an agreement upon this side to take up by unanimous consent the calendar at the very earliest convenient moment.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I realize that it is important that the appropriation bills should be considered as soon as possible, and I would not want to stand in the way of the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill at this time even if I could do so; but I sincerely hope that there will be some sort of management upon the other side of the Chamber, and that the routine business of the Senate on the calendar may be disposed of at an early date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The first committee amendment passed over is, on page 41, beginning in line 18, where the Committee on Appropriations report to strike out the following clause:

Federal Farm Loan Bureau: For salaries and expenses under the Federal Farm Loan Board created by the act approved July 17, 1916, including the salaries of four members at the rate of $10,000 each per annum, and their actual necessary traveling expenses and such salaries, fees, and expenses as are authorized by said act, including farm-loan registrars, examiners, and such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as the Farm Loan Board may find necessary, $300,000. A detailed statement of expenditures hereunder shall be made to Congress.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, when this amendment was brought up yesterday I asked to have it go over until to-day. I made the point of order that it was contrary to existing law, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] made the point of order that it was general legislation. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry before I address myself to the point of order. I understand that this is a motion to strike out and insert, and therefore that the whole proposition to insert must be considered together and can not be divided. I inquire if that is a proper understanding?

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the point? I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. HOLLIS. The proposition is to strike out and insert; and I understand that the proposed amendment therefore can not be divided, but that it must all stand or fall together.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; Mr. President, it is just the reverse of that. Under the rule a substitute can be perfected, and Rule XIX, I think, provides that wherever a substitute is offered it can be perfected at any time.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, that was not the proposition. There is no new amendment proposed, as I understand, and as the matter stands now it is a plain proposition to strike out a paragraph and insert in lieu thereof three paragraphs. I ask for a ruling on that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course the Senator does not in any sense mean that an amendment can not be made to the matter submitted by the committee?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly not; but no amendment has been offered as yet.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Naturally there will be amendments offered before we get through.

Mr. HOLLIS. There may be; I am not informed as to that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will be subject to amendment and correction before we are finally compelled to vote upon the motion to substitute.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in that connection I desire to say that there is one provision in the Senate committee amendment that is clearly subject to a point of order, because it changes existing law, and that provision has reference to the salaries of the four members of the Farm Loan Board. I frankly state that, in my opinion, the point of order will lie, unless their salary is raised in the amendment from $7,500 to $10,000. I wish to say to the Senator that, so far as I am concerned, if the Senator having the bill in charge does not offer an amendment changing the amount from $7,500 to $10,000, I shall do so myself; but I understand the Senator from North Carolina is perfectly willing to do that in order to obviate the point of order made by the Senator, but for no other reason.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I understand this is an amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations. If the Committee on Appropriations changes the amendment, then we will have that amendment to consider; but until the Committee on Appropriations does change the amendment I understand we are now obliged to consider the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator having made the point of order, I will propose an amendment if the Senator will yield to me. I want to say, Mr. President, that I voted against this reduction because I thought it subject to a point of order. The committee thought they would bring to the attention of the Senate this particular item in the amendment, and whether any Senator would make a point of order upon it we did not know. I now move to amend the amendment by striking out "at $7,500 each" and inserting in lieu thereof "at $10,000 each," and then correcting the total.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I should like, first, a ruling on the point of order I have raised. I would rather proceed under the rules of the Senate, and I should like an answer as to whether the amendment can be divided.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that this is the text of the bill as it came from the House:

Federal Farm Loan Bureau: For salaries and expenses under the Federal Farm Loan Board created by the act approved July 17, 1916, including the salaries of four members at the rate of $10,000 each per annum—

And so forth.

The Chair also understands that $10,000 per annum is the salary that is fixed in the law creating the Federal Farm Loan Board. The Senate committee offers to amend by striking out that language and inserting "Federal Farm Loan Bureau: For four members of the board, at $7,500 each," with other additional clauses.

The rules of the Senate are that where there is a motion to strike out and to insert, each may be separately amended and perfected before a final vote upon the motion to strike out and to insert, and that in such amendments the portion to be stricken out has precedence in the matter of amendment; but the Chair believes that when a point of order is raised it is the duty of the Chair to decide, or to have the Senate decide, the point of order, unless withdrawn. The Chair does not believe that when a point of order is raised to an amendment the amendment is divisible at all; but the point of order must be either sustained or overruled. Of course, if sustained, there is no reason why another amendment may not be immediately presented avoiding the point of order. That is the ruling of the Chair. Unless the point of order is withdrawn, it must be ruled on.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to make this suggestion: This amendment or substitute does not change the law fixing the salary of the Farm Loan Board at $10,000 each. It leaves that the law. It simply neglects to appropriate to them what their salary is as fixed by law, but it would leave the United States liable to them for the balance of the salary. It is not a change of existing law. The statute fixes their salary. This is a failure to appropriate the money fixed by the statute as their salary, and does not change the statute, or pretend to change the statute; and I am very much gratified to know that the committee recognize the fact that the salary will continue to be $10,000, and are ready to appropriate for the salary fixed by law.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the distinguished Senator whether he believes that it is good policy for the Senate of the United States to leave a statute fixing a salary at $10,000 a year, and then, in the face of that statute, neglect to appropriate the full amount?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have just said that, although I would vote under a general bill introduced to change the law and fix the salary at $7,500, while the law leaves the salary at $10,000 I would not vote for an appropriation bill that undertook to appropriate less than the general statute fixed as the salary.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will.

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to ask the Senator whether he has examined the books and come to a decision or opinion that the balance of the salary would be due?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think that it has been held that it was due, and collections have been made through the Court of Claims for salaries fixed by law when not appropriated for.

Mr. HOLLIS. I looked the matter up yesterday, and I found the authorities were the other way; but there may be some later authorities that I did not perceive.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if my colleague will permit me the suggestion, I have in mind one case—I will not recite it because it occurred several years ago—where portion of a salary was withheld for several years and the officer never recovered the balance. I know that to be the fact.

Mr. HOLLIS. That was the case of a United States judge in Wyoming, I think. I looked the case up yesterday. That is true.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think there have been cases before the Court of Claims in which the salaries not appropriated were subsequently collected. I have made no recent investigation of the subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that whatever may be said upon that subject the whole amendment as offered is subject to the objection of being general legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if my colleague will permit me, the case I allude to was one in which I took a great deal of interest, and protested against the reduction year after year for several years, but it was continued, and that official died without ever receiving the balance of his salary, which was manifestly his due.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire another question. Is it not a fact also that the Federal farm-loan act provided that the Federal Farm Loan Board should fix the salaries of its employees; and does not the amendment now offered by the committee propose to fix those salaries which are subject to be fixed only by the Farm Loan Board?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is absolutely accurate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a change of existing law.

Mr. HOLLIS. We will reach that in the course of the unwinding process, and I shall have something to say about that when it is reached.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is, then, an attempt to change existing law by this amendment.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; it is, and I shall have a good deal to say about it at the proper time. At the present time I understand that this amendment offered by the committee is out of order. When somebody offers another amendment to change the bill as it came from the House I shall have something to say about that; but I understand that this will dispose of the committee amendment. Then, some one will have to bring it to life again.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire or the Senator from Georgia to point out any rule of the Senate which prohibits an amendment which would change existing law, as that seems to be the basis of the objection. I know of no such rule; and if there is a rule of that character, I should like to have it pointed out.

Mr. HOLLIS. I shall be very glad to address myself to that. The distinguished Senator will find in the Precedents of the Senate, on page 128, two cases where that was given as a reason, that the amendment proposed changed existing law; but it is very true that that provision, referring to a change in existing law, is not found in the rules of the Senate. There is, however, found in the rules of the Senate a provision that general legislation may not be proposed to a general appropriation bill; and a change of existing law would be obviously general legislation, and therefore it comes under the rule.

Mr. McCUMBER. Not necessarily, by any means, Mr. President.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the ruling on yesterday, and to the fact that if these rulings continue in this way the Committee on Appropriations need not have any bill referred to it at all. All this bill deals with is salaries, either reductions or increases; and if the rulings go on as they did yesterday we might as well pass the bill exactly as it comes from the House, because everything the Senate does, either a reduction or an increase of salary, is changing existing law.

The present occupant of the chair will have that question presented to him again, and it will be seen whether his ruling will be along the same line. So I say that if the rulings go on as they have, and anything this committee does in the way of changing or reducing salaries is ruled out on the ground of being a change of existing law, this being a bill for salaries, why send any bill to the committee? The committee will have nothing to do but to accept the House bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think I can agree with the Senator from North Carolina with reference to that. This is an entirely different proposition from the one we had before us yesterday. Yesterday we had before us a proposition to create an office, and then provide a method of filling it, and then provide a salary. So I do not think this is a question like that at all.

I can not agree with the Senator from Utah that this amendment changes existing law, or that it changes the salary heretofore fixed. It does not even pretend to do that. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] pointed out very clearly that all that this amendment proposes to do is simply to appropriate $7,500 instead of $10,000 a year. That is all there is to it. These gentlemen may have a legal claim against the Government for the additional amount. They will never get it unless we appropriate it, however. My recollection is that the law provides that the surveyors general of many of the different Western States shall receive a certain salary, and yet for many years Congress has refused to appropriate that amount. We have appropriated what we thought the salary ought to be. Those gentlemen have not collected the difference from the Government. They might get a judgment in the Court of Claims, but that does not pay itself.

I can not agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Utah that this amendment changes existing law. It does not change existing law. It does not pretend to change existing law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me a moment? A change of an existing law can be made on an appropriation bill. It is only general legislation that can not be added to an appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. Well, I take it that the change in existing law might be general legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It might or it might not.

Mr. JONES. Yes, I know; but the mere fact——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There can be a change of existing law without its amounting to general legislation.

Mr. JONES. Well, Mr. President, if this amendment goes so far as to change the salaries of these officers, then I take it that it is general legislation; but I do not think it goes that far at all. It does not pretend to change the salaries. It simply refuses to appropriate $10,000 this year; that is all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, suppose we refused to make any appropriation at all. Could we do that, if we wanted to?

Mr. JONES. Why, certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. That does not change an existing law. Suppose Congress says, "We will not make any appropriation for this office at all." That is often done.

Mr. JONES. Why, certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. If we can do that, why can we not diminish the amount?

Mr. JONES. We can, in my judgment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not see why we can not.

Mr. JONES. It is not a question of being in order or otherwise. It is simply a question as to whether we will appropriate this amount of money, or appropriate the amount that the law provides for their salaries.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, my friend the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], in charge of the bill, in speaking to the point raised by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] stated that there were decisions made yesterday in such a way that if it went on the committees of the Senate would be unable to transact any business. I want to call his attention to this fact, which I think is correct—that there were not decisions made yesterday, as I understand, to which he objects. So far as I know, there was only one decision made by the Chair yesterday in regard to a Senate amendment which was opposed to the views of the Senator from North Carolina. That decision was made while the President pro tempore was out of the Chamber, and was, I think, overwhelmingly sustained by the Senate itself.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is true.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I want to call his attention to the fact that the statement that there were decisions made by the Senate is incorrect, and I also think it just to call attention to the fact that the decision of the temporary occupant of the chair was overwhelmingly sustained by the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is true. I simply say that if that decision and this decision on the point made by the Senator from New Hampshire—the two decisions—are carried out, the result will be that I do not see what we will have to do in an appropriation bill. The Senator from Delaware was not in the chair at all, and the Senate sustained the occupant of the chair. That is true.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I thought it was only fair to the occupant of the chair at that time that attention should be called to the fact.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is true.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that the proposed amendment would not have the effect of repealing an existing statute. It is rather an attempt on the part of Congress to repudiate a statutory obligation. That is precisely what it amounts to.

I am satisfied myself that the salaries fixed for these officials are unreasonably high. If there were an opportunity to vote upon it, I should vote to reduce those salaries; but I do not believe in this means of repudiating an honest debt of the Government. That is precisely what it amounts to.

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to say further, Mr. President, on the point that it is general legislation, that the third paragraph, providing how estimates shall be made hereafter, both for the year 1919 and every other year that may come forever, is general legislation, and that that also would be sufficient to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the question which was before the Senate yesterday was an altogether different one from that which is presented now. The question there was whether or not the creation of an office by an act of Congress was general legislation, and the Chair very properly held that it was. There are numberless precedents to sustain that decision of the Chair. But a provision in an appropriation bill by which the salary of an officer is changed for a single fiscal year, it seems to me, is clearly not general legislation. That has been ruled upon; and I have one case before me now, in the first volume of the Precedents, at page 78, where the District of Columbia appropriation bill was pending, and an amendment was offered to provide for two commissioners at $6,000 each, instead of the amount fixed by law, which, I think, was $5,000 each. The point of order was made that it was general legislation, and after some colloquy upon the matter the Vice President [Mr. Sherman] said:

> The Chair thinks that if it were general legislation the Senator's contention would be correct, but the Chair thinks it is not general legislation to change the amount of a salary for a fiscal year. It does not change the law, but it changes the salary for this fiscal year, and on that ground the Chair overrules the point of order.

The Chair then proceeds at some length to discuss the question.

So it seems to me that all this proposed amendment seeks to do is to change the salary for the ensuing fiscal year from $10,000 to $7,500. It carves that exception out of the general law for that limited period of time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Utah permit an interruption from the Chair in order that we may get the facts?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the farm-loan law provides that the Farm Loan Board shall appoint the various officers therein provided for and fix their salaries?

Mr. HOLLIS. It does. I shall be glad to read that law to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires the opinion of the Senator from Utah on that branch of the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have given that branch of the amendment no thought. I am simply directing my suggestions to the one item. I think, however, speaking without much reflection, that there is a distinction between the two things.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah speak a little louder? I am anxious to hear the Senator from Utah, and I can not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I say I think the particular amendment which appropriates $7,500 to each of the members of the Farm Loan Board, instead of $10,000, the amount fixed by law, simply has the effect of carving out of the general law an exception for this particular fiscal year and allowing them $7,500 for this year without repealing the general provisions of the law. I think that is special, as distinguished from general, legislation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, let me call the Senator's attention to the provisions of the act. In the first place, the farm-loan law provides that the salaries of the members of the board shall be $10,000 per annum. Then it provides:

> The Federal Farm Loan Board shall be authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as it may deem necessary to conduct the business of said board.

The law says, further:

> All salaries and fees authorized in this section and not otherwise provided for shall be fixed in advance by said board and shall be paid in the same manner as the salaries of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

That is the law. The amendment proposes that the members of the board shall be paid $7,500 each, which the Senator says will not be general legislation, because they will have a right to do that, perhaps; but the general legislation certainly is found in the provision in this amendment that there shall be a chief of the Bond Division, whose salary shall be $3,000. The law says that all salaries shall be fixed by the board and shall be paid in the same way as the salaries of the members of the board, and there is not in the law anywhere any provision for such an officer as the chief of the Bond Division.

Then this amendment says that there shall be a secretary to the board, at $3,000. The law says that the board shall fix all salaries and shall employ all agents and assistants. There is not any provision in the law for a secretary, as far as that is concerned.

The amendment says there shall be a publicity agent, at $2,000. The law says the board shall fix the salaries of all agents and shall employ all of these people.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I have not been able to hear all that the Senator from Florida has said; but let me ask him if there is a provision in the law that the Farm Loan Board shall fix the salaries?

Mr. FLETCHER. Absolutely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator did not read it, then, or else I did not catch it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I read it, but the Senator did not hear it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will read it again:

> The Federal Farm Loan Board shall be authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as it may deem necessary to conduct the business of said board. All salaries and fees authorized in this section and not otherwise provided for shall be fixed in advance——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will not the Senator read that part about the salaries again?

Mr. FLETCHER (reading)—

> All salaries and fees authorized in this section and not otherwise provided for shall be fixed in advance by said board, and shall be paid in the same manner as the salaries of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

That is the law—"shall be fixed in advance by said board." You now propose in this bill to specify what employees this board shall engage, and designate them as publicity agent and secretary and superintendent of bond issues, and fix their compensation in this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that is the way the board themselves have fixed them. We have given the language of the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I am sure——

Mr. FLETCHER. I am simply raising the point that the whole amendment is subject to the objection that it is general legislation. If the board fix these salaries themselves, it is up to them to fix them. It is not for us to legislate upon the subject. This is general legislation, undoubtedly, in those respects.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me right there to elicit some information along the lines he has suggested?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator's contention is that that board have a right to fix the salaries at any sum they please, and Congress has nothing in the world to do with it. Now, the first example here is that the Farm Loan Board have fixed the salary of their secretary at $6,000—more than the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury gets.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As much as a district judge of the United States gets.

Mr. OVERMAN. As much as a district judge of the United States gets. The question I want to bring to the Senator's attention is this: Has not Congress the right to fix a salary, and, when it makes its appropriation, to say what that salary shall be? If the board fix the salary in advance, it is for Congress to say whether they will appropriate the money out of the lump sum for the payment of salaries. For example, they fix the salary of the bond-division man at $3,900, and they give their secretary as much money as the judges of the United States court get.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think, Mr. President, that the proposed amendment, and I have read it over carefully during the colloquy, does not seek to change existing law. No part of it seeks to do that. It simply makes appropriations for the coming fiscal year.

The question might arise as to whether or not, under the farm-loan act, the action of the board in fixing the salaries was binding upon the Government, but that is not the question presented here. We are simply appropriating for the next fiscal year, and I think that no part of this proposed amendment is open to the objection that it is general legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. While the Senator is on the floor I wish to call his attention to and ask that he express himself upon the difference between changing general legislation and changing an existing law. An existing law might not amount to general legislation. I now call your attention to a definition contained in our work on precedents:

> General legislation—that is, legislation which is applicable throughout the States generally as distinguished from special legislation—

And so forth.

What I want to ask the Senator to consider, because I have great confidence in his capacity to give a correct construction, is the difference between a rule limiting our right to put upon an appropriation bill general legislation and our right on an appropriation bill to change an existing law which does not amount to general legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Just one word further.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In all, the bills that we first pass creating a bureau we do not know just what they will need, and we give them a lump sum and let the new organization distribute it. As soon as we have had time to find out what they need we then in the appropriation bill specify the amount we allow them to use for each one of the particular branches of work or for each of the employees whom they have selected. That has been done for the five years since I have been here, and I have never before heard it suggested that it was general legislation. I am agreeing entirely with the Senator in his conclusion, and I thought the Senator might perhaps make it even a little broader than he has made it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I agree with what the Senator from Georgia has said, because the two things may be utterly different—general legislation and a proposition to change existing law. The rule in the House is that an amendment can not be received which changes existing law. The rule in the Senate is that an amendment will not be received which amounts to general legislation. If we were to provide here, instead of the language appropriating for four members of the board at $7,500 each, a provision that "hereafter" each member of the Farm Loan Board should receive $7,500, that would be general legislation; but to simply make an appropriation of $7,500 for the fiscal year, which is all that the appropriation bill seeks to do, is not general legislation.

It seems to me, also, that neither is any other part of the amendment, which proposes to give to the chief of the bond division $3,000, general legislation. That is limited to the fiscal year, and it does not fix the salary for the future. So far as the Farm Loan Board is concerned, the effect of it is simply to carve out from the operation of the general law an exception so that for the coming year they shall receive $7,500.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. Is it or is it not a change of existing law, modifying the power of the board as fixed by the law creating it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It may be a change in existing law, but it is not general legislation. Let us take a very simple illustration. At the last session we passed an act granting a pension to some particular individual. That is clearly private legislation; it is not general legislation. If we were to undertake to change that particular law so as to cut down the amount of that pension it would be a change of existing law, but it would not be general legislation.

Mr. WATSON. Does or does not the Senator believe that in legislation of this character we should take notice of the House rule?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no.

Mr. WATSON. You do not do that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have nothing to do with the House rule.

Mr. WATSON. Not being familiar with the custom here, I was not aware of the procedure, the rule there being that there should be no legislation on an appropriation bill. In my judgment, it is legislation when you change the power of the board from that which was conferred on the board by the organic law creating it, and that is precisely what this does; and yet it might not be inimical or hostile to the rule of the Senate, because I concede it is not general legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, it does not even change the power of the board. It simply makes an appropriation of $3,000 for the Chief of the Bond Division for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. BRYAN. I suggest to the Senator from Utah if he will notice the second paragraph of the committee amendment, he will see that there was no attempt to limit the power granted to the board by the act creating it. The language read by my colleague from the act authorizes the board to fix salaries, fees, and expenses. So paragraph 2 of the Senate committee amendment provides "for salaries and expenses under the Federal Farm Loan Board created by the act"—giving the date—"including the actual necessary traveling expenses of the members of the board and such salaries, fees, and expenses as are authorized by said act, including farm-loan registrars, examiners, and such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees," and so forth.

The committee did not undertake to change the provision of the act at all. What the committee did was to fix the salary of the employees they already have for the ensuing year, the salaries enumerated in the first paragraph of the amendment. If the Senate has not a right to lower a salary fixed by the Farm Loan Board or to raise the salary of an employee of that board, then we have very little right, and the rule of the Senate is used to take away any power at all to control the amount that should be paid to clerks, secretaries, and so on. I have never thought that the provision inhibiting the Senate from making general legislation upon an appropriation bill could be given so narrow a construction as is contended for.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Utah a question. Could the right of Congress to make appropriations be limited by any rule of the Senate? Is not the authority of Congress to appropriate for any purpose, its right to determine what it will appropriate for this purpose and that purpose, a constitutional right which could not be taken away by any rule which the Senate could possibly adopt?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it would be correct to say that the power of Congress to make an appropriation could not be taken away by any rule of the Senate. That is obvious; but the Senate could by rule limit the way in which it shall legislate, the way in which it shall make appropriations.

Mr. McCUMBER. But not the amount which it can appropriate for any particular purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think not. I have said all I care to say about the matter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I am interested in his definition of general legislation. I should like to ask him if an amendment should be offered here that the act known as the farm-loan bank act is hereby repealed, would it be general legislation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no doubt it would be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then does the Senator argue that a provision which would nullify a part of that act is not general legislation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I have evidently been unhappy in stating my position. I have already said that if this provision was that "hereafter" the salaries of the members of the Farm Loan Board shall be $7,500, that would be general legislation. But this proposed amendment does not do that. It does not change the law at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator another question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The effect of it simply is to make an appropriation of $7,500 for each of the members of the Farm Loan Board for the coming fiscal year, leaving the law to stand as it is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose an amendment were offered here that the Federal farm-loan act is hereby suspended for one year, would that be general legislation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think that would be general legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator now proposes to suspend for one year one of the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; we do not suspend it at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It does in effect.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; we make an appropriation of $7,500 for each of the members of the Farm Loan Board. The question may arise hereafter, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia, as to whether, notwithstanding this appropriation of $7,500, there may not in some way be some sort of an action to recover the remaining $2,500. That is a matter to be determined hereafter, about which I express no opinion; but I do insist that, so far as this proposed amendment is concerned, it does no more than to make an appropriation of $7,500 for each member of the Farm Loan Board for the fiscal year 1917–18; it does not attempt to change the existing law, and it is not general legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there has never been created in any of the departments of the Government a division or a bureau that was not created almost in the exact language of the act creating the Federal Farm Loan Board. The employees in those divisions or bureaus for the first year have been paid from a lump sum the salaries fixed by the superintendent or head of the division or bureau, and following the first year the House of Representatives have always requested the head of the bureau or division to itemize the principal officers and the classes of clerks that they require in the division or bureau; and there never has been a question raised in the Senate of the United States that it was general legislation.

Now, I want to tell the Senate why the Committee on Appropriations made this change at this time, because this is the first year we have appropriated since the board has been organized in this specific way. We asked the members of the board to submit to the committee their present monthly pay roll. We did that, Mr. President, to find out how the salaries paid out of that lump sum compare with the salaries that are being paid by the other departments of our Government. This is what we found, and I want to say I hold in my hand the report which was made by two of the members of the board, and they appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate:

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BUREAU,
TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1917.

Present monthly pay roll of the Federal Farm Loan Board:
Members: Salary, $10,000 per annum; total, $40,000.
* * * * * * *
Secretary to board: Salary, $6,000 per annum.
* * * * * * *
Publicity agent: Salary, $3,900 per annum.
Chief Bond Division: Salary, $3,600 per annum.

Private secretary's salary, $2,500; there being four of them, $10,000. Clerks of class 4 and other clerks are, of course, paid the same as the law provides, and I shall not take the time of the Senate to show how many they have of the different classes of clerks.

Stenographers, $1,200—and they give the names of the stenographers drawing $1,200. Then, there are two stenographers they have—clerks, they call them—at $720. They are paying the messengers $900. Every other department is paying $840.

Now, let me call the attention of the Senate to some of the salaries that are paid for similar work in other departments. Here is the secretary of the board, at $6,000. Senators, do you know that that is $1,000 more than we appropriate for the Commissioner of the Land Office, for the Commissioner of Pensions, for the heads of all the bureaus of our departments? One thousand dollars more is paid to the secretary of the board than is paid to the heads of these great divisions of our Government.

Mr. WARREN. To the Assistant Secretary of State or Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMOOT. I am coming to that. The Assistant Secretary of State does not get as much as the secretary of this little board which has never done one dollar's worth of business up to the present time.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the secretary is a man of special attainment or special training along such lines, and if that has anything to do with his salary?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether it is proper for me to speak of that. I could answer the Senator by giving the information that was given to the committee by two members of the board, but I do not think that is proper to do. However, I will say to the Senator that it is not the case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It might perhaps help the Chair to rule on the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing if the Chair desires to rule on it, but I was going simply to call attention to the other reasons why the change was made and also why we have always followed the course that has been followed in the past, and no question was ever raised before.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair does not know what he ruled before. He is going to rule now upon it and the ruling is based upon these views.

The Chair does not agree with the discussion that has been going on as to what constitutes general legislation. It is not as broad as the definitions have gone. It is not necessary to have a law applied to everybody in the United States in order to be general legislation.

But the Chair does not think that the question of salary is general legislation. Whatever the definition of general legislation may be, however broad or however constricted it may be, the rule of the Senate, it seems to the Chair, with reference to changes was based upon the idea that rights had been acquired under the legislation that could not be summarily changed in an appropriation bill.

No man, as the Chair understands it, is entitled to a fixed salary. The Chair does not agree with the Senator from Georgia that you are just making an appropriation here of a part of a salary and that at some time you may come along and pay the rest of it if you want to do it. The salary is nothing but the salt money that is paid to all of us when we earn our salt, and the Chair thinks that in an appropriation bill it is perfectly legitimate for the Congress of the United States to either increase or decrease the salary of an official. He has no vested interest in his salary. He has a vested interest in his office until lawfully removed therefrom.

The Chair does not want this ruling to go out with the opinion of the Chair that, if the salary be decreased to $7,500, the members of the Farm Loan Board will have a $2,500 claim against the Government of the United States. The Chair does not think so. When a man takes an office he is subject to the legislative will with reference to his salary.

The Chair would have been inclined to sustain the point of order made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], with reference to salaries and expenses, had it not been for the fact that the amendment seems to still give the Farm Loan Board the identical right which it has under the statute, and that the only salary which this amendment is decreasing, as it seems from the discussion, is that of certain officials of the Farm Loan Board now holding office. The Chair would have sustained the point of order had not the amendment contained exactly the language of the bill, because the Chair believes that it would have been general legislation for the Congress of the United States to summarily take away from the Farm Loan Board their general power, which in the statute is conferred upon them. If it had been confined to that, the Chair would have sustained the point of order; but as the statute seems to be contained in the amendment the point of order is overruled.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, from the decision of the Chair I wish to appeal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the fact that that language is contained in the general law giving to this board the right and the power to fix various salaries has anything to do with the point at issue; in other words, it does not make this general legislation. I do not believe it is legislation, and I do not believe it even goes far enough to change existing law. If these salaries had been fixed by Congress, as Congress might have done and may yet do, it still would be proper in an appropriation bill, if Congress saw fit to do so, to appropriate one-half of the salary, and the fact that it is proposed to appropriate all of the salary would not make the provision subject to a point of order. A motion to amend it and to increase the salary is in order and is proper, and is one of the motions that can be made; but if Congress failed to appropriate at all for some particular officer, it would not put the amendment in such a position that it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, along the ling he is speaking——

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. For many years in the Territories the law provided certain sums for the payment of the governors and certain sums for the salaries of the judges. They were cut down from $500 to $1,000 a piece. Suits were afterwards brought by those governors and judges who received the reduced salaries in one or two cases for the balance they claimed to be due, but those suits failed.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. The fact that we do not appropriate in a bill the entire sum that is due under the law to an officeholder does not make such a provision subject to a point of order, because it does not change existing law, even though that were the rule here.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to say that we had some years ago a national board of health. The salaries were pretty liberal. They used up a large amount of money, and finally Congress, in its discretion, absolutely refused to make any appropriation, and the board went out of existence.

Mr. NORRIS. And Congress had a perfect legal right to so refuse. As to whether they would have a claim against the Government has nothing to do with the question as to whether it is in order here as a parliamentary proposition. They may have had such a claim or they may not have had.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator this question——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. Suppose the law provided that this board was authorized to employ a secretary, that it specified the duties of the secretary and fixed his salary, and that then in a general appropriation bill the proposition was made to fix the salary of that officer at $1 per annum, does the Senator think that that would be general legislation in effect?

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that if that were put in a bill as a proposition of law—that is, if you provided in the bill that the salary of this particular official should be $1 per annum—that would be legislation. That is an entirely different proposition from appropriating to pay a salary. Congress can appropriate anything in an appropriation bill so long as it does not go above the salary fixed by law, and it is not subject to a point of order as changing existing law; it makes no attempt to change the law.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that if the appropriation item is fixed at $1 per annum as his salary, that fixes the salary.

Mr. NORRIS. In effect, it might do that——

Mr. FLETCHER. It destroys the power of the board.

Mr. NORRIS. In effect it might do that for the fiscal year for which the appropriation was made, but it only does that from the fact that he could not sue the Government of the United States. The salary would still be the same, but he would have no method of collecting it. That would be the only difference. It would be an impossibility to collect it unless Congress should consent for the suit to be brought.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it not, in effect, changing such salary upon an appropriation bill changing general legislation which Congress has previously enacted?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. The board would be powerless to do what Congress authorized it to do in the organic act creating the board.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the board is not powerless, but the fact that the law gives the board the authority to fix the salary does not give the board the authority to pay it. There is only one way to get money out of the Treasury of the United States, and that is through an appropriation by Congress. If Congress refused to appropriate anything for the President's salary or for Senators' salaries they could not get anything; there is not any way to get it; but they might have a claim for the money, if they had some tribunal in which they could enforce it. Unfortunately, however, for them in that case, there would not be any such tribunal.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to get the matter clearly in my mind. The law creating this board said that the members of the board should name such officers as seemed best to them, and should determine in advance how much their pay should be. This bill now not only names the officers but also names the pay. How can the Senator from Nebraska or how can any other Senator on this floor say that that is not general legislation? You have usurped a power clearly given to the board, that they shall name whatever officers in their judgment are proper.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Just let me make the idea clearer.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It does not affect the status of the Senate and of this board to say that the Appropriations Committee has taken exactly the names of the officers that the board had fixed. The mere fact that those are put in here, that the other House and the Senate are naming these men and fixing the salaries does not change the situation, when the statute says that the board shall name the men and fix the salaries.

I agree with the Senator that when it comes to paying the money we are the ones to say whether or not it shall be paid, but in this case you are usurping a prerogative of the board.

Mr. NORRIS. All we are attempting to do here is to appropriate for the salaries. Now let us read it:

> Federal Farm Loan Bureau: For four members of the board, at $7,500 each; chief, bond division, $3,000—

And so forth, making in all an appropriation of $67,620 in that paragraph. There is an appropriation of $67,620 divided among the officials named in the paragraph in the amount designated after each. There is no attempt to fix anybody's salary. If the official who is given by that appropriation $7,500 is entitled under the law to a salary of $10,000, as I understand he is, it is simply an act of Congress refusing to appropriate for his entire salary; that is all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Just a moment. Let me take that thought a little further. Suppose that Congress did not appropriate anything for any member of this board. Then they would not get any money. Suppose they undertook to get it. There is no tribunal in the United States where they could go and get it; there is no way to sue the United States, and they would not get anything. We have not changed any law; we have merely refused to pay them, and there is nobody who can compel us to do so. It is perfectly in order under this bill while the bill is pending for the Senator from South Carolina or any other Senator to move to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$12,000." I am not making an argument against the reduction in salary; I am saying nothing about that. This is strictly a question of order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. NORRIS. But if the Senator's position is right, that we can not provide for any amount in the bill except the full amount of the salary, then what is the use of considering any of these matters? Why not pass a blanket resolution and say that every official shall go to the Treasury of the United States and get the amount of money that the law provides his salary shall be? If that contention is true, then all our appropriation bills are practically useless; there is no sense in them, and there is no use in devoting our time to them.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield further to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not arguing that we have not the right to decrease salaries if we see fit to do so. The point I am making is that a statute, a law, provides that this board shall name these officers—they may name a dozen or may curtail the number to six or to five—and they shall also fix their salaries. Now, we on this appropriation bill have clearly changed existing law by doing what the statute says the board shall do. If the board were called in and asked how many offices they had created and they told the committee "We have created a dozen or a half dozen, and the total amount is so much," then it would have been clearly within the province of the Appropriations Committee to have said whether or not they would appropriate a sum sufficient to cover the amount; but I do maintain that the Appropriations Committee went into the field of general legislation when they named the officers and the salaries, whereas the statute says that the board beforehand and in advance should name the officers and fix their salaries.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to correct the Senator. We have not named the officers.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr President——

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me a moment to correct the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator said we have named the officers. We sent to the board and asked them to let us know what offices they had established, the designation of those offices, and what salaries were authorized. They did that. We have not fixed them at all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, I should like to answer the Senator from North Carolina. The committee, then, should have appropriated an amount sufficient to have covered the entire number and not designated the offices.

Mr. OVERMAN. We appropriated for the salaries exactly as the board fixed them and in the same number.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But it was their province to name the officers, and the province of the committee to appropriate a lump sum. The law provides that the Farm Loan Board shall name the officers and fix their salaries.

Mr. OVERMAN. We did not name the officers; the board named them.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Of course, they may have named the officers; but the point I am contending for is that it was not within the province of the committee to name the officers and fix their salaries.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President I think I will claim the floor for a while. This bill does not change or attempt to change any law. I think, even if it did change the law we have been speaking of, it would not be general legislation; but I am not admitting that it changes any law whatever. The law provides that the board shall fix the salaries. The law has never provided that the board should appropriate money to pay them. That law remains the same as it was. The board still has the power to fix the salaries; and to-day while we are deliberating that board can change the salaries if they want to, either by increasing them to some other amount or reducing them, as they see fit.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment.

Mr. SHIELDS. Right in that connection I should like to direct the Senator's attention to a matter. I understand that the Senator's opinion is that the Farm Loan Board has a right to fix the salaries?

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the law provides for that; yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. And that this section does not change that?

Mr. NORRIS. The section does not change that.

Mr. SHIELDS. Well, now, what is the effect of the first clause of this paragraph appropriating so much money for some dozen designated officers?

Mr. NORRIS. That means that those officers will get the amount of money appropriated.

Mr. SHIELDS. Does not that limit the power of the board to pay those specific officers the salaries the board have fixed?

Mr. NORRIS. No; the board has never had the power to pay them. We are the paying power.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then, does it not limit the amount at which the board can fix those salaries?

Mr. NORRIS. No; they are already fixed. It seems to me that Senators ought to get out of their minds that the fact that the board has the power to fix these salaries gives any greater force to the salaries when fixed than though Congress itself had fixed the salaries. It is legal in either case.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will ask the Senator this question: Out of the lump sum appropriated in the second paragraph, can the board pay the officers and employees mentioned in the first paragraph a larger sum than is there provided?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not understand what particular appropriation the Senator is referring to. There is not any lump sum provided in the second paragraph to cover appropriations made in the first paragraph.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will yield to me——

Mr. SHIELDS. One moment. I did not catch the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is looking at the same paragraph I am, the first paragraph of the amendment on page 42, he will find that the first paragraph carries a total appropriation of $67,620. There is no attempt in the next paragraph which follows to appropriate anything in addition for the items contained in the first paragraph.

Mr. SHIELDS. The first paragraph names certain employees.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. It appropriates so much money for their salaries.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. The second paragraph reiterates the general power of the board to appoint officers and fix their salaries, and appropriates the gross sum of $182,380 for that purpose. Now, is not the first paragraph a limitation upon that general power by pointing out certain officers and fixing their salaries?

Mr. NORRIS. I think not. The second paragraph——

Mr. SHIELDS. Let me conclude my question.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me read the second paragraph.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then, if it is not a limitation on them, can not the board under the second paragraph pay the salaries in their own discretion to the full amount they have heretofore paid?

Mr. NORRIS. They could pay them, of course, but they could not use public money to pay them; they would have to pay them out of their own funds.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then, the first paragraph is a limitation upon their power to name the officers and fix their salaries.

Mr. NORRIS. No; they have never had that power; there is no law that gives them the power to pay these men. They can fix their salaries.

Mr. SHIELDS. But there is a law giving them power to name employees and fix their salaries.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir; nobody disputes that.

Mr. SHIELDS. And the second paragraph contains a general appropriation, a lump sum, to pay salaries of that kind.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. SHIELDS. The two sections are certainly in conflict; and if in any way the power of the board given under the original act to name employees and to fix their salaries is limited by the first section, then that section is general legislation under the ruling of the Chair; and it seems to me to that extent the point of order ought to be sustained under the Chair's designation of what is general legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we ought to get clearly in mind the distinction between an appropriation and the fixing of a salary. There have been instances by the hundred in which the law has provided for a particular salary for a public official, and in which Congress has refused, in passing appropriation bills, to pay the entire salary, and sometimes has refused to pay any of the salary. Now, under the law, if it were an individual—if it were not the Government of the United States—the people aggrieved could go into court, could sue, and could recover. Next year, when this appropriation bill comes up—assuming now that no change is made in this amount—Congress may appropriate a different sum. It may appropriate, for instance, for the salary of the members of the board $12,000 instead of $7,500, and it would be in order. It is in order now to make that kind of an amendment. But to say absolutely that the committee, in bringing in this bill, have only one thing to do—to wit, to put in the amount of salary fixed by law—is to take away from them and from Congress any discretionary power whatever in making appropriations.

I am not contending that this is just. I am not making that point now. It is purely a question of law; and if the contention is correct that is made by those who think this point of order is good, then there is only one item that can be put in an appropriation bill for the salary of the members of this board, and that is $12,000. If the board next year raised that salary to $50,000, it would be out of order in an appropriation bill to put in any item except $50,000; and next year they could raise it to a million dollars, and we would have to appropriate a million dollars. Anything else would be out of order, because they have authority to fix it.

Why, Mr. President, Congress can not be mandamused to make an appropriation. For the purpose of the argument, let us assume that it is unjust and unfair. That makes no difference so far as the law that is involved is concerned. Congress has the right—and it is a right under the Constitution of the United States which can not be taken away by any statute or rule—to refuse to appropriate to pay any Federal official's salary. It can likewise refuse to appropriate the entire amount, and pay any smaller amount.

Several years ago the question arose, at one session of Congress, as to whether Members of Congress were entitled to mileage. It was claimed on the one side that they were entitled to mileage for an extra session that ran over into the regular session. It was contended on the other hand that they were not. I will say that the appropriation was defeated. There was one Member of the House who claimed that as a matter of law he was entitled to mileage. Congress did not appropriate it. There was only one way for him to get it. He came before Congress and asked Congress to pass a joint resolution permitting him to bring suit in the Court of Claims, and we passed it in order to enable him to bring suit to see whether he was entitled to it or not.

There is not any way to get money out of the Treasury of the United States except by appropriation of Congress, under the Constitution of the United States, and from the fact that a man has by law a salary coming to him it does not necessarily follow that he will get it. He must get Congress to appropriate the money, or he can not get it, and the fact that the salaries of these particular officials are fixed by a board gives to their salaries and gives to the men to whom the salaries are to be given no greater privilege and no greater right than if those salaries had been originally fixed by an act of Congress.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President I am going to ask the Senate to indulge me while I remind them of what took place when this statute—the Federal farm-loan act—was passed.

We were all more or less in the dark as to what was needed to carry out the purposes of the act. It was a new project—one that was needed by the farmers in order that they might finance their business. We had provided for commercial loans and commercial banks under the national-bank act in 1864, and the time came when farmers were to be given the same facilities under the Government that merchants and manufacturers have enjoyed for 50 years. No one could tell in advance just what officers would be needed for the Farm Loan Board, and it was intended by the Senate and House of Representatives, and by the President when he signed the act, that these men should be given a free hand until the law which established the board should be changed. The time has not come when a limit should be set. The time probably will come in a year, or two years, or five years, when Congress can intelligently legislate; and the vice of this sort of legislation is shown by the situation that exists to-day.

If this amendment to the appropriation bill is adopted, the board is absolutely saddled for the next fiscal year, for a year from the 1st of next July, with some useless officers—for instance, the publicity agent at $2,000 per year. There is no need of such an agent after the banks have once been started; but there is to be such a one under this provision of the amendment, and he is to be paid.

Something has been said about the secretary of the board. He is a man that I never knew until the rural-credits legislation was before Congress. He then came and volunteered his services, and for a year he worked with me on this bill without any pay of any sort. Later, when Congress provided a special joint committee on the subject, he was made secretary of that joint committee. When the time came to appoint the members of the Farm Loan Board I recommended him for a place on the board as being one of the two men in the United States that I had found who was best fitted to be upon the board. He was not appointed to the board, but the board appointed him secretary, and fixed his salary, as I am informed, at $6,000 a year. I had nothing to do with fixing his salary, and I did not know what it was until this bill came up. He is a highly accomplished man. I undertake to say that he knows more about rural credits than any other man in the United States. For us to undertake to say now that the board can not have a highly accomplished man of that sort unless it can get such a man for $3,000 is in the teeth of the statute.

We passed this statute deliberately. We knew what we were doing. This was done following the precedent established by Congress in creating the Federal Reserve Board. There, again, we were a good deal in the dark as to what the board would have to do, what agents and employees it would need, and we merely followed that precedent. We provided in section 3 of the act that the board shall consist of five members, and that they shall receive an annual salary of $10,000 each, payable monthly, together with their actual and necessary traveling expenses.

I did not know one of the members of this board at the time they were appointed. I did not know one of them to speak to. They were no friends of mine, except that every man who is interested in this measure and is trying to carry it out is a friend of mine, constructively. But for the Congress now to assume the right, in the teeth of what it has formerly done, to cut down the salaries of those men is obviously intended to cripple this act, and it will be resented by the farmers of the United States in that way, and it rightly should be.

The members have not had a chance to prove themselves. We do not know whether they are going to prove to be $10,000-a-year men or not. Personally I think they have done well and are $10,000-a-year men. Later, if it proves that they are not, and that the services they render the country are not entitled to that recompense, then Congress should meet the issue man fashion and amend the Federal farm-loan act and reduce the salary; or, if it is found that they are worth more, Congress ought to amend the act and increase the salary. Instead of the Congress of the United States fixing the salary of these important officials, the Appropriations Committee undertake to do indirectly what they could not do by an amendment, and they may marshal the help of all the members of the Appropriations Committee to carry through what they could not do in any other way I do not know about that.

Now, to proceed about the other employees, we provided in the same section:

> The Federal Farm Loan Board shall be authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as it may deem necessary to conduct the business of said board.

The board has done that, and I wish to have the Senate understand that no annual salary has been fixed by the Farm Loan Board yet. All of these men are employed by the month. Some of them will not be required a few months later; others will be required in their places. The board have not yet set up the 12 banks. They were required by the act to investigate to see what the farm-loan needs of the country are. They have been busily engaged. They have traveled over the entire country, and they have held hearings, and have finally located the 12 banks; and I have heard very little dissatisfaction expressed with the location of the banks. I think the farming interests of the country are back of them in the locations they have made.

The next step is to open the books of the banks for subscriptions to stock. They are obliged to do that under the act for 30 days. They have opened the books, and until the subscriptions are all in, after the 30 days have expired, they can not take the next move, but after the subscriptions are in the Government will take the rest of the stock which has not been subscribed for. Then it is the duty of the Farm Loan Board to select five directors for each of the 12 Federal land banks. That will be done, and then the land banks will be set up. Then the duties of the Farm Loan Board will instantly change again, and they will have to be supervisory instead of creative, and they will need a different set of officers. They will need men of a different sort.

Take this bond man that is provided in the amendment—the chief of the bond division. I am informed that the board has employed a man who is skilled in the sale of bonds. This board will have to supervise the issue of more bonds than any other bond house that ever existed in this country or any other. There will be millions and millions of them, and they ought to have the best bond man that can be obtained in the country. It will be good economy. This committee, sitting up here in the Capitol, with no special knowledge of the issue of bonds or the farm-loan act, assume to say that instead of paying a man $3,900—if that is it—they shall pay him $3,000. They assume to say that they shall have a publicity agent at $2,000 a year instead of $75 a week, which is what they are paying him now; and they assume to say that he must be paid that.

I undertake to say that legislation of this sort on an appropriation bill controls the general functions and purposes of the board, it controls the purposes of the act, and is general legislation; and I hope the Senate will take that view of it. So far as the salaries of the board are concerned, I am not afraid that the board members are not going to get their $10,000. I do not think even the committee will stand for that now.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to call the Senator's attention to the first part of the appropriation bill, which reads as follows:

> That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, namely.

Of course, that clearly places a limitation upon the amount to be paid to the members of the board. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that the provision itself would not be a change of existing law; but, taking the act as a whole, it clearly is legislation and it clearly does change existing law, because it would be impossible to pay these men any more than the $7,500.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me? I want to get in the RECORD at this point something along that line.

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator read this language:

> The following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. That question has been decided by the courts several times. I have one decision here to the effect that when Congress appropriates a sum in full compensation of the salary of a public officer the incumbent can not recover an additional amount, notwithstanding the prior statute fixes the salary at a larger amount than the sum so appropriated. That is a case in the United States Supreme Court, United States against Fisher, One hundred and ninth United States, page 143. This is exactly in line with the point the Senator makes.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is the case I referred to this morning in One hundred and ninth United States, and it is followed immediately by the case of United States against Mitchell, which holds the same thing. Those cases are well known; but that is exactly the point. These men who have been selected to draw $10,000 a year and who have been given terms of two, four, six, and eight years, have given up their other occupations and have come to Washington and have established themselves on a $10,000 a year basis. Now, in this indirect way the old fight on their salaries is renewed, the fight that went on here last summer, both in the Committee of the Whole and in the Senate, where eventually the salary was fixed at $10,000; and to undertake to change an important act of this kind in this indirect way I believe is general legislation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire another question?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield further.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator from New Hampshire believe that it will be possible to carry on this work for the amount appropriated here, $67,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. The amount is $280,000. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. HOLLIS. They are given $250,000 altogether under this amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. That is for all the employees; not only for the bureau, but for all the farm-loan banks.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what they have asked for.

Mr. HOLLIS. They asked for $300,000. The House provided $300,000 and the Senate committee cut the amount to $250,000. I do not know whether that will be enough or not. If it is not, I hope they will proceed and come to Congress for a further appropriation, and I believe they will get it.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am not troubled about that.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; there is no trouble about that.

Mr. HOLLIS. Now, if I may be permitted to finish, I will not be long.

The effect of the first paragraph of this amendment, if it is adopted, is, of course, to fix these offices and fix these salaries for a year in contravention of the act. It does not make any difference what the second paragraph says.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just at this point: The Senator from New Hampshire is, to the certain knowledge of the Chair, a fine lawyer. What is his construction of this language of the act?—

> All salaries and fees authorized in this section and not otherwise provided for.

It does not read "not otherwise provided for herein," but "not otherwise provided for."

Mr. HOLLIS. I understand that to mean "provided for in the act," because the salaries of the board are fixed, and other fees are fixed in the act. That is my understanding of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The language of it, however, is not "not otherwise provided for herein."

Mr. HOLLIS. It might be taken to apply generally.

The undoubted effect of the first paragraph will be to fix these positions and fix the salaries of these positions for the next year; and the second paragraph will not be taken by the board to be authority to exceed those salaries. For instance, the board would not feel authorized under this amendment, if it should be adopted, to increase the salary of the secretary. I think that would be highly improper if it were done. It would not be permitted, I should say, to employ two publicity agents, or more than four private secretaries, if those are needed. The result would be to cripple the act.

I think the third paragraph of the amendment has not been properly considered. That is undoubtedly general legislation. It reads as follows:

> Estimates in detail for all expenditures under the Federal Farm Loan Bureau for the fiscal year 1919, and annually thereafter, shall be submitted to Congress in the annual Book of Estimates.

When we passed the farm-loan act we especially avoided that, and intended to do so, because no one can tell in this new field what will be needed the next year or the year after. The time will undoubtedly come when that may be put in the annual Book of Estimates and the Senate Committee on Appropriations may be guided and bound by it to a certain extent, but it has not come yet. The board has not been appointed six months. The act has been passed for only a little less than six months, and it is impossible to tell.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. I ask my colleague, I suppose it is for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the appropriation bill?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Utah called attention to page 79 of Senate Precedents, in which the matter of general legislation is thoroughly considered and decided by Vice President Sherman. The distinction is there made by the Vice President:

> Of course it would be general legislation were it in the words suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] "that hereafter," etc. That would make it general legislation, but in the form in which it is presented, being an appropriation for the one fiscal year, it seems to the Chair the amendment is in the nature of a limitation upon the appropriation for that fiscal year, and does not become general legislation.

The amendment that we are considering provides not only for the fiscal year but annually thereafter, bringing it clearly within the ruling of Vice President Sherman, and on these grounds I ask the Senate to decide the appeal contrary to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] for just a minute.

Mr. HOLLIS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator consider those three paragraphs as one amendment, which are all subject to the same point of order?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; they can not be divided under the ruling of the Chair. It is a motion to strike out and insert, and a motion to strike out and insert can not be divided.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand; but the third paragraph proposing that annually hereafter a return shall be submitted to Congress in the annual Book of Estimates is clearly general legislation.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In my opinion, Mr. President, the other two paragraphs are not general legislation. I will not ask the Senator to stand and listen to me. I have finished the question I wanted to ask him.

Mr. HOLLIS. I should like to add before I take my seat that the point has already been ruled on by the Chair and decided.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And there is an appeal.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; the point that the amendment must be considered as one has been ruled on by the Chair and not appealed from.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I accept that statement.

Mr. HOLLIS. The question now is whether the point of order shall be sustained.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Chair overruled the point of order, I understand.

Mr. HOLLIS. He did.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as to the question whether this changes any existing law, even if that were subject to making a point of order, I simply want to say that the first paragraph, it seems to me, does nothing but make an appropriation. It fails to appropriate the full amount of salary provided for in the farm-loan act. It does not in any way repeal the farm-loan act nor purport to amend it at all. I understand that under this amendment the members of the board will get only three-quarters of the salary which was provided for in the act. The next Congress may give them the full amount. The farm-loan act would stand right straight through untouched and unmodified in any respect whatever.

Mr. OVERMAN. Congress could give them $25,000.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes. The mere failure to appropriate does not constitute an act of general legislation, of course. The point of order is that this is general legislation, whereas it is a mere failure of Congress to appropriate the amount of salary which some previous Congress had provided by legislation. Clearly the first two paragraphs would not be legislation; but the third paragraph clearly is legislation, in my opinion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to call the attention of the Senator before he takes his seat to the fact that our fight on the floor has been really with reference to the first and second paragraphs.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; that is what I heard.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The third is really a very immaterial paragraph.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is utterly unrelated to the other two paragraphs.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is immaterial. The really important issue has been whether the Appropriations Committee can classify the salaries to be paid to employees of the Farm Loan Board when the act originally creating the board gave them a lump sum and let them classify them themselves. I regard it as very important to sustain the right of the Committee on Appropriations to get away from lump-sum appropriations and to classify and specify the amount to be paid to each individual. I think if that were done everywhere it would result in a very large saving and economy to the Government.

I wanted to call the Senator's attention to this provision which the Chair called to the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire:

All salaries and fees authorized in this section and not otherwise provided for shall be fixed in advance—

And so forth.

That language itself was intended, it seems to me, to clearly reserve the right to Congress in an appropriation bill to fix the salaries of the various employees to suit themselves.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I did not think anyone would make a point of order on the paragraph which simply asks these men to submit estimates in detail for all expenditures under the bureau for the fiscal year 1919 and annually thereafter, and when the time comes I will agree to strike out the words "and annually thereafter," which would make it in order according to the ruling of the Chair.

Some years ago both Houses provided that the details should be given. We found some astonishing facts under the lump-sum appropriations that were made. We found that in departments, when Congress had refused to raise the salaries of clerks, they were transferring clerks from one department at $1,800 and paying them $2,700 and $3,600 and $4,000 at their own sweet will without Congress knowing anything about it. So the policy since that time has been to require them to furnish a detailed statement of what they have been doing. When these bureaus are established we have to give them a lump sum, and then require them to furnish us the details so that Congress can keep an eye on what they are doing. If we did not do that, they might provide $6,000 or $10,000 for an official, and the committee wants to know every year by a detailed statement what has been done with the lump sum of money.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The contention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has a great deal of force, that in the third paragraph of the proposed amendment the words "and annually thereafter" may be general legislation, but the Senator from North Carolina can, in behalf of the committee, modify the amendment by withdrawing those words.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do modify it by striking out the words "and annually thereafter."

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, a point of order. Do I understand the Senator in charge of the bill, without consulting his committee, can change the amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have consulted some of the members of the committee, and they agreed to strike out the words "and annually thereafter."

Mr. HOLLIS. I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he has held a meeting of the committee?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator will excuse me. I think the chairman of a subcommittee, the Senator in charge of a bill, always has a right to change any wording, providing it does not change the substance. I have always exercised that authority.

Mr. HOLLIS. The very purpose of the change is to alter the substance so as to have the amendment ruled in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all. Instead of requiring an estimate every year, I simply modify it to ask for one next year.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator does not understand me. He purposely withdraws certain words in order to make the amendment in order. Then he says he has the right to change something that is not material.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have the right simply——

Mr. HOLLIS. It is either material or it is not. He does not assume the right to change anything material, and if he does not make the proper change it is not material. So, either way, I do not see that he accomplishes what he desires.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, as a member of the committee, I wish to say that I think the Senator in charge of the bill will have no difficulty in getting the consent of the committee to the change, but I suggest that he make the motion from his place in the Senate, and I think the committee will sustain him in voting for it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. I thoroughly agree with the Senator in his desire to get from the Farm Loan Board information with reference to the salaries of employees of that department to be appropriated for by the Congress. I think that is a very wise provision in all legislation of this character. Having been detained from the Senate during the discussion of the first paragraph of the amendment, to get the information I desire, I may be compelled to ask the Senator to repeat, but I should like for the Senator to explain to me, if he has already explained it to the Senate, what process of reasoning the committee pursued in reaching the conclusion that the salaries of the members of the Farm Loan Board should be reduced from $10,000 to $7,500?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Before the Senator answers that question I will state that I was one of the Senators who insisted when the bill creating the office was before the Senate on fixing the salary at $7,500. I should like to have had that done but my judgment was not accepted by the Senate and the law as we find it on the statute books was passed, the members of the board were appointed, and they have entered upon the discharge of their duties under the law. It does not seem to me that it would be acting in good faith with them now to reduce the salary. Will the Senator answer that question?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator voted to fix the salary at $7,500 when the act was before the Senate. I thought as the Senator did, but inasmuch as the salary had been fixed at $10,000 by the law I voted against it. However, the committee thought $7,500 was a sufficient amount to pay these men, and our policy is, whenever an appropriation bill comes in, to reduce other salaries along the line of retrenchment and give such salary as in the judgment of the committee is a sufficient amount for the services performed. For example——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to act in perfect harmony with the committee, I want to be in complete accord with the Members of my party in this body, but I do not think it is honest, I do not think it is the clean, proper thing to do after these men have been appointed to this office for the Appropriations Committee to come along and fix their salary at $2,500 less than Congress agreed to pay them in creating the office. It is bad faith, and I can not understand the process of reasoning which led the committee to such an erroneous conclusion.

Mr. THOMAS. Might we not on the same principle reduce the salaries $2,500 more and compel the resignation of the board?

Mr. VARDAMAN. We could abolish the office or make the salary so small that no self-respecting man would retain the office.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that at the time these salaries were fixed the necessities of the National Treasury were not so urgent as they are now and the necessity for economy was not so apparent. The salaries were fixed at $10,000 each by a very close vote, and afterwards the salaries of the members of a far more important commission were fixed at a lower sum, $7,500. I refer to the Tariff Commission. I think if we are going to attempt to economize, and apparently we are, because we are refusing to increase the salaries of employees who are lower paid, we ought to try to economize on the salaries of the highly and extravagantly paid heads of bureaus and commissions that have been created of late years.

Mr. VARDAMAN. In reply to what the Senator has said, I want to remind him that the committee is the servant of Congress and not its master. It is not the province of the Appropriations Committee to change a law of this character in this way. If it desired to change the salaries fixed in the bill creating the Federal Farm Loan Board, it should have done so by reporting a bill for that purpose rather than reducing the salaries in the appropriation bill. Nor do I agree with the Senator that the salaries of far more important commissions have been fixed at $7,500. There is no more important commission created by this Congress or any other Congress than the one we are now considering. If you want to economize in the interests of the American people, in the interest of Democratic-Republican government, cut out the appropriation for some of the battleships and reduce the expenses for military preparation which are not needed. This Farm Loan Board was created to serve that class of American people who, unfortunately, receive less attention at the hands of Congress than any other class of our citizenship—the class whose toil produces the wealth of this country, maintains its commerce in time of peace, and who in time of war fight the Nation's battles. This Farm Loan Board was created to serve the farmer. It is the first time in the history of the Government that an effective scheme has been provided under Government control by which the man who tills the soil shall be enabled to get cheap money with which to develop his farm, improve his home, and make farm life more tolerable. This insidious effort to discriminate against the farmer, to cripple and destroy this great scheme, especially designed to serve the farmer, is not creditable to Congress. The operation of the board is to be hindered, delayed, embarrassed, its members are to be insulted by withholding the necessary funds with which to carry out the purposes of the bill, reduce the salaries of the members thereof. I repeat, to put the matter mildly, it is not fair, it is not just, it is not honest.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to a fact which perhaps he and other Senators have not taken into consideration, that the salaries paid to this board are higher than the salaries paid for just as important work performed in other departments of the Government. When asked to increase salaries in other departments, heads of divisions, or heads of bureaus, the Commissioner of Pensions, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and hundreds of other important positions, our attention is called to salaries paid to the recent commissions created by Congress, and we are asked why similar salaries are not paid the officials and employees of the other departments of the Government. I think there ought to be at least a reasonable equality.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator is talking about something now that I am not criticizing the committee for doing at all. I am not animadverting upon the action of the committee with reference to the minor officers or employees of this board. I do not know anything about that; you may have fixed the salaries large enough; but I am discussing the question as to whether Congress can afford to treat in this way the commissioners who were appointed with the understanding that they were to receive $10,000 a year, and after they had been appointed and entered upon the discharge of the duties of their office and now in this appropriation bill to reduce the salaries. I do not really think it is decent to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the only way to reduce the salary. I want to say to the Senator now that the salary provided by the committee of $7,500 is 50 per cent greater than the salary provided for the Commissioner of Pensions or the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I agree with the Senator that the salary of $7,500 is enough. I voted for it originally. But you do not propose to change that law by this enactment. You are only making it applicable for one year. You promised these men $10,000 a year, and that was done by Congress, by this very body, and now it is proposed that after they have been appointed and entered upon the discharge of their duties to say to them, "You shall have only $7,500." Now, the Senator does not think that is right. He would not do that in dealing with an employee of his. I submit that the same moral law should govern the Nation in dealings with its employees that controls honorable men in their dealings with each other in the affairs of private life.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; but it is not for this year; it is for the next year. If the Senator's position was right the salary would never be changed. You never hear any objection at all when increases of salary are made. Nobody ever speaks of that——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should object to it very earnestly.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean upon the same ground the Senator states.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have no personal interest in this matter. No member of the board is anything to me, except as an officer of this Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think $7,500 a year is a large enough salary and all that the law should have promised in the beginning, but it is not all they are entitled to under the act creating the office and to which they were appointed.

Mr. SMOOT. But this bill, if enacted into law, will not take effect until the 1st day of July this year, and it provides a salary from that time on for one year.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is not this the first salary that is paid them?

Mr. SMOOT. No; they have been drawing $10,000 a year.

Mr. VARDAMAN. How long have they been drawing it?

Mr. SMOOT. Since their confirmation, and they will receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per year until the 30th of June of this year even if this bill passes reducing their salary.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But they will not draw it for a year?

Mr. SMOOT. They will draw it from the time they were confirmed by the Senate until the 30th day of June, 1917.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But that will not be a year.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is nearly a year. The law was approved July 17, 1916, and they were appointed shortly after that date. I have not here the journal record showing the exact date, but from the date they were confirmed they have been drawing at the rate of $10,000 a year and will do so until the 30th of June, 1917.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should be very glad to vote to reduce the salary to $7,500 to take effect after the terms for which these men were appointed expires, but I do not think it is treating them fairly to reduce the salary for the terms for which they were appointed. I do not think it is just to that great function created by the Government in the interest of the agriculturists of the Republic, and therefore I hope the Senate may not agree to the proposition to reduce in this way the salaries.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say, as the Senator knows, that this is upon a question of order now. If the Chair is sustained and the Senator desires to offer an amendment of that kind after the Chair is sustained, it will be in order. We can amend it at any time or as we please after we vote on the pending question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have nothing further to say, Mr. President. I simply wanted to protest against what I believe to be a great injustice both to the Senate and the members of the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think that the committee of the Senate is likely to act in direct opposition to what was intended when the act was formulated and passed. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], who had charge of the bill in its passage and who has been very zealous in getting it to become a law, has stated the case more exactly than any other that I have heard yet, and that is that here is a universal proposition, one fraught with more interest to the American people than any bill that has been passed in the history of Congress in their material welfare. It is a bill to enter an entirely new field, without precedent. None of us can determine what are going to be the developments under the operation of the Farm Loan Board and what is going to be the result in the offering of its bonds on the market. One of the most important things is to get started right at the beginning, and for that reason in the discussion of the measure on its passage particular care was taken to guard against any specific legislation which might be ill advised and cripple the board in its general work.

Now, as a specific case, in carrying out that idea none of the subofficers under the Farm Loan Board were named in the body of the act, but the discretion was given the board to get just such men as in their judgment would best carry out the provisions of the law. They were to name in advance the amount to be paid these employees and the duties that they were to perform specifically for the reason that neither we nor they were competent to judge just what was going to be the development when they came to establishing a rural-credit system in America, a thing that had never been attempted before.

There was debate as to the amount of salary to be paid these men. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has compared the salary of $10,000 with that of other heads of bureaus. There is not a department nor a bureau in the Government that has as grave responsibility laid upon it as these men charged with the relief of the agricultural States of this country in the development of that upon which we all depend, covering the entire United States under their immediate observation. These men have to travel throughout the country and locate the land banks. They are now charged with the responsibility of deciding who are the proper persons to carry on the banking business in the several districts created.

It seems to me that the House acted wisely and showed evidence of seasoned statesmanship when, in the initial period, in the beginning of the operation of the Farm Loan Board, they carried out the intent and purposes of Congress in enacting the law by simply observing strictly the terms of the act in their appropriation.

I appreciate what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] who has charge of the bill said, that there has been perhaps an abuse of the lump-sum appropriation; but is that any reason why we, as wise men in such an important piece of legislation, should follow the report of the committee? Necessity demands that at the initial period of the life of the Farm Loan Board, when we can not legislate intelligently as to the specific officers and the functions of the office, we should give them a lump sum. It will be ample time for us to see that they make specific appropriations when the overhead charges, as manufacturers and business men call the establishment of a plant, shall have been provided for, when the machinery is in operation. When by process of elimination and substitution we have all the different functions of this new undertaking clearly defined and in working order, then an amendment such as is proposed by the Senate committee would be in order. But you have a brand-new thing that none of us knows anything about. We have tried to select men who know something about it. We have clothed it with certain privileges and certain freedom of action that would not be proper if the thing were already established and in working order.

As to the change from $10,000 to $7,500. That question was debated on this floor. This is identically the same body that said to them in the statute you shall get $10,000. We said it by a majority vote. Now, the Appropriations Committee proposes to say to these men in effect, "We did not know that you were going to be selected. We have made your salary $10,000 in the original act. Now that you have been selected we do not believe you are worth it." If I were a member of that board, I would resign instanter if it were done. If I knew the men, I do not believe that a reduction to $7,500 would have any effect, so far as their financial relations to the office are concerned. I do not believe that they would hesitate to continue their work if it were clearly understood that we have reduced it because we have gotten so miserably poor that we can not afford to pay it, or that there was some good substantial reason why we should not pay it; but to let it go out before the public that we by some legal enactment promised unknown men $10,000 and the minute we knew them reduced it to $7,500 is not only a breach of contract but an insult to the men who have not yet proven whether they are worth it or not.

I had rather reduce the salaries in every established bureau whose officers are now known, whose capacity is known, than to take three men who were promised a salary of $10,000 when the matter was merely academic, and then, when we know the specific personnel, to say to them, "We will only give you $7,500; you do not look like you are worth any more." I waive the question of honesty which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has brought out. We have made a contract with these men, and I should like to keep it.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. BRADY. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the $10,000 salary for this board is the only salary that this body specifically fixed, and now, at the first session after passing that law, we are trying to reduce the salary.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Precisely. I want to emphasize one other point, Mr. President. I am not going to attempt to array class against class, but we have been creating commission after commission—a Federal Trade Commission, a Civil Service Commission; we have created an Interstate Commerce Commission to look after trade; we passed a Federal reserve act to look after banking; we provided ample means for their support; and here, right on the threshold of the first time that the agriculturists of this country have been recognized upon the footing of business men, when we have organized great institutions, our farm-loan banks, our special organization, with its tributaries throughout the different districts—right in the beginning, before we have had time to test whether or not these men are worth a salary of $10,000, we propose to cast an insinuation on them to the effect that the functions of this board are on a parity with the functions of other departments of the Government.

I mean to say here to-day that, if the Farm Loan Board discharges the functions for which we created it and realizes that for which we have been striving, its members are not only worth $10,000 a year, but they would be worth $50,000 a year to this country in actual returns in the development of our undeveloped resources in an agricultural sense.

Mr. President, from every standpoint I still maintain that when the Farm Loan Board was clothed with the power to name the officers under them—their clerks, their bond listers, and the different offices that must be created to carry out the purposes of the act—when Congress said that they should have the right to name those officers and we in an appropriation bill name them, we have been guilty of an usurpation in violation of the clear, express terms of the statute.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from South Carolina does not think the ruling of the Vice President is wrong, does he?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want the Senator to get the point that I am making. It seems to me not quite clear in the minds of others, though it is so in my own mind. I do not say that Congress has not the power to appropriate any amount it pleases for this purpose, but it has not the power to name these officers, because the statute says the Farm Loan Board shall name them, and yet we propose to name them.

Mr. HARDWICK. The pending proposition, if the Senator will pardon me, was whether or not Congress had the power in an appropriation bill to fix the salaries of the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; this other question was brought in—the question as to whether or not this was general legislation.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Vice President did not rule on both those questions together.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; he did. The Vice President ruled, as I understood the ruling of the Chair, that this was not general legislation.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. General legislation is the change of a statute that is general, and if this is not general legislation it is a modification of general legislation, and is in its nature to that extent general. The act says that the Farm Loan Board shall name its subofficers, leaving out the question of salary.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment? Would the Senator mind having the Secretary state the proposition which the Vice President ruled on, for I do not agree with him exactly about what the precise pending question is?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not object to having that done.

Mr. HARDWICK. I should like to have that done if it will not bother the Senator, because I want to know, and I might agree with him. What is the amendment with respect to which the ruling was made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that he is unable to state the exact point.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Chair know which amendment the Vice President held was not subject to the point of order made against it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Beginning at the bottom of page 41 and extending on through the amendment to the bottom of page 42.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It was in the amendment of the Senate committee which was proposed in lieu of the House text.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, my understanding is——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Georgia that the Chair ruled that the amendment could not be divided.

Mr. HARDWICK. So the point of order was made against it all and it remained in that shape.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON. It seems to me that the ruling of the Chair is correct, as a matter of law; and it is my purpose, if the Chair is sustained, to offer an amendment to the committee amendment making the salaries of these officers $10,000; that is, restoring the salary that is authorized by existing law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield the floor?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not ask the Senator to do so. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will yield if the Senator desires me to do so, but he says he does not.

Mr. President, I am clearly convinced in my own mind, as a matter of course, if the ruling of the Chair is sustained that this is not general legislation, then amendments will be in order; but I wanted particularly to emphasize the importance of not crippling this board, or indirectly or directly doing or saying anything at the very beginning of the work of this board in its relation to the agriculturists of this country, in its relation to the farmers, which would be so injurious as this proposed action.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the Vice President's ruling, in my opinion, was undoubtedly correct, and if the Senate sustains that ruling, that still leaves the Senate full liberty of action.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand that; but I am now arguing that we shall reverse the action of the Senate committee and sustain the House of Representatives in the proposition to pay these officers the $10,000 salary, at least until we have proven whether or not it will be money well spent both in the salaries of the men and in what they shall achieve in the discharge of their duty.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I want to say but a word or two about this question. I am somewhat in sympathy with the view expressed by the Senator from South Carolina and with the view of other Senators, to the effect that we ought to give the Farm Loan Board every reasonable facility to discharge its functions and to carry out the business for which it has been appointed. I admit my further sympathy for the proposition that when men have been appointed to office with the understanding expressed in the statute that they were to receive certain compensation, it does look rather hard for Congress to reduce that compensation quite so soon as is proposed here, although I will say that originally I thought that $7,500 was quite enough to pay them, and I still think so. There may be, however, some element of equity in the contention which is now made on their behalf, that after they were appointed with the understanding that they would get $10,000 a year, we ought not right away to reduce the salary to $7,500.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I voted for the salary of $7,500 when the bill was on its passage.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know the Senator did, and he and I, as I recall it, voted together on that proposition; but, Mr. President, I do not want the Senate to get away from the precise point at issue, because I think we would be making a very serious mistake if we were to establish the precedent here of overruling the Vice President's decision in this matter when it is eminently correct, and when, to overrule it and to establish the contrary precedent, would be most dangerous to the future conduct of the business of this body.

The Vice President of the United States ruled that the point of order that this was general legislation in connection with an appropriation bill was not good when directed against that part of the bill as is contained on page 42, providing for this Farm Loan Board and its various officers. The contention made was that Congress was compelled to appropriate $10,000 as salary to the members of the Farm Loan Board, because the statute creating these offices fixed the salary at $10,000. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, if the Senate of the United States were to ever hold that, it would abdicate a great part of its power—the power of the Congress of the United States over the purse. That power is absolute and exclusive and ought never to be impaired by limiting it or fettering it in any manner whatsoever. One Congress of the United States can not by law create an office and provide a compensation for it which a future Congress may not either decrease or increase according to its will at the moment when it makes an appropriation.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator will allow me, does he not think that the proper way to do it would be to amend the bill by reversing the prior action of Congress and changing the salaries in the act itself, and not indirectly?

Mr. HARDWICK. There would be nothing improper in that; but I want to say to the Senator that in the legislative and parliamentary history of this country it never has been held to be necessary to do that in either House of Congress, and the Senator can not point to a single such instance. On the contrary, in the other House of Congress, by express rule, any proposition to reduce a salary is in order at any time on any appropriation bill. The rule there, Mr. President, is that you shall not change existing law in an appropriation bill. The rule here is that you shall not enact general legislation in connection with an appropriation bill—an entirely different thing, as Senators will observe.

My proposition is—and the Senator from New Hampshire must recognize its force—that no Congress of the United States by a statute creating an office and fixing its salary can commit future Congresses not to either reduce or increase that salary at at a subsequent time if, in their judgment, it is then proper to reduce or to increase the salary.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The third paragraph of this amendment reads:

Estimates in detail for all expenditures under the Federal Farm Loan Bureau for the fiscal year 1919, and annually thereafter—

Does not the Senator think that is clearly general legislation which prescribes what shall be done hereafter?

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, I do not think so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The provision continues:

shall be submitted to Congress in the annual Book of Estimates—

The Senator in charge of the bill admitted that that was general legislation——

Mr. HARDWICK. It is not; it is a mere regulation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. And the Senator in charge of the bill accepted an amendment striking at that part of the paragraph.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me answer the Senator's question. Of course, if he wants to ask it and answer it, too, then I will not trouble to answer it; but I can answer it, I think.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should be very glad to have the Senator answer it if it will not inconvenience the Senator to do so.

Mr. HARDWICK. My answer to it is this: That provision is a mere regulation of the expenditures, and provides for a report only. It is a mere regulation of a detail in connection with money that Congress appropriates. It is to secure for Congress information on which to base its action, and for that reason I do not regard it as a legislative provision.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, which is whether the modification suggested by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] striking out the words "annually thereafter"——

Mr. HARDWICK. That would certainly relieve it from any possible criticism.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was going to ask whether that modification suggested by the Senator from North Carolina had been made in the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands the parliamentary situation, the only question before the Senate is whether the ruling of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate; and pending that the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina would not be in order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia permit me further?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not yield to the Senator for a moment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There was an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appeal is now pending.

Mr. HARDWICK. I should like to know whether the language has been modified by striking out those words?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. SMOOT. The words "annually thereafter" have only reference to "estimates in detail for all expenditures under the Federal Farm Loan Bureau." They have nothing whatever to do with the appropriations.

Mr. HARDWICK. They have nothing whatever to do with the other provisions, except to say that Congress shall have such estimates in the future.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But it is a provision that extends beyond the life of the appropriation bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Suppose it is?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then it is general legislation.

Mr. HARDWICK. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Because it requires it to be done by this board every year; and that is clearly inappropriate on an appropriation bill. I supposed that the Senator from North Carolina had been allowed to modify that language.

Mr. HARDWICK. He did suggest that he would modify it in that connection, but I do not really take the same serious view of that provision as the Senator does, because it looks to me like it is a mere way of getting information that Congress is entitled to have.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is; but sometimes it is necessary to provide legislation in order to get information.

Mr. HARDWICK. Even if, Mr. President, that part of the amendment is subject to the criticism the Senator makes—and there is some doubt in my mind as to that—I did not pay any particular attention to that——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If I may be allowed——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am very certain the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] in charge of the bill, when he left the floor a few moments ago, thought that he had been allowed to strike those words out, so as to relieve it of that objection, but I can not so state positively.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the Chair's understanding that the only question now is on the appeal, and until that is withdrawn the amendment would not be in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was not an amendment. It is a question of whether the Senator who had proposed the original amendment could modify his own amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Pending the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the committee proposed it, according to the Senator from North Carolina, and it would be a committee amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought the Senator from North Carolina was substantially authorized by the members of his committee to make the modification.

Mr. HARDWICK. Be that as it may, Mr. President, if the language is modified so as to meet that objection, I do not see how anyone could possibly contend with any degree of either force or plausibility that the Vice President's ruling was wrong. Congress can not by what are loosely called "organic laws" create offices and fix salaries that any subsequent Congress can not modify in an appropriation bill, and I think we would be in a very bad condition if any such precedent as that were established in this body. Consequently I hope the ruling of the Vice President will be sustained by the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, very naturally there is a difference of opinion as to the ruling of the Chair, but I do not believe there is any division in opinion as to the rights which this ruling affects. I think we all agree that Congress has the authority to create positions of trust at a certain prescribed compensation, but that to enable their incumbents to receive their salaries there must be an appropriation made of the amount prescribed by law.

The consideration which shall most influence me in casting my vote on this matter is the duty of Congress, as I see it, after having taken action on this matter heretofore, during this session of Congress, when they do not know how important this board may be to the people of the Nation. We have no way of finding out until they shall have been tried.

These men were authorized by this Congress to fill certain positions at a certain salary prescribed by law, and until they have had a chance to demonstrate their ability and their worth to the people, personlly I shall not cast my vote for any proposal to reduce their salaries.

When the Federal farm-loan act was before Congress, I went to those in charge of the measure and endeavored to have them make the salary of the members of the board $7,500 each. They did not see fit to do so, but told me they had given long and studious consideration to this question, and as they had had the bill in their hands for many months I finally acquiesced in their wishes and opinions and voted for the salary which the law provides.

If the matter were to come before Congress to-day in its first stages, I might not cast my vote as I did then; and when I am asked to cast my vote in this body on a question of reducing salaries of those who have been legally appointed and authorized by law to perform this work, I should not feel that I was treating either the board or any of those under them fairly or honestly, if I did not cast my vote in such a way as to carry out the provisions of the law which now exists.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think that such action taken so soon after the creation of this board would seem to be a reflection upon the board and upon the object for which it was created; in other words, an act of unfriendliness to it, which those who are to be the beneficiaries of the system would naturally and properly resent?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; I certainly would consider it very unwise and unbusinesslike, as well as unjustifiable, at this time, for the same Congress which created the amount fixed by law to be paid to take such action, and it would undoubtedly humiliate the board before they had really started in with the work as a board which they are authorized to do or been given the chance to even demonstrate their efficiency or ability to perform the duties given them under the law, or to give Congress some intelligent idea of their real worth to the people they are endeavoring to benefit.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in explanation of the vote which I intend to cast in support of the ruling of the Chair upon the point of order raised by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. I do not believe that the amendment is new legislation. I am very much opposed to lump-sum appropriations whenever they can possibly be avoided. On the other hand, I believe that under existing conditions we should permit the salary of the members of the Farm Loan Board to remain at $10,000 per annum, the amount fixed in the original bill.

These men are working in a new field. They have a very hard task before them, and they are making, in my judgment, very good progress in the work which they have to do. They accepted these positions after Congress had passed a law fixing their salaries at $10,000 per annum, and I believe that before we change their salaries we ought at least to give them an opportunity to demonstrate what they can do in the way of the organization of this new and very large institution, which we all hope will be of great benefit to the farmers of this country. For that reason I expect to vote to sustain the Chair, and I hope to have an opportunity to vote to increase the salary of the members of the board from the amount named in the amendment, which is $7,500, to $10,000.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] called attention to the fact that these men were the highest paid men in the employ of our Government. I want also to call attention to the fact that they are going out into a different field than that occupied now by any other department of our Government. They are going out in competition with the business world, and it is only fair to compare their salaries with the salaries of men employed by large financial institutions handling similar amounts of money and conducting as large a volume of business as the Federal Farm Loan Board will conduct. Every Senator on this floor realizes and knows that there is no man in the United States managing the affairs of a bank that conducts the amount of business that the Federal Farm Loan Board will conduct or having the responsibility that these men will have who does not receive from $15,000 to $50,000 a year. For that reason I believe that at this time it is only fair that we should at least give the members of the board a full year's time to demonstrate what they may be able to do without attempting to cut down their compensation before they have even had time to inaugurate the work to be done by the Farm Loan Board or to demonstrate their ability to perform the duties assigned them.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] lead me to make to him this suggestion, that in voting upon sustaining the ruling of the Chair we are not considering whether or not we will raise the salaries of the members of the Farm Loan Board back to $10,000, as provided by the statute. That is a distinct and separate proposition, and the Rules of the Senate will allow us to express our will upon that proposition; in other words, the Senator does not have to vote against the ruling of the Chair in order to get an opportunity to vote to leave the salaries at $10,000.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I think the Senator must have misunderstood my remarks, as I intend to vote to sustain the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] also seemed to have the idea that the only way he could do justice to these men was to vote against the ruling of the Chair. I think the Senator in charge of the bill has already indicated that at the first opportunity—which is not now available because of the pendency of the point of order—he will move to increase the salaries of the members of the board to $10,000 a year; but if he does not do so, any Senator in favor of that proposition can do so, and the Senate can express its real will with reference to the amount of salary which should be paid, and be free from any parliamentary complication when it does so.

Mr. President, one word further. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] expressed the opinion that perhaps the last paragraph of the committee amendment did contain general legislation because it had in it the words "annually thereafter."

In the first place, I do not believe that a mere requirement of an estimate to be made by a bureau should be considered general legislation; but, passing that by, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that we are amending the text of the House provision. That provision has in it this language:

A detailed statement of expenditures hereunder shall be made to Congress.

We can go as far as we like upon that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It says "of expenditures hereunder."

Mr. BRYAN. We can go as far as we like in amending that language. We reproduce it, and then add this third paragraph. It seems to me, therefore, that, even under the most strained construction, the ruling of the Chair is correct.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to read from the statutes a general law that was passed on an appropriation bill:

That there shall be submitted hereafter in the annual Book of Estimates, following every estimate for a general or lump-sum appropriation, except public buildings or other public works constructed under contract, a statement showing in parallel columns:

First, the number of persons, if any, intended to be employed and the rates of compensation to each, and the amounts contemplated to be expended for each of any other objects or classes of expenditures specified or contemplated in the estimate, including a statement of estimated unit cost of any construction work proposed to be done; and

Second, the number of persons, if any, employed and the rate of compensation paid each, and the amounts expended for each other object or class of expenditure, and the actual unit cost of any construction work done, out of the appropriation corresponding to the estimate so submitted, during the completed fiscal year next preceding the period for which the estimate is submitted.

I wanted to put this in the RECORD not only to show that general legislation of this kind has been put on appropriation bills, but as showing that this is really carrying out what is provided by the general law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the committee put that in out of the abundance of caution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What law did the Senator just read from?

Mr. OVERMAN. The sundry civil act of a certain date.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Was the point of order made against that provision?

Mr. OVERMAN. It was not. It is a law. It is general legislation on an appropriation bill. It became a law and is a general law that requires all departments to send estimates.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Unless the Senator can produce a ruling of the Presiding Officer showing that that point of order had been made against it and it had been ruled in order he is simply hoisting himself by his own boot straps.

Mr. OVERMAN. I simply wanted to get that in the RECORD to show not only that it had been done, but that every department must do it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not doubt that there have been violations of the law by putting general legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The position of the Senator from North Carolina, as I understand it, is that this is not general legislation; that it is a mere repetition of existing legislation. It changes no existing law. It changes nothing. It merely repeats what is now a general rule applicable to everybody.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, does the Senator claim that if there is some general legislation in existence and it is clapped onto an appropriation bill it ceases to be general legislation?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, no. I do, however, claim that the provision contained in the third section of the committee amendment is not of any effect, because it is a mere repetition of a general law already of force.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, as I understand the provision read by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, that was tacked onto the sundry civil act. This has nothing to do with the sundry civil act. Nothing that is provided by the sundry civil act can affect the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a general law on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. No matter what the appropriation bill may be, if the words "annually hereafter" are used in an appropriation bill, it then becomes permanent law.

Mr. HOLLIS. The trouble is that it does not apply to the legislative, executive, and judicial bill; it applies only to the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; it may apply to all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. FLETCHER. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The ruling of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment: On page 42, line 5, strike out the numerals "$7,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000," so that it will read:

For four members of the board, at $10,000 each—

And so forth; and I also move to change the totals on page 42.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course that will be done if the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. The clerks have authority to change the totals.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the arguments in favor of this amendment have already been presented to the Senate so fully, in my judgment, that I am not justified in going into the matter now in great detail.

When the bill creating the Farm Loan Board was considered by the Senate a proposition was presented here to fix the salary of the members of the board at $7,500 per annum. That amendment was discussed at great length, was fairly considered by the Senate, and the Senate finally determined to fix the salary at $10,000. Upon the basis of that legislation the board has been organized and is proceeding with its work. The task is great and difficult. We are all interested in promoting the success of the rural-credits plan, and nothing should be done here which may have a contrary effect.

This is a critical time, in so far as the effectiveness of the farm-loan act is concerned. The manner in which the organization of the various banks provided for in the system is completed will determine in large part the success of this great measure or its failure. To reduce this salary now, after having determined that it shall be fixed at $10,000 and after giving full consideration as to the amount of salary justified by the duties prescribed by the act, in my judgment, would tend to impair the successful operation of the law.

It has been urged by other Senators already that it might be regarded by the public as a reflection upon the existing members of the board. I feel sure that no one who supports an amendment to reduce this salary would base his argument upon that premise. Nevertheless it might be so regarded by the public. More than anything else in connection with the farm-loan measure, Congress is interested now in drawing to the organizations to be effected, or bringing to the organizations to be effected under the measure, the confidence of the public. If that end is not attained, the law will prove a failure. There may be some interests in this country which would rejoice to see that end accomplished. I know that no Representative in either branch of Congress would be actuated by a motive of that kind. I believe it is unfair and unwise in an appropriation bill, under the circumstances in which this amendment arises, to reduce this salary, and for that reason I have offered the amendment to restore it to $10,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am in favor of paying each member of the Federal Farm Loan Board $7,500 per annum. When the bill creating the board was under consideration, on May 1, 1916, I offered an amendment decreasing the salary provided for in the bill as reported to the Senate from $10,000 to $7,500. That motion carried by a vote of 26 to 25. The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], having the bill in charge, gave notice that when the bill reached the Senate he would ask for a separate vote upon that item. On May 4 that vote was taken, by way of reconsideration of it, and the salary was increased from the amount provided in the amendment offered by myself and agreed to by the Senate to $10,000 per annum by a vote of 29 to 31, one Senator voting who was absent May 1 and one Senator changing his vote.

I do not think there will be any reflection upon any member of the board if this salary is reduced to $7,500, nor am I going to take the time of the Senate now to repeat what I said when I offered the amendment to the bill creating the office providing a salary of $7,500 for each member of the board; but I say now, without a question of doubt in my own mind, that there are many men in the employment of the Government of the United States who are doing and will do more work than the members of this board, and who are receiving but $5,000 per annum.

I do not want to go into the details, but I want to say to the Senate that we are soon to consider in connection with this bill the question of an increase of the salaries of certain employees of the Government. I fully believe that if a proper investigation were made it would be found that there are enough employees of the Government receiving salaries greater than they are actually earning to take care of all of those who are receiving salaries less than they are rightfully earning.

Mr. President, a practice is becoming quite common among the departments of late that can result in only one thing, and that is an undue increase in the salaries of certain Government employees. I have a letter, in answer to my letter asking for certain information, from one of the bureaus of our Government showing that the Treasury Department, the Department of Labor, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Department of Agriculture, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Bureau of Fisheries within the last few weeks have taken from this bureau alone a number of employees of the Government, and, upon the initiative of the heads of these departments or bureaus, have increased their salaries from $100 to $600 per annum.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, since that letter was written I want to say that four men have been taken, and one man was taken who was receiving $1,800 and transferred to one of these bureaus and given $2,500, thus increasing his salary by transfer $700.

Mr. SMOOT. And that has been done since the committee have passed upon this legislative bill and reported it to the Senate. I believe that some legislation must be passed in the near future to stop this kind of work. I want to say, however, in justification of the Farm Loan Board, that I do not know of the board taking from any of the other departments a single employee. While a couple of the members of the board were before the committee, without the information before me, I did bring up the question of transfers, thinking the Farm Loan Board had done the same thing; but I am only too glad to say that I know of no transfers of that kind that have been made by this board.

Mr. President, I want to say to the Senate that I have not the least feeling against a member of the Federal Farm Loan Board. I want the law to be a success. I voted for the law; and I know that it will be just as great a success with the members of the board drawing $7,500—50 per cent more than heads of other great divisions and bureaus of our Government—as if they drew $10,000. It is not going to make one particle of difference as to the result of the law. When the sundry civil appropriation bill comes before this body I want to see the salaries of the members of the Federal Trade Commission reduced. Take the Tariff Commission which was created by law a short time ago; by a vote of this body the salaries paid to the members of that commission were fixed at $7,500. That is the amount that a Senator of the United States receives. That is more than the United States district judges receive. That is more than the head of any bureau or division within a department of the Government receives; and I do not believe that we ought to be extravagant in the appropriation of money for one commission or for one department or for one bureau unless we are extravagant in the appropriation of money for all the others.

There is never a time when the legislative appropriation bill is being considered by the Appropriations Committee but that representatives appear from nearly every department of this Government asking for increases. The consideration of this bill was no exception to the rule; and whenever there are salaries paid to a commission or to the employees of a commission that are greater than the salaries paid in the departments already established, and which have been in operation since the Government started, they point to the new salaries of the commission, and say: "We are not being treated rightly. We are being discriminated against." We shall never have a feeling of contentment among the employees of the Government as long as there is a discrimination made.

Mr. President, it is for the purpose of paying the employees of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau in conformity with the salaries paid employees in the other departments of the Government that this amendment has been recommended by the committee, and I do not believe it ought to be changed. In fact, Mr. President, the salaries fixed, in my opinion, are generally higher than the salaries in other departments that are required to do similar work.

I am not saying, nor would I have Senators understand me to believe, that there are not salaries that should be increased in all of the departments, even above $1,000, many of them; but I want to say now that I know of employees in the Government departments who are receiving 50 per cent more than they can make anywhere else on earth, and they know it. I want to say, also, that there are employees in the Government service who are not receiving half of what they can make outside of the employment of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is true. I think it is true in all instances where a large number of people are employed. I am in sympathy with the sentiment of the Senator from Utah; but I want to ask him if he thinks it is good legislation, or even fair legislation, to place in appropriation bills, for salaries of offices created by other acts of Congress, amounts which are below the amounts fixed in the acts creating those offices? Is it good legislation?

We pass to-day an act creating a bureau, providing certain members and fixing their salaries. The appointments are made in accordance with the law, and presumably the incumbents are entitled to the compensation which is found in the act creating the offices. Now, is it fair or right, in making appropriations to meet fixed expenditures of the Government, by indirection—for that is what it amounts to—to reduce the salaries by providing an amount which must be accepted if the incumbent remains in the office? And, of course, he takes his chances with the action of other Congresses thereafter with regard to securing the difference. Does not the Senator think that such a course of legislation, in addition to being unfair, will only result in the applications and the increasing applications of those so treated to subsequent Congresses for appropriations for their reimbursement to the extent provided by the law of their creation, because this does not repeal the other law? It remains just where it was before. We ignore it, virtually.

It seems to me we ignore our own duty when we fail to meet its requirements, instead of amending the law itself so as to fix a salary at a sum commensurate with what we think it ought to be.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I think it is perfectly fair for the Committee on Appropriations, in considering the amount of salaries paid, to reduce a salary where it is so manifestly inconsistent with the salaries paid to employees in other departments. I also believe that if the Senate of the United States becomes convinced that any law fixed a salary at a sum greater than was justified, or if the salary is greater than the conditions would justify, then I think it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to reduce that salary.

The salaries of the members of this board will not be reduced until the 1st day of July of this year. The bill that passed last year provides for that; so they have ample notice, just the same as any other employer ought to give notice to an employee, that for the year beginning on July 1, 1917, the salary of this office will be $7,500 per year.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, the Senator would substitute for the action of Congress the opinion of one of the committees of one of the Houses?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; I would not do that, because it has to be finally passed upon by the Senate itself.

I will say to the Senator that the very amendment which is being considered now, as far as it affects the salaries paid to the members of the board, was agreed to by this body. It took three days, however, to secure two more votes to override and reconsider the vote. But even as it passed the Senate one additional vote would have defeated it; and now, if the majority of the Members of the Senate of the United States feel that in justice to all other employees of the Government the salary ought to be $7,500, I can not see any inconsistency in reducing the salary.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, the Senator knows that the amount of the majority by which a bill passes has but very little, if anything, to do with the question. I presume that pretty nearly every measure enacted in the next House of Representatives will have a slender majority one way or the other.

The Senator said a few minutes ago, I presume in justification of his position, that there were many officials of the Government occupying humbler positions and receiving smaller salaries who were actually earning more than the members of this board. I think that is true; but is it not also true, or may it not be true, with regard to some members of the Cabinet? If so, would not the same reasoning justify the Committee on Appropriations in reporting salaries of $7,500 for such members of the Cabinet, whose salaries are now fixed, I think, at $12,000 a year? Why should it not be done, as a matter of justice, in the one case as well as in the other?

Mr. SMOOT. There would be a discrimination in that case between members of the Cabinet.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, take the President of the United States. It might be considered that some one is doing more work than he is, and receiving less compensation.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no discrimination here, because every member of the board is paid the same salary that every other member receives.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator for allowing me to interrupt him.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Utah stated a moment ago that he thought it was well within the province of the committee to reduce a salary when it was disproportionate or not in accord with other salaries. I think that in that he is absolutely correct and that the committee would be warranted in recommending to the Congress a reduction of a salary if anything to justify it had occurred between the time that the Congress first fixed the salary and the time that the committee was making an appropriation to pay the salary.

The question that we are considering now was thoroughly considered by the Congress. It was a matter that engaged the attention of the Senate for several days, and the Senate finally reached the conclusion, against my protest and over my vote, that $10,000 was the proper salary to pay to these officers. Now, nothing has transpired since that act of this particular Senate to change the character, the nature, the scope, or the work of the board; and I do not see where the committee obtained information that led them to consider that the Congress would change its mind about this matter at this time. Appropriations committees, as I understand, are for the purpose of appropriating money to meet the expenses of the Government as they are prescribed by law, not to legislate; and I submit to the Senator that nothing has transpired since the exhaustive discussion of this question to justify the Congress in changing its opinion as to what the salary ought to be.

Mr. SMOOT. I will remind the Senator that there has been something that has transpired that, at least, led me to believe that there was a change in the attitude of the Senate. There was reported to the Senate a bill creating a tariff commission, providing a salary of $10,000 per annum for each member of the commission. After an exhaustive discussion of the amount to be paid to the members of that commission—I believe it was on motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]—the amount was reduced to $7,500. During that discussion the question of the amount that was being paid to the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to the members of the Federal Trade Commission, and to the other commissions was discussed, and it was freely stated by Senators that they thought the salaries paid the members of those commissions were too high.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am one of the Senators who voted to fix the salary at $7,500, but there was nothing said by the majority of the Senators who voted to give the members of the Farm Loan Board $10,000 which would justify the Senator from Utah in concluding that they had changed their minds about it. I think it ought to have been $7,500, as I have heretofore stated; but it was not done, but the salary was fixed at $10,000, and I believe it is unfair and unjust for Congress now to refuse to pay it.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator voted that the salary of the members of the board should be $7,500. I took time to look up the vote, and it was not a party vote. Senators on both sides of the Chamber voted for an increase to $10,000, and Senators on both sides of the Chamber voted against it.

Mr. President, I wish to say that it was not the unanimous vote of the committee, but a majority of the committee, that these salaries should be fixed at $7,500.

Mr. BRYAN. The Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SMOOT. The Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRYAN. It was carried by a majority of 1 or 2.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wanted to show that.

Mr. BRYAN. The subcommittee decided to leave it at $10,000, but the full committee reduced it to $7,500.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator from Utah permit an interruption?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the long custom in both Houses of reducing salaries whenever both Houses see fit to do it. We know that for a great many years the governors of the Territories got $3,500 a year by an unrepealed law, and for 20 years in my experience the Appropriations Committee of either House never did give them more than $3,000, and they always stated in the bill that it should be considered in full of any claim that the person had against the Government. The result was that the two Houses, acting on the advice of the Committees on Appropriations, kept the salary down with an open law standing in their face, and that was the common practice of both Houses for 25 years. So, on the mere question of the reduction of salary, that can be done at any time by the two Houses whenever they get ready to do it. The party is left either to hold the office or resign, as he sees fit.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement made by the Senator from Arizona is absolutely correct. I know there was an effort made to bring suit against the Government of the United States to recover the amount unpaid, but it fell by the wayside and was never heard of but once.

It seems to me that the only excuse which could possibly be offered to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, increasing the salary from $7,500 to $10,000, is that within a year Congress voted that their salaries should be $10,000. In my opinion, if you are going to deal justly with the other employees of the Government, we ought to decrease their salary from $10,000 to $7,500.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it seems to me the position of the Senator from Utah is rather remarkable. The claim he makes is that some people are getting more than they ought to get and others are getting less. I am in favor of raising the salary of those who ought to get more, and I would change the law in that respect.

But the Senator does not seem to be impressed with the idea that when the law has settled the question of the compensation of members of this board we ought to pay any attention to that law, and we ought to be governed by it. He makes the suggestion that we are increasing these salaries from $7,500 to $10,000. That is not the situation at all. The effort here is to decrease by indirection, not directly, the compensation fixed by Congress for the members of this board. Every member of the board took the responsibilities and duties of the office with the statute before them that they were to receive a salary of $10,000 per annum. Now, the committee proposes that after that contract has been entered into under the law to evade the contract indirectly by providing that the appropriations shall be only $7,500 each, and not according to the law $10,000 each.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. JONES. The Senator does not claim that we could not pass legislation reducing the salary to even $5,000 if we saw fit.

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly, I do not claim that Congress could not do it.

Mr. JONES. Without violating any contract with these people?

Mr. FLETCHER. But Congress can only do it by an act for that purpose by general legislation. It can not do it on an appropriation bill. That is the reason why the rule is made. It is to prevent a general appropriation bill from carrying general legislation which would repeal a general statute upon a general subject.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not true that upon an appropriation bill the salary of Representatives and Senators was increased, and if an increase can be made on an appropriation bill why can not a decrease be made?

Mr. FLETCHER. If there was any increase of salaries carried upon an appropriation bill, it would have been subject to a point of order, had the point of order been raised against it, under our rule.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. That question has been settled, and I will not go into it further. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRADY. Let me ask the Senator if he can call to mind any instance where the salary of a Senator or Representative in Congress has been decreased?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there is no instance of that sort.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator claim that when on the legislative appropriation bill the salary of the President was increased that that item could have gone out on a point of order?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; not on a point of order. That is not the question. If the law fixed the salary at a given figure, and an attempt was made to change it upon a general appropriation bill, I think it would have been subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. That is done very, very often.

Mr. FLETCHER. It may be done, but it is in violation of the rule, in my judgment.

Mr. President, aside from that, for we have wasted five times as much time on it as we have any business to waste, we get right down to the proposition that the only reason why the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas should be favored is because the statute fixed the compensation at $10,000, not because the work of the board or the importance or significance of it justifies it. I contend just the contrary. Here is an act passed establishing a financial system which is altogether new in this country. We have been for 50 years confined to the only financial system we had under the national banking act of 1864, which was a commercial system, pure and simple, and it not only did not meet the needs of agriculture but discriminated against agriculture, because written into the very body of the law was a prohibition against accepting real estate as a security for loans. Real estate, the farmer's chief asset, was stricken down as security for a loan under the only financial system we had in operation in this country. We reached out to discover a means, a method and a way whereby proper, reasonable, just, and fair accommodation financially might be extended to those engaged in agriculture in this country. There was admitted need of it. The experience of the older countries in Europe had demonstrated that they had to come to it and that it was a wise and a just and a proper thing to do. We thereupon began to study the subject and devised this scheme, and the system has been established under the law.

It is a new thing. It had to be put into operation. You can not pick up any man and put him in that position and have him organize, as it should be organized, and put into operation, as it should be put into operation, this broad and wise system which we have provided for under the law. You must have men of judgment, men of capacity, men of experience, men who understand the agricultural needs of the country, men who know how to accomplish the relief intended to be accomplished by the act.

We are not paying these men one cent more than they are worth. It would be absurd and ridiculous to expect any man capable of discharging the responsible duties of that position to give his whole time and attention and his skill and his efforts to it upon a meager compensation of $5,000 or $6,000. No man could afford to do it without great sacrifice. No man ought to undertake that work who is not in a position to give it his entire time, and especially is that true at the very inception of the organization.

The success of the system is going to depend largely upon the wisdom and the energies of this board. The success of the system will inevitably, to a very great extent, depend upon the way in which they organize it and put it into operation. They have given their time to it; they have given their attention to it; they are performing those duties faithfully and industriously, and I think, so far as I have ever heard, so far as I know or have observed, efficiently and properly. They deserve it; their work justifies it; their character and their ability call for this amount of compensation. It is not one cent more than they are entitled to receive.

There is a proposition in this amendment also to make the salary of the secretary of the board $3,000. The gentleman who is now serving as secretary of that board is not merely an amanuensis. He does not merely keep the records and the files and the documents that are submitted to the board; he is an expert. He understands this law; he has studied it from its beginning; he has had to do with it in his work as clerk to the joint committee which thrashed it out; he knows it from beginning to end; he knows the purposes of Congress in enacting the law. His heart and soul are in the work. He desires it to succeed. He understands what we have been driving at in establishing this system. He realizes its importance. His advice, his counsel, his services are valuable to the board not merely as an ordinary secretary to a committee or something of that sort but because he is a man of capacity. He is thoroughly equipped as a banker. He thoroughly understands also the needs of the farmers of the country. He appreciates the difficulties in establishing this system, and he is faithfully assisting in working out a plan and a program under which will be accomplished what it has been the hope of the friends of the measure would be accomplished under it.

So I say such a man is worth more than any $3,000 per annum. He could not afford to give his time and attention and his services to this or any other work wholly and entirely as he will have to do for a compensation so meager and insignificant as that.

You do not want cheap men in positions of great responsibility where a measure of vast, tremendous consequences, capable of inestimable benefit and value to the people who produce the food of the Nation is to be worked out.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask the Senator what the secretary was doing before he was employed in his present position?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not inquired as to that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can tell the Senator something on that point. He was something like a year or more employed as an expert to assist the joint committee of the two Houses in framing the law.

Mr. WEEKS. What was he doing before that time?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not able to answer.

Mr. FLETCHER. I presumed the Senator's question had reference to that, because he undoubtedly knows the present secretary of the board was occupied in connection with the framing of legislation as clerk to the joint committee which had the subject under consideration.

Mr. WEEKS. I understood that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Prior to that time I am not advised. At one time in his career he was president of a national bank in the city of New York. I do not know what business he was engaged in subsequent to that time.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If the Senator will permit me, I think I can answer the question of the Senator from Massachusetts. I have known the secretary, Mr. Flannagan, for a good many years. He is a gentleman of infinite ability and very high repute in the State of New Jersey. He was, when I first knew him, a banker; after that the acting president of a very prominent bank in New York, and latterly, as has been stated, the secretary of the joint committee. He is a high order of gentleman, a man of capabilities, an honor to the position he holds, and a credit to all those around him. I think he is richly worth $6,000 in the capacity in which he is serving.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from New Jersey seems to know about the secretary's past history. Did he ever receive $6,000 in any position he occupied?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not respond as to what pecuniary returns he may have received, but I know he is a gentleman of standing, and I think the Senator as a banker, if he knew as I know his high ability and his standing, would hardly question that he was overpaid at $6,000 in this capacity.

Mr. WEEKS. The indorsement which the Senator from New Jersey gives will have great influence in deciding my course, but I wished to know what the past history of the man had been, if I could.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. He is a gentleman of a very high order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not expect in this matter to make any personal references; but, speaking of Mr. Flannagan, I do not think the question of $5,000 or $6,000 a year is a particularly tempting proposition to him. I think he prizes the importance of the system and desires to see it succeed, and is willing to contribute largely his best efforts toward its ultimate success, and the salary perhaps is not a matter that influences him very greatly one way or the other. At the same time, I am dealing with it from the standpoint of what is just and fair and right and independent of any question as to who holds the position now. The question is as to the duties and responsibilities of the office itself. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate longer in discussing this matter. If the Farm Loan Board wants some one in that position who merely does the loose and ordinary work of a stenographer, a typewriter, or a secretary in the usual sense of the word, that is another thing. The secretary of this board does something more than that. The position is one that calls for work of a very much higher grade than that ordinarily performed by what we usually designate a secretary. I instanced the present occupant of that position by way of indicating that the position is one of great responsibility and was so considered when the board selected Mr. Flannagan to fill it. Of course, the question of compensation of the secretary is not now before us, but while I was up I thought I would refer to it, because if some one does not offer an amendment to increase the amount named in the proposed amendment of the committee, I shall do so myself.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I fear we are wandering rather far afield from the discussion of the amendment before the Senate. We are now considering simply the salary of members of the Farm Loan Board. I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, Mr. ROBINSON. While I am just as much in favor of practicing economy as any Member of this body, I do not believe that this is a proper place to commence. The tendency for the last year has been rather to increase than to decrease salaries, for the reason that the cost of living has increased so materially in the last few years.

These men accepted the position under a law that we recently passed, naming their salary at $10,000 a year, after full discussion by this body. They left their vocations, moved to Washington in the faith and belief that they had made a satisfactory contract with a responsible Government. It has been suggested that the present salary will continue until July 1, 1917, and that the members of the board have ample notice that $7,500 is the salary that will be paid to them after that date. It seems to me that the defeat of this amendment is notice from this body that we have changed our minds since passing the act, and have decided that their services are not worth $10,000 a year and we proceed to cut their salaries down without consulting them or even giving them any notice of our intention.

I do not believe it is fair to them. I do not believe it is fair to the country to take such action. We may differ as to the value of this farm loan bank; we may differ as to the methods of handling the matter by the board, but none of us differ as to our hopes for good results from this institution. We can not secure them, in my judgment, by commencing to lower the salaries of these men before they have had an opportunity to demonstrate what they can do.

I can not see the force of the argument in comparing what has been done in other bureaus or departments by citing cases where salaries have been raised or transfers have been made from one department to another for the purpose of increasing the salary of an employee, for the reason that by our action to-day in sustaining the ruling of the Chair we decided that we would not have this appropriation administered in a lump sum, but that we would name the salary, thus correcting that which we are complaining of in the departments; that is to say, we are correcting the very fault in the departments by fixing these salaries ourselves.

The only question at the present time before the body is whether this salary should be increased to $10,000 or permitted to remain at $7,500, as named by the committee. It does not matter what our vote was when the act was passed. It does not matter whether we favored $10,000 or $7,500 at that time. At this moment it is a question of pure, simple, business methods. This bureau is different from other departments of the Government. It is a business undertaking and should be handled along business lines. While we are discussing the question of economy we should also at the same time discuss the question of good business methods. I do not believe it would be good business for us at this time to change this particular salary. These men have their work well in hand. They have organized 12 different districts. They have applications on their desks not only for hundreds of thousands but for millions of dollars in loans. All that must be passed upon this coming year. At the present moment, with conditions as they are, I think it is not only fair but that it is the duty of the Senate to support the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas and name the amount at $10,000 instead of $7,500. Let us keep faith with these men, and let us give the agricultural interests of the country with their bank an equal chance with the Federal reserve bank, which we so recently created.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I have not been in the Senate during the whole of this discussion, and the thought which is in my mind about this subject may have been expressed by others while I was out of the Chamber. If that shall be the case, I can console myself with remembering that it is not the first time that there have been some repetitions of arguments upon this floor, and I will take the chance to say to the Senate what I think about this amendment.

Mr. President, this argument was gone into very fully when we passed the Federal farm-loan bill. The advocates of the $10,000 salary, and also of the lower salary, were heard, and the deliberate judgment of the Senate, of the House of Representatives, and of the President, by his ratification, was that the character of the employment, the character of the duties to be discharged by the members of the board, and the fact that we were putting into execution a new department of the Govment, justified the Senate and the House of Representatives in voting for the $10,000 salary. We discussed the possibility of getting the kind of men whom we had in mind as the men who should inaugurate this system, and whether or not there was a possibility or a probability of getting the kind of men that we had in mind at a salary of less than $10,000; and it was the deliberate judgment of the Senate that it would require the greater salary in order to induce that kind of men to accept these appointments. So we went forward and we fixed their terms—one of them at two years, one of them at four years, one of them at six years, and one of them at eight years. The President made his selections. These men accepted these positions with the understanding—not a legal contract, but with the honorable understanding on the part of the Government—that one of them should have $10,000 for two years, another $10,000 for four years, another $10,000 for six years, and another $10,000 for eight years.

I will admit that that is not a binding contract upon the Government or upon the Senate, and yet it is in a way binding upon honorable men. If we now change that salary, we must march up to the proposition that we either are intending to make an assault upon this system or else that we have some criticism as to the appointments which have been made by the President, or some criticism of the men who are discharging the duties of the office.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CHILTON. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator if he does not consider that the understanding is binding to this effect: That if we propose to make a change in these salaries, we should do it by amending the law creating the board instead of by this indirect method of starving the commission, so to speak, partially at least, by a meager appropriation?

Mr. CHILTON. I thank the Senator from Colorado. That is the very thought that was in my mind.

Now, Mr. President, these gentlemen have started in to inaugurate this great system, one that the people have been calling upon us to put into operation, one that the great farming interests feel should have been put into operation years ago, and feel that our failure to do so has been a neglect upon the part of this great Government. We have selected from different walks of life four men, all of whom stand high. They have been successful in private life; they have been money-makers; they are men who have given up their private employment; they have accepted these positions—one of them for two years, another for four years, another for six years, and another for eight years, respectively. They are starting in to put the system into operation, and at the first succeeding session of Congress we are now asked not only to amend that act of Congress—a deliberate act of Congress—but we are asked indirectly to either assault this system or indirectly to criticize the men who are holding the positions, and to put them in the unfortunate position of having to go back to private life or to accept the salary, which in all probability they would not have accepted but for the understanding which our act held out to them would be the salary for the term for which they were appointed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. And to accept it under the terms under which they would be required to accept it would be rather discreditable to them.

Mr. CHILTON. It would be so.

Mr. President, this is not right; it is not the way to legislate; it is not fair to these gentlemen. It puts them in an embarrassing position in which we should not put them; and I do hope that the Senate will not legislate in this way, but that we shall keep these salaries at $10,000 per annum.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I was not in sympathy with the point of order which was made against the committee's amendment, for I believe that we ought to have at all times the right and the power to fix the salaries of the persons who labor for the Government. I am, however, in favor of the House provision, and I sincerely hope that the entire Senate amendment will be rejected.

There is no such thing as a standard for reasonable compensation. We pay the President of the United States $75,000 a year. Why? We could undoubtedly secure candidates for that high office if the compensation were but a tithe of the amount the law now provides. We pay the President $75,000 a year largely because that amount is fairly necessary to enable him to discharge with dignity the duties of his exalted office, believing at the same time we shall secure men of the highest competency and the purest patriotism.

Not very long ago we organized a Federal Reserve Board. We passed a law which provided that each member of that board should receive $12,000 per annum. That could not be measured by any mathematical standard. In my judgment, the duties to be performed by the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board are more important and will require, if successfully performed, a higher degree of capacity than is required of the members of the Federal Reserve Board. The one is a bankers' institution—and I do not use that term disparagingly at all—but the path is reasonably plain, the learning for the creation of the system was at hand. That is not true of the Federal Farm Loan Board. As the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has said, we are beginning an experiment. I believe it will be successful; but whether it is or is not, will depend very largely upon the character and the attainments and the fidelity of the men who compose the board during the first two or three years of its work.

That board has now divided the country into 12 districts; it is now engaged in organizing 12 farm-loan banks. It must select the presidents of those banks, it must select the directors of those banks, it must give color and complexion to those banks, and their work will in large measure determine whether these farm-loan banks that are to be established throughout the country do their business in such a way as to commend the system to the people of the country or to condemn it in the minds of the people of the country.

I think the one danger before the Federal Farm Loan Board will be its disposition, or a temptation rather than a disposition, to loan too much money upon a given tract of land. If it shall happen that the Federal Farm Loan Board shall encourage or permit the Federal farm-loan banks to loan more money upon a given tract of land than ought to be loaned, we shall soon usher in a period of insolvency, a period of foreclosure; and that is but a synonym for a period of failure of this institution, for which so much is hoped, and which I believe can be of as much value to the people of this country as any commission or board or tribunal which we have organized in many years.

Something has been said about the men who have been appointed to these positions. I do not know how much they earned before they were so appointed, but I am very intimately acquainted with two members of this board. They are, of course, men of the highest character; they are men who have succeeded in life; who were not lifted out of obscurity in order to be given a place upon this board, but who had established their title to the confidence of the country long before they were selected. They are men of the highest competency as well; they are students; men who have explored deeply and thoroughly the problems which are connected with this new and, I hope, successful undertaking on the part of the Government.

If anyone should ask me, I do not know what is a reasonable compensation for such service and such men. I could not reduce my answer to the inquiry to anything like a mathematical precision, but it is folly to assert that they are not of as much value to their countrymen as are the members of the Federal Reserve Board; and I am not touching or even suggesting a doubt with regard to the propriety of the rate of their compensation. I know of hundreds of men in private life, who are not better qualified than are these two men, who are earning five times as much in the pursuits of civil industry. I know a great many men, on the other hand, who may be just as competent, who are earning less than $10,000 per year. You can not reduce the question to anything like a standard that would be accepted by everybody.

I think it would be in the highest degree unfortunate if in the very formative period, the critical moment, of this undertaking, we were to declare that the salaries which we established in the passage of the law were too high and that they should be reduced. The inference that the particular men selected for the places do not measure up to the proper standard would be inevitable. We established a salary of $10,000 a year for men in those positions believing that to be, as far as we could understand, a fair compensation. The men have been appointed; they are at work. Should we reduce their salary to $7,500 per year, I do not see how it would be possible to avoid the implication that we believe that the President has not selected for these offices men of the type we had in mind when we established the offices.

So much for the salaries of the members of the board. I, however, have a graver objection to the remainder of this amendment than to the mere compensation of the members of the board itself.

It may be recalled that when the Federal farm-loan act was passed I was vigorously opposed, as I am now, to withdrawing the employees of the board from the operation of the civil-service law of the country. I think, with the exception of those confidential employees who occupy peculiar relations to the head of the enterprise, they ought to have been chosen according to the law of the land, which, while it now and then fails of perfection in its operations, yet, on the whole, is the best system for the ascertainment of merit that we have been able to devise; and I do not want anything that I say now to be understood as approving that departure in the passage of the original law; but I do believe—I believed then and I believe now—that the board ought to be given discretion in the selection of its employees—I mean the determination of the number of employees who may be necessary to carry on its work; I mean the classification of those employees and a discretion with regard to the bureaus, if you please, that should be organized in the Federal Farm Loan Board. The members of this board do not know and can not know; the Members of Congress do not know and can not know just how many employees are necessary or just what their final fixed titles will be in the service.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the classification of these employees in this amendment is exactly as proposed by the members of the board themselves, and it is only with regard to the amount of salary that the amendment differs from the estimates or recommendations of the board.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania is technically right, but he does not state the whole fact, as I understand it. They have selected certain employ es, or, at least, they have established certain classes or classincation, but they are purely tentative. I believe that the members of the board told the Appropriations Committee that they might desire within a year to change these very matters; that they could only determine by actual experience when the work had been fairly set on foot just what employees were desirable and just what those employees should be termed in the language of the service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the members of the board who appeared before the committee informed the committee that the employees provided for in the first paragraph of the Senate committee amendment would be essential and would be always needed by the board. The second paragraph provides for salaries and expenditures under the Federal loan act, and $250,000 is appropriated for that purpose. It is true that the members of the board stated they did not know how many employees they would require within the next year; but the bill provides something like $187,000 to take care of the extra help that may be required and the expenditures that may be incurred during the year. I will say to the Senator also, that if the board had had more permanent employees, we would have included them in paragraph 1, the same as we do for employees in every other department.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to do that eventually. I agreed with those who discussed the matter this morning that we can not to any bureau or department permanently delegate the authority to employ persons in an unlimited way or to fix their salaries. I have no difference of opinion with you gentlemen about that; but I am only insisting that the board has just begun its work; its important work is yet to come. It is not organized, so far as the work in Washington goes. I am saying this on account of representations made to me by the members of the board. They are feeling their way to an efficient organization, trying to ascertain just what work will be required to be done in Washington and what kind of men will be required to do it. Now, I think in all fairness we ought to give the board this discretion this year. I am not saying that a year hence, assuming then that the work of organization is complete, that we ought not to determine what employees shall remain in the service and what their compensation shall be; but this is not, in my judgment, the time to do that thing.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not exactly understand the Senator. The positions and the salaries attached to them as fixed in the bill are the same as fixed and determined by the board. In addition to that, we have given them more money than they had before, namely, $250,000, for the purpose of allowing them to select such officers as they think ought to be appointed and to fix their salaries. All that we require them to do is when they have created the places and fixed the salaries to send to us the names and the amounts and the designation of the offices.

Under this $250,000 appropriation they can appoint and will appoint lawyers, for instance, and fix their salaries. They will appoint clerks and fix their salaries, whether clerks of class 2, class 3, class 4, or class 5; or they may not classify them, just as they please. Under this lump sum of money which we have given them they can appoint as many officers as they please and fix their salaries. But, having appointed certain men and fixed their salaries, we thought it was our duty to fix the salaries of the few men they have appointed according to the standard of wages applied in other departments for the same class of work.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to be led into a discussion with regard to the proper salary for a secretary or a proper salary for the chief of the bond division. I do not know what a proper salary would be for such officers. As I said a while ago, there is no standard for work of that character. All that I am insisting upon is that for this year, until the organization is complete, the board shall be given the liberty, the discretion, which it had under the act which created it and which is preserved in the House bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think that they have not that discretion under the Senate committee amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so. If so, why was the amendment suggested?

Mr. OVERMAN. We suggested the amendment to fix the salaries of those whom the board have already appointed, not intending to limit them at all in any way whatever in fixing the salaries of other employees. That is what the lump sum of $250,000 is for.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have been told—I do not know whether it be accurate—that up to this time they have employed merely stenographers.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. And they have been simply trying to answer the 1,500 or 2,000 letters a day which have been coming to the board. They expect that they will have a man at the head of the bond division, but they do not know. They gave the committee that tentative opinion.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; they have appointed a man for that position.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, they do not know that he is the man whom they will ultimately desire or that the title of the place will be a permanent or a fixed one.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is nothing to prevent them under this amendment from appointing another bondman or calling him anything they please and giving him $5,000 if they so desire.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is possibly nothing in the amendment that would prevent that, but of course the Senator from North Carolina knows that it would be impossible—that is, they would not do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think they are very honorable men and will do the proper thing, but if the man was worth it and was the right sort of a man the salary they fixed would probably not be questioned, although it might not suit me.

Mr. CUMMINS. All that I am asking is that they be given a fair show until the organization is complete.

Mr. SMOOT. I should have said a while ago that we give the board $250,000, all told.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, the committee does not give them $250,000 in addition to the salaries of the men specifically provided for.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. The House gave $300,000. Whether that is right, whether it is too much or too little, I do not know. I would not venture an opinion as to that; but I am quite willing to accept the view of the Senate committee that $250,000 in all may be sufficient.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, Mr. President, I want to read the paragraph in the committee amendment providing the lump sum for salaries and expenses. I will not read it all, but it includes:

> And such salaries, fees, and expenses as are authorized by said act, including farm-loan registrars, examiners, and such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as the Farm Loan Board may find necessary, $182,380; in all, $250,000.

That shows that they have been given this amount to appoint such officers as they desire. We had that question up with them, and, as the Senator has said, they did not know who they were going to appoint. They have only thus far appointed a few stenographers to answer letters. These stenographers, for example, are paid $1,200 per annum. We fixed the salaries of such employees at about the same rate that stenographers are getting in other departments.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the very fact that the committee found it necessary to make a bulk appropriation of $182,380 indicates that the work of the board is yet incomplete, so far as organization is concerned. I have founded my entire argument upon a sincere belief that it would be infinitely better to permit the board, during this period of preparation for its real work, to enjoy the discretion and the liberty given to it in the original act. I have such implicit confidence in the fidelity of the members of the board and their desire to render an unselfish service to the people of this country that I am not plagued a moment with any fear that one penny of the appropriation will be misspent or inefficiently spent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word with regard to this matter, which involves, as I understand, the question of the salaries of the members of the Farm Loan Board.

I am not in favor of reducing the salaries of this board and leaving at as the sole accomplishment of the Congress, but I am opposed to these high salaries. I voted for a salary of $7,500 when the bill was pending for the creation of this board. I felt then that that was sufficient, and I feel now that it is sufficient. I should dislike, however, to see this particular board singled out and the salaries reduced, and have certain other commissions which have been created retain their salaries. I think this is a very important board, and of course it ought to be treated upon a par with all others; but I think all these salaries are too high. Having voted for the salary of $7,500 when the bill was before us, my vote can in no sense be regarded as a reflection upon the gentlemen now constituting the board. It is simply my deliberate judgment as to what the salary should be.

It seems to me that it is a rather serious condition that confronts us in this country. We have, in the first place, our municipal officers; we have our county officers; we have our State officers and our Federal officers, layer upon layer of officers; and if the salaries are to be increased, as we are disposed to increase them in these days, the expenses of the Government will become almost unendurable.

Under a form of government such as ours men must necessarily enter the service contributing something in the way of service over and above that for which they are actually compensated. If we can not have a performance of public service on any other basis than that of actual compensation, the same as a man employed by a corporation would expect, we are going to be confronted with a budget for the year's running expenses of the Government which will be something simply stupendous. The best service in the world is the service of the man who understands perfectly that he is contributing something over and above that for which he is actually compensated. He must be willing to serve the public as well as himself.

I shall vote, therefore, to reduce these salaries, and I shall hope to have an opportunity to do the same thing with at least two, if not three, other commissions before this session closes. I am not unfriendly to this law, although I entertain no doubt the law will have to be radically and fundamentally changed before it will be of service to that class of farmers which needs it most. But while not unfriendly to the principle of the law or to the board, I am most earnestly against all these high salaries.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, when the farm-loan bill was up I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah fixing the salary of its members at $7,500. I am not here this afternoon to discuss the question of salary. It does seem to me that this amendment, as reported by the Senate committee, has other features in it which will do the board more harm than the reduction in the salaries of the members of the board.

As I understand it, this board asked for $400,000 to carry on their work. They were heard in full by the members of the House Committee on Appropriations, and the bill came to this body carrying $300,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to correct that statement. The estimate was not $400,000, but $300,000.

Mr. CURTIS. I stated that they asked for $400,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; the Senator is mistaken. They estimated for $300,000.

Mr. CURTIS. I read the following from the hearings before the House Committee on Appropriations:

> There was allowed in the farm-loan act the sum of $100,000, and also, by way of a deficiency appropriation, an additional $100,000, making $200,000 in all for the current year for the administration of the farm-loan act. You are asking for the next fiscal year the sum of $400,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I see that I was mistaken about that. The House gave $300,000.

Mr. CURTIS. So they asked for $400,000. After complete hearings, the bill comes to the Senate giving them $300,000, and the Senate reduces the amount to $250,000. That is a reduction of $150,000 below the amount they asked.

I do not believe any bill should be passed by the Congress that would interfere with the work of this board, and I think the reduction of the amount asked will do more harm than the simple reduction in the salary. I think this board should have more money with which to carry on its work.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. As I understand, one member of the board who appeared before the committee was asked whether he thought that in the present condition of the Treasury of the United States the appropriation of $250,000 would be sufficient for them to get along on, with the strictest economy. He answered the committee and said that he thought that it would; and that is why the amount was reduced from $300,000 to $250,000.

Mr. CURTIS. I examined the hearings before the Senate committee, and I saw nothing on this subject, and that is why I referred to the matter. Of course, if a member of the board informed the committee that $250,000 would be sufficient, I would not insist upon a larger amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is on the committee, and I want to explain how that happened. He was absent at the time.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. We gave hearings day after day to everybody who wanted to be heard, as we usually to. The Senator, being a member of the committee, knows how that is. After we had given all the hearings, and everybody had been heard, some two weeks afterwards—we had two weeks of hearings—when we came to mark up the bill, as we usually do, we found this Farm Loan Board in a separate section; and, as we usually do, we sent for them to know who was employed and how much they needed, and so on. They said they would like to be heard and they came down—Mr. NORRIS and Mr. SMITH, I think—and we went over the whole matter with them. My recollection is that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] took up with them the question of the lump sum and the question of these salaries, and went into the subject thoroughly with the members of the board themselves. We did not have a stenographer present that morning, because the hearings had closed, and the volume of hearings had been printed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not question, of course, the statement of either of the Senators. I know they state what is so on this question. I read the hearings and found nothing on the subject, and therefore I supposed that the committee had acted without giving the members of the board full opportunity to be heard. They had asked for $400,000 from Congress, and had received $300,000, and then there was a further reduction to $250,000. Of course, if the board is satisfied with it, I know I am; but I should hate to see the appropriation so reduced as to hamper the work of the board.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, as I understand, the motion that is now before the Senate is the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and that is to restore the amount fixed by law for the salary of the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board, but to leave the salaries of the employees of the board as they are fixed by the committee.

I am in favor of that amendment. After the consideration which was given to the matter when the Federal farm-loan bill was discussed and acted upon in this body, and the amount fixed at $10,000 per year, I do not believe it should be changed. These men have been appointed to those positions, and they have accepted. They have no doubt left businesses that paid equal or perhaps greater compensation than that which they are to receive as emoluments for occupying these offices. In view of the law as it was originally fixed, after careful deliberation on the part of the Senate, they have concluded to accept these offices. The salary was fixed at $10,000. After we have gotten them installed in office, after they have performed some of the duties, after they have severed their connection, no doubt, with other businesses in their respective homes and States, I can not see the justice of now cutting down the amount to $7,500.

I must say that I was originally in favor of making the salary $7,500. I thought that was a fair compensation. In fact, I believe that very few officers should get salaries in excess of those which Senators of the United States receive; but that idea did not prevail. The other idea did prevail.

When the salary has been fixed in this way, it seems to me it is doing an injustice to these men, if now, after they have made their status in accordance with this salary, we conclude that it is too much, and that it should be reduced. If we are going to reduce it, the reduction ought to take effect at some future time, a considerable time off, so that they can, as a matter of fact, get the benefit of this salary which they have accepted in view of the offer and appointment which were made. It is unfair to them; and it seems to me we ought to adhere to the provision which was made in the Federal farm-loan act, and keep the salary at $10,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a vivid recollection of the debate on the farm-loan bill and the very close vote on the fixing of the salaries at $10,000. I believe those salaries were reduced in Committee of the Whole by one vote, and I have forgotten what the precise vote was when the matter went to the Senate. Perhaps there was a majority of one or two in favor of the higher salary.

Mr. SMOOT. One.

Mr. GALLINGER. One, the Senator from Utah says, in favor of the bill as it stands; so that there was no very loud declaration on the part of the Senate in favor of fixing these salaries at $10,000.

Mr. President, I gladly voted to fix the salaries of the members of the Tariff Board at $7,500, believing that to be sufficient. I have believed that there are two or three other boards getting $10,000 a year that ought to be reduced to $7,500; and, having voted for the $7,500 salary in the first place, I have seen no reason why I should change my vote.

It will be remembered, Mr. President, that not only do these men get as much as Members of the two Houses of Congress, but they have all their traveling expenses paid, and they are at very little expense to themselves, certainly, when they are away from Washington, and they have been away from Washington a very considerable part of the time since the board was established. They have had the privilege of seeing the country, which is not allowed to men in public life, as a rule, at the expense of the Government.

I should be loath, Mr. President, to do anything that would in any way injure the agricultural interests of the country. I have a very warm regard for the men who toil on the farms and who are producing the necessaries of life. It does seem to me, however, that the salary that is given to these men as the bill now stands is entirely adequate in every sense of the word; and I hope that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] will not prevail. These men will continue to serve. If they do not, there are hundreds of other men of equal capacity who will very gladly take their places. There is no danger of there being any vacancies on this board, Mr. President, certainly not long at a time; and in view of the fact that we are denying increases of salary to the lower paid employees of the Government on the plea of economy and the stress so far as the revenues of the Government are concerned, I think it would be a very great mistake if we should agree to the amendment that is now under consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator think that if he were appointed to a position for a term of six or eight years at a fixed salary, and the first year after he accepted the office the salary were reduced one-fourth, it would be unfair to him?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think so. I would have the option of resigning, if I chose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but you have changed your situation. You have changed your status. You have given up your position at home. You have given up your salary there.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply do not take that view of the case at all. If, in the wisdom of Congress, my salary should be reduced, I might make the same plea, that I accepted it when I was elected at a given figure, and that Congress in its wisdom had reduced it, and hence had done me a wrong. I would not think Congress had done me any wrong. I could either stay or leave, as I thought was to my best interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, when the Farm Loan Board act was originally drawn the Federal Reserve Board had been established with salaries of $12,000 for each member. It was the intention to make the Farm Loan Board of commensurate dignity, and to have its members of commensurate ability; and the original bill fixed the salaries at $12,000. Later it was voted to make the Farm Loan Board a bureau in the Treasury Department; the number of members was cut from five to four, and the salary was reduced from $12,000 to $10,000. When the bill was on the floor of the Senate the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] moved to reduce the compensation still further, and the Senate finally voted that it would not reduce the compensation further.

The Senator from Utah is a persistent and industrious Member of the Senate. He has the advantage of being an important member of the Appropriations Committee, and when the time came around to make the appropriations for the Farm Loan Board for this session he asked the Appropriations Committee to cut the salary to $7,500. The matter was referred to a subcommittee. The subcommittee reported against the Senator from Utah, but he was not discouraged. He carried it before the full committee and got a majority of one or two in favor of his contention. Now he assures us that he is not unfriendly to the farm-loan act and that he voted for it; but his whole attitude throughout the debate on the floor was hostile, and I for one was very much surprised when he finally declared his intention of voting for it, and did so.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The only justification the Senator has for saying that my attitude was hostile is because I offered certain amendments to the bill that I thought would improve the bill; and I still believe that if those amendments had been adopted the law would have been a better law than it is to-day. I never was hostile to the bill. I never intended to vote against the bill, and I did vote for it, as I stated to the Senate a short time ago.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then the Senator, on his statement, is not satisfied with the law as it stands to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator never has been hostile to it, if his amendment prevails to-day, it will always be understood that he is hostile to it and that the Senate of the United States is hostile to these four men, who have performed their duties very intelligently, very economically, and very fairly—men who were not known to me at all before they were appointed, but whose actions I heartily indorse now that I know them; men who have been learning the duties of the office at the expense of the Government; men who, if they are self-respecting men, will resign if this slap is made at them by Congress. We will lose the benefit of what they have learned, the training they have received. We will have to have a new set of men go in, who will have to learn it all over again, and the continuity will be broken up. The Senator suggests that when the Federal Trade Commission appropriations come in he will make the same movement against them; and the same action will be construed by the country as a belief on the part of the Senator from Utah that they are not properly performing their functions.

I hope that those who believe in the Federal farm-loan act, and who believe that it should be administered in accordance with the original idea, will vote in favor of this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the amendment of the committee. On that question the yeas and nays have been requested. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

So Mr. ROBINSON's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. Before any more business is done——

Mr. JONES. I desire merely to offer an amendment for printing.

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I submit an amendment which I intend to offer to the bill proposing to strike out all the unnecessary committees of the Senate. I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to lay the appropriation bill aside for to-day, and I call the attention of the Senator from Montana

[Mr. MYERS] to it so that the unfinished business may not lose its place. After it is laid aside and the unfinished business is laid before the Senate, I will then ask that a message from the President of the United States be read. The appropriation bill will be laid aside until to-morrow, and I give notice that at the close of the morning business I shall ask the Senate to resume its consideration.

NAVAL OIL SUPPLY.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I should like to insert in the RECORD correspondence with the Secretary of the Interior on the subject of the oil-leasing bill growing out of a discussion in this body a few days ago. I am sure it will elucidate the matter.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior.

JANUARY 15, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Referring to your letter of January 10, 1917, addressed to Senator THOMAS, which was recently read in the Senate and which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 12, I beg to say that your reference to the original amendment proposed by me has led to some confusion in the minds of Senators as to the attitude of the department toward the general leasing bill in so far as it grants relief to the California locators.

You seem to be ignorant of the fact that on calendar day, January the 5th, 1917, I introduced two amendments to H. R. 406 as a report from the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate—one to section 9 and one to section 10—which amendments I herewith inclose for the purpose of eliciting an expression of your views.

Senator THOMAS stated correctly that the attorney from your department, Mr. Finney, gave his approval to the amendment to section 9, and when asked made no objection to section 10, with the concurrence of Mr. Clay Tallman, Commissioner of the General Land Office, who was present. These two gentlemen represented your department at the conference where the Public Lands Committees of the Senate and the House, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of Justice were represented. The amendment proposed by me to section 9, with the exception of the date, is the same amendment in words and form that was submitted by Mr. Tallman and Mr. Finney as agreeable to the department and offered as a compromise measure to the conference, but which was not finally approved, although received hospitably by the Navy Department and the Department of Justice.

I assume that these departments are standing upon their legal victories where the courts, in interpreting the Pickett Act, very strictly construed its provisions against the locators of oil lands, whereas it was the legislative intent to grant them relief. As lawmakers, we are endeavoring to correct the relief legislation as originally intended, to meet the legal objections raised by the courts.

Now, as Mr. Finney and Mr. Tallman, representatives of your department at the conference, submitted and approved the amendment to section 9 as above, which I introduced on January 12 in the Senate, I desire to know from you if this amendment has your approval. I would also like to know your opinion as to the amendment to section 10, considered independently of the amendment to section 9.

I have the assurance of the California Oil Association that the holders of patented lands in naval reserve No. 1 will relinquish their claims provided the relief proposed in this bill is granted and by that means I believe the conference has accomplished much for the Navy by insuring it an undisputed reserve in naval reserve No. 1. Naval reserve No. 2, which is practically the only reserve affected by this proposed amendment, can not, in any event, on account of the large number of wells therein now in operation and held in private ownership, be regarded as a reserve at all, no matter what action may be taken by the Congress.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES D. PHELAN.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 17, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As you assume, I was ignorant of the new Phelan amendment to which you refer. I did not know that there was a new Phelan amendment when I wrote to Senator Thomas. I did know, however, that there had been an effort made by your committee to arrive at an adjustment with the Secretary of the Navy and the Attorney General, but I did not know that this had ever been put into the shape of an amendment to the general oil-leasing bill, or that it had been submitted formally to your committee or the Senate. In this effort Commissioner Tallman and Mr. Finney, of this department, were authorized by me to give all the help possible to your committee and to make suggestions that might lead to breaking the deadlock that keeps our oil lands undeveloped. I understand that this amendment was in part suggested by them as a possible basis for compromise.

In advocating the passage of the general oil-leasing bill in my report for 1915 I touched upon one phase of the oil situation, saying:

"President Taft withdrew a large acreage in California and in Wyoming after much of it had been filed upon and after some development had been begun on a part of the lands. This withdrawal took place in September, 1909, and withdrew part of the lands for the benefit of the Navy as a fuel reserve and other of the lands were to be held awaiting appropriate legislation for their disposal. The total acreage withdrawn was 3,041,000 acres, of which perhaps one-half was then in private ownership. There was doubt at the time of these withdrawals as to their legality, there being no specific statute on the books authorizing the action. So serious was this doubt that as a precautionary measure Congress at its next session passed an act authorizing such withdrawals, and the same lands were subsequently, in July, 1910, withdrawn again. It was the opinion of many of the most competent members of the bar that the withdrawal of 1909 was void and the operators proceeded to act in accordance with this advice. The result was that when the second withdrawal, that of 1910, was made, there were a large number of operators engaged in drilling and some had already found oil on these lands. The Government insisted upon the validity of the 1909 withdrawal, and after failing to have its view sustained in the lower courts, was at last successful before the Supreme Court. So that to-day those who were not engaged in actual development of the lands at the time of the first withdrawal have no legal title to the lands. If the full measure of the Government's right is acted upon as a basis of our policy in dealing with these lands, it will bankrupt many oil companies and do what appears to me to be an injustive and an unnecessary injustice to those who have invested many millions of dollars under a mistake as to the law. I shall not assume to say what policy should be followed as to naval reserves, but as to the other withdrawn lands I believe Congress (which is the one forum wherein relief can be sought) should so act as to recognize the equitable rights of those operators. This might be done by saying that those who would to-day be entitled to patent were the land not withdrawn may have leases under which they will pay a liberal royalty to the Government. This plan will doubtless be urged. I am of the opinion that it is too liberal. We might draw a line at the time of the second withdrawal. If this were done, leases could be made to all who were actually operating upon this land at that time. And if it is thought advisable, there could be imposed a higher royalty than would be called for under the general development bill. I feel that this is one of those situations often arising in the life of the individual and of the State when it is not wise to exact all that the law allows even as to those who are in the wrong."

As you will note from the above quotation, I did not assume to say what policy should be followed as to the naval reserves, but urged that as to the other withdrawn lands Congress should so act as to recognize the equitable rights of those operators who had gone upon the lands and developed them. There are now withdrawn from public entry a total of 6,570,232 acres of oil lands. These withdrawals have been made upon the advice of the Geological Survey. Of this great body of land there are reserved for naval purposes, Naval Reserve No. 1, 38,068 acres in California; Naval Reserve No. 2, 30,181 acres in California; Naval Reserve No. 3, 9,481 acres in Wyoming; a total of 77,730 acres, exclusive of two withdrawals recently made of naval oil shale in Utah and Colorado, totaling 132,024 acres. So that we have oil withdrawals of nearly six and a half million acres which are not held as naval reserves. Two of the naval reserves, No. 1 and No. 3 (estimated to contain approximately 130,000,000 barrels), are either free of private claims or can be made so. Naval Reserve No. 2 is within the patented land grant of the Southern Pacific Co., and also includes several thousand acres patented to the State of California and private individuals. So that there is comparatively a small amount of land, perhaps less than 5,000 acres, which would be affected by the relief provisions of your amendment. The Government has sued for the alternate sections within these reserves, and if these are recovered these lands would not be subject to the provisions of this bill, as I understand it.

It had seemed to me that to withhold such legislation as the proposed general leasing bill, and thus keep over 6,000,000 acres of oil lands locked up indefinitely, because there is doubt as to the policy that should be pursued as to part of one naval oil reserve, is not the wisest course, as it would permit one obstacle to master a truly national need. Therefore I had hoped that a plan could be developed by which these conflicts could be avoided and a bill agreed upon that would, perhaps, not be entirely satisfactory to anyone and yet be so reasonable as to insure its passage by both Houses.

If it is your desire to secure my personal view as to the wisdom of compromising, as proposed, with the locators on the one naval reservation involved (No. 2), I would say that I can not properly give such opinion because another department of the Government is primarily involved in such action.

It is not to be overlooked that the present bill involves not only oil but phosphate, potash, and sodium lands, of which we have several millions of acres under withdrawal. The time is ripe for the development of these lands to furnish fertilizers for our soil and chemicals that are invaluable to the Army and the Navy, as well as to many industries.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 408.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. I understood the Senator from North Carolina to state that he was going to ask that a message from the President of the United States be laid before the Senate.

Mr OVERMAN. I make that request. I merely yielded to the Senator from Montana to call up the unfinished business.

DEATH OF ADMIRAL DEWEY (H. DOC. NO. 1945).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The message was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

It is with the deepest regret that I announce to the Congress the death of Admiral George Dewey at 5.56 o'clock on the afternoon of yesterday, the 16th of January, at his residence in this city.

Admiral Dewey entered the naval service of the country as an acting midshipman from the first congressional district of Vermont on September 23, 1854; was graduated from the Naval Academy as midshipman June 11, 1858; served with distinction throughout the war of 1861–1865; and 30 years later had risen to the rank of commodore. It was as commodore that he rendered the service in the action of Manila Bay which has given him a place forever memorable in the naval annals of the country. At the time of his death he held the exceptional rank of the Admiral of the Navy by special act of Congress. During the later years of his life he was the honored president of the General Board of the Navy, to whose duties he gave the most assiduous attention, and in which office he rendered a service to the Navy quite invaluable in its sincerity and quality of practical sagacity.

It is pleasant to recall what qualities gave him his well-deserved fame—his practical directness, his courage without self-consciousness, his efficient capacity in matters of administration, the readiness to fight without asking any questions or hesitating about any detail. It was by such qualities that he continued and added luster to the best traditions of our Navy. He had the stuff in him which all true men admire and upon which all statesmen must depend in hours of peril. The people and the Government of the United States will always rejoice to perpetuate his name in all honor and affection.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 17, 1917.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, our country has lost another great naval hero. George Dewey, Admiral of the Navy and hero of Manila Bay, died last evening at 5.56 o'clock. His spirit was the spirit of John Paul Jones, of Stephen Decatur, of James Lawrence, of Oliver Hazard Perry, of David Farragut. He upheld and illustrated the traditions which these men and others like them established. He knew no fear. His first thought always was the Navy and his duty to it, as was his last thought. John Paul Jones, with his ship sinking under, replied, in answer to a summons to surrender, "I have not yet begun to fight"; Perry's message after his famous victory was "We have met the enemy and they are ours"; James Lawrence, mortally wounded, shouting with his last breath, "Don't give up the ship"; Farragut, sailing into Mobile Bay, which was said to be filled with torpedoes, said, "Damn the torpedoes; go ahead"; and Dewey, entering Manila Bay, with mines and torpedoes under him and shore batteries and enemy ships firing on him, uttered not a word until he gave the famous order, clearly and quietly, as if he were talking of another matter, "You may fire when you are ready, Gridley."

Admiral Dewey was a lineal descendant of the heroes who preceded him. We can not do him too much honor.

I ask immediate consideration of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 321) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has learned with profound grief of the death of Admiral of the Navy George Dewey, who has served his country brilliantly for more than 62 years.

Resolved, That the President of the Senate is directed to transmit to his bereaved family a copy of these resolutions and an assurance of the sympathy of the Senate in the loss they have sustained.

Resolved, That the President of the Senate appoint a committee of seven Members to confer with a like committee of the House, and, after consultation with the family of the deceased, to take such action as may be appropriate in regard to the public funeral of Admiral Dewey.

The VICE PRESIDENT, under the third resolution, appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. PAGE.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I move, as a further mark of respect, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 18, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 17, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rabbi Isidore Lewinthal, of Nashville, Tenn., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, to Thee do we come in this hour and ask for Thy guidance. Do Thou grant wisdom and understanding to the Members of this House, so that they may acquit themselves of and discharge their duties as fully as their hearts desire to do so.

We thank thee, O Lord, that the lines have been cast to us in pleasant places. We have indeed a goodly heritage. We stand upon a shore unshaken, to look out upon the nations of the earth that are rocked and tossed as a ship upon the sea bestormed. We are in peace, while they are in tumult; we are without blood, while they are walking in garments rolled in blood. O do Thou grant that these struggles may speedily tend toward peace.

We beseech Thee that Thou wilt unite the hearts of men together in common citizenship; may they be inspired with a common desire for purity, for uprightness, for integrity in civil things.

O grant that in this great Nation there may be none that shall shrink from duty, none shall fear to speak and act for truth and for liberty. Grant that evil be smitten down and pierced through and destroyed, justice established, purity in the place of corruption stand forth, and all nations see the beginning of Thy salvation in the midst of this people. Into Thy keeping do we commend the President of these United States, the Speaker of this House, the Members of this Congress, and all the constituted authorities, so that through them order may be preserved and right and liberty be fostered. And Thine alone, O God, shall be the praise and glory, now and evermore. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5718) to provide for an auxiliary reclamation project in connection with the Yuma project, Arizona.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10384. An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PRATT, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. KEATING. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move, then, Mr. Speaker, that we dispense with the business of Calendar Wednesday to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the business of Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-day. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, two-thirds——

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withhold the point of no quorum in order that the Committee on Rules may present a matter to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withholds the point of order.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Was the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] agreed to?

The SPEAKER. No. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] raised the point of no quorum, and the Chair started to count, and then he withdrew his point of no quorum long enough for the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] to make some kind of a motion or report. The motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is still pending.

Mr. MANN. What is the effect of it, then?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] withdrew his point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Then the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] was agreed to?

The SPEAKER. No. It never was put.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; the Chair put it and declared it was carried.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had forgotten that.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, the Chair will recall that I withdrew the motion for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] to present this matter from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman "withheld"—that is the language he used—his point of order that there was no quorum present and stated specifically that he did it to give the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] a chance to do something. I do not know what it is that he wants to do.

Mr. MANN. He may renew his point of no quorum, but it will not have any effect on the vote that was taken.

Mr. KEATING. Then I can not withdraw my point of no quorum?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not do what he tried to do.

The SPEAKER. What was the point the gentleman from Illinois makes?

Mr. MANN. A vote was taken, and the Chair must declare the result of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going to do it, and the gentleman from Colorado intervened with the point of order that there was no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but you can not bring in, before the Chair disclosed the result of it, some other matter.

Mr. KITCHIN. Except by unanimous consent. I think the gentleman from Illinois is correct. The Chair had already announced the vote, and the gentleman from Colorado made the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Colorado insists upon his point of order, the Chair will have to sustain it.

Mr. KEATING. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEATING. In case the Chair finds a quorum is not present, will a vote come on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina?

The SPEAKER. It will. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-eight gentlemen present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on dispensing with Calendar Wednesday business for to-day.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 319, nays 31, answered "present" 0, not voting 84, as follows:

RULES COMMITTEE COMMITTEE HEARINGS.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I ask unanimous consent that the time within which to report on House resolution 429 be extended to 30 days.

The SPEAKER. From to-day?

Mr. POU. From this day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina, by the direction of the Committee on Rules, asks unanimous consent that the time for the investigation which the committee has been making be extended 30 days from to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I assume that the Committee on Rules is proceeding with the idea that the committee itself will go on with the investigation rather than to have a separate committee of the House appointed to investigate the leak charges?

Mr. POU. Not entirely so. I think most of the majority and the minority of the committee feel that we should go further.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the gentleman has a further resolution authorizing the committee to employ counsel aiding in the investigation of these charges?

Mr. POU. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not that predicated on the idea that the committee itself should go into an investigation of the various charges rather than to permit an investigation by another committee?

Mr. POU. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to state for the minority members of the Committee on Rules that they have felt and now feel that a special committee should have been appointed to make the investigation; but if that is not to be done, they do feel that the Committee on Rules should proceed with the investigation and that that committee should be equipped in every way to make a thorough investigation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Would not the acceptance of this proposition mean that there would be no special committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That may be the result of the action here to-day, that the investigation shall be made by the committee, as stated by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. What reason does the minority entertain for saying that a special committee would be more efficient than the Committee on Rules?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In the first place, this is the short session, and the Committee on Rules has a great deal of work to do. As one member of that committee I have thought that a special committee should be appointed and the Committee on Rules left to do the usual work of that committee.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question. In response to a question propounded by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] the gentleman from North Carolina stated that he had a resolution authorizing the Committee on Rules to employ counsel. I would like to ask the gentleman if he intends to give the House, after the introduction of the resolution, any time in which to debate that particular portion of this investigation.

Mr. POU. I have no objection to a reasonable time.

Mr. HOWARD. The reason that I reserved an objection and asked the question is that I am basing what I am about to say on what I have seen in the morning press. I want at least two or three minutes to make some observations on the character of counsel that will probably be employed and the amount that is going to be paid to him, and so forth and so on. If the previous question is going to be moved on this resolution immediately upon its being read, I shall necessarily, viewing this important matter from my own standpoint, interpose an objection to any unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LENROOT. But the only question now is the unanimous consent for extension of time.

Mr. HOWARD. I have no objection to the extension of time as long as this committee thinks it is wise for a thorough investigation. If the press report is true, I would like one or two minutes to say a few things.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To reserve the right to object. I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina how long a time there will be to discuss the question of the appointment of counsel.

Mr. POU. I think the gentleman from Kansas and myself will have no trouble in agreeing on the time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from North Carolina will have an hour, and can divide up that time if he sees fit. I have no doubt he will give half of an hour of the time to this side of the House.

Mr. POU. I certainly will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this investigation, this whole business, is not only vastly important but in some respects it is also deplorable, because thus far the proceedings have tended to confirm the suspicions already too prevalent throughout the country that there is no fine sense of honor in the public life of this Nation. Already it has degenerated into a partisan struggle. I regretted exceedingly, during the debate the other day, to hear members of the Committee on Rules—the committee conducting this investigation—charge that this side of the House was actuated only by a desire to cripple the efforts of the President in his negotiations for peace—a motive as thoroughly despicable as any that could actuate the members of a legislative body. And yet three members of the Rules Committee declared here in debate that we on this side of the aisle were prompted by that motive in urging an investigation of charges which put a stain upon the reputation of the American House of Representatives.

Now, it is in my mind a serious question what sort of counsel a committee whose majority hold such views and make such charges would employ, and what kind of an investigation we would have?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this discussion is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina mean 30 calendar days or 30 legislative days?

Mr. POU. Thirty calendar days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina to extend the time for this investigation for 30 calendar days?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To reserve the right to object, and to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question. Does the gentleman from North Carolina think that it is entirely proper that the Committee on Rules should proceed with an inquiry and investigation which involves a charge against one of its members?

Mr. POU. I think the committee will not be subject to any criticism in that respect; that is all I can say about it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 451.

Authorizing the Committee on Rules to employ counsel and accountants, to sit during the sessions of the House and outside of Washington, and providing for expenses.

Resolved, That in the consideration of House resolutions 420, 429, and 446, referred to the Committee on Rules, said committee be and is authorized and empowered to employ counsel to aid in conducting the investigations which it has been directed by the House to make, and also to employ such expert accountants familiar with stock-exchange transactions as may be found necessary in conducting said investigation.

The Committee on Rules or any subcommittee thereof is authorized in the consideration of said resolutions to sit during the sessions of the House in Washington or elsewhere.

The expenses incident to the employment of counsel and accountants and those of the committee or subcommittee when sitting outside of Washington shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers signed by the chairman or acting chairman of said committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether the committee has considered a limitation upon the amount that might be expended? It is customary in resolutions delegating authority to investigating committees to place some maximum amount on the sum to be expended by the committee. At least such was the practice in connection with the famous Michael Mulhall investigating committee, and it had a commendable effect upon the committee in its procedure. That committee, it is true, did not see fit to employ counsel. Members of the committee themselves performed the work of counsel. True, it was laborious work, but I do not question that counsel would be a valuable aid to this committee, and also an accountant in the investigation under consideration. I wish to submit the query whether there should not be some safeguarding of the interests of the Treasury, some limit beyond which the committee may not go in the matter of expenditures, so that they would not employ counsel without having some understanding in the beginning as to the amount counsel would charge for the work performed for this committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order that I may propound that inquiry.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman can not give me an opportunity to propound an inquiry, I shall have to object.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold that demand for the regular order for a moment, I would like to state that I think there will not be any objection to placing a limitation upon the amount, if it is desired by the House to do so, and, so far as the Committee on Rules is concerned, it is simply performing the duty thrust upon it by the House. We want the House to direct us what to do and what to expend. I do not think there will be any objection whatever to that course, if it is deemed desirable by the House.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that in all these matters where there has been an opportunity to employ counsel there has been serious complaint in this House when the amount of fees that were to be paid were known. The H. Snowden Marshall case that is now pending in this Congress has cost the Congress nearly $20,000. The attorneys' fees are somewhere between $11,000 and $15,000. In the Pujo investigation it will be remembered what a contest we had upon the floor of the House about the fees that should be paid the attorneys in that case. In that case they amounted to $15,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if the House of Representatives is to employ counsel it ought to have the best counsel that can be had, and it can not afford to haggle about the price. If we can not afford to pay the ordinary charges that eminent lawyers in this country would charge some one else for the same service, we ought to quit and not try to get them. If we want somebody who is not competent, who is unfit, if we want to haggle over the price that he is to charge for his services, we better keep out of the market and not try to get any legal counsel.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the employment of good counsel. Personally I have no objection to the fees. I am simply calling the attention of the House to the fact now that if they want counsel the House must expect to pay good fees. That is the purpose I had in stating what I did. There ought not to be any haggling about it, as the gentleman says, but the House ought to understand in advance that if counsel is to be employed, and it desires to employ good counsel, it should be prepared to pay them the usual fees.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the amount that I am going to indicate will be used, but I am perfectly willing to have a proviso placed on the resolution that the amount expended shall not exceed $15,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would be entirely satisfactory. The purpose of drawing attention to this is not to limit the activities of the committee unduly, but merely to place some restriction on the amount, so that it could employ the character of counsel that this investigation demands, but keep it within bounds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order that I may ask a question. Are not the majority of the members of this Committee on Rules lawyers themselves?

Mr. POU. Well, they have got licenses to practice, I believe.

Mr. BURNETT. That would seem to indicate that they are not real lawyers. If that is so, then I think the committee ought to have counsel, and I should vote for the resolution, but I dissent from the imputation of the gentleman from North Carolina. I think that every one of them is a good lawyer; and that being so, why should any lawyer be employed to conduct that investigation?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. POU. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, this matter has taken such a range that the members of the committee, whose ultimate duty is going to be as we see it now very largely judicial in character, labor under a very considerable embarrassment in any effort on the part of themselves to conduct the examination of witnesses. I feel sure that the gentleman from Alabama, if he has followed the hearings closely, can appreciate that fact. It is true that substantially all the members of the committee, nearly all the members of the committee except two, I believe, are lawyers, but in many investigations it would not be necessary, I think, to have attorneys. We never found it necessary, as has been stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, who was a very worthy, able, and efficient member of the special committee, to employ counsel in the Mulhall investigation, because it never reached that point where there was any embarrassment to the committee acting both as attorneys in the question and as judges on the final result, but in this investigation that situation has arisen. Then, there is this additional reason, I will say to the gentleman, while we are lawyers on the committee, most of us, there are certain things none of us know very much about; that is, the ins and outs of the stock exchange in New York, which will be involved in this investigation.

Mr. BURNETT. Then, the idea would be to employ some one familiar with those technical details and not a general lawyer like members of the committee are?

Mr. GARRETT. That is my idea.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. By permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, I would suggest if we possibly could get to the point of considering this resolution, then debate can follow that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have heard several names mentioned, one is that of Samuel Untermyer, of New York, and some gentlemen have indicated that such an appointment might not be wise. I have no suggestion to make about it, because the committee is able to handle that question itself, but names of men like Charles E. Hughes have been suggested and may be worthy of consideration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

SEVERAL DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS. Who is he?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does not the gentleman think that the embarrassment to which he refers on the part of members of the committee may be relieved by selecting, say, three lawyers from the Committee on the Judiciary to conduct this investigation, and empower them, if they found it was necessary, to get outside counsel to assist them, if they so desired?

Mr. GARRETT. Well, I do not see, Mr. Speaker, where that would make any difference to the committee. It is not on account of anything in that way that makes embarrassment. It is by virtue of the relation by which members occupy to it and the duties they have to perform. The duties they have to perform are largely judicial in character. I think the same thing applies to any special committee created.

Mr. RAGSDALE. But my position was this, if the gentleman will permit me. The gentleman's committee discharges the duty of judges. Why not select from another committee three lawyers who can handle this investigation. The President of the United States can find judges from the floor of the House; why can not he find lawyers here?

Mr. GARRETT. Well, I do not know. Does the gentleman mean to get Members of the House who will perform the function of examiners before the committee?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, that might be done, but whether or not they would be willing to perform the duty is another thing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit one question?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman state what will be the probable scope of this inquiry?

Mr. GARRETT. I can not. The resolution is, of course, familiar to the gentleman, but I understood the gentleman to mean, if I understood him correctly, just how far the committee would go. I can not state that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. As I understood, the original proposition was to authorize this committee to make a preliminary hearing to ascertain if there existed facts to justify the appointment of a special committee to make the investigation.

Mr. GARRETT. That was the original purpose.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Now, is it the purpose of the Committee on Rules to conduct the special investigation themselves without contemplating the appointment of any special committee?

Mr. GARRETT. I wish to say to the gentleman that I can not at this time answer the question, because I can not speak for the committee. I would venture the opinion that there has been a difference of sentiment in the committee upon the matter. At any rate we are all agreed that up to date we have not gone far enough to make an intelligent report to the House, and I feel that this resolution ought to be passed. As to how far we will go, that is a matter which will yet have to be determined by the committee. We have not yet gone far enough. That is all I can say, in answering the gentleman as frankly as I can; we feel that the character of report the House would expect us to make—that is, to give the information to the House that we anticipate the House would expect us to make—is beyond any report that we might now make.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It seems to me that the committee can without the aid of counsel specially employed arrive at a decision as to whether there probably exists a state of facts justifying an investigation. If it is the opinion of the committee that they should proceed with the investigation, having arrived at a conclusion that there exists that state of facts, then they ought to have counsel.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, I can not answer the gentleman more fully than I have as to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for one hour.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I would like in my time to offer this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOWARD: After the last word, insert:
"Provided, That the aggregate expenses incurred by the committee shall, in the furtherance of said investigation, not exceed the sum of $15,000."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have introduced this amendment——

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield before he begins his remarks?

Mr. HOWARD. With pleasure.

Mr. GARRETT. I presume that what the gentleman really desires is to limit the expense as to counsel fees and accountants. Now, for instance, if the gentleman will permit me, he provides there for the entire expenditure. The law provides witness fees and attendance, and I do not know how much has already been expended for witness fees. There have been a large number of people subpœnaed, and maybe a large number of others will be subpœnaed. I have no objection to what I think the gentleman has in mind, but it ought to be so worded as to apply simply to counsel and accountant fees, and personal expenses of the committee, if you want to apply it to them, but it ought not to affect witness fees.

Mr. HOWARD. In reply to the gentleman I would like to ask him a question. What do you anticipate this investigation is going to cost, exclusive of counsel fees and expert accountants?

Mr. GARRETT. I can not give the gentleman the slightest idea. That is utterly impossible.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, from my experience in matters of this kind, and especially those dealing with the intricate machinery of the New York Stock Exchange as it is conducted, I had as soon undertake to track a spider on water as to track one of these operators in the New York Stock Exchange if he desires to hide his operations. The main purpose of my introducing this amendment was to confine the expense of this committee to an economical basis. If what I believe is the truth—and gentlemen on this committee will follow me and make an answer to this proposition—I have seen in the morning press a statement to the effect that a certain prominent New York attorney is to be employed, but whether there is any prearrangement fixing his fees and the terms of his employment or not I do not know. Without the least reflection on anybody—and he may know all about the inner workings of the New York Stock Exchange—he may be the most expert man in the United States to investigate certain phases of the New York Stock Exchange, I want to say, and I say it only in my individual capacity as a Representative of my people on the floor of this House, that that man's services are not satisfactory to me.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir; for a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman care to give the name of the attorney referred to?

Mr. HOWARD. Of course, I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman answer this: Did he read also that the name of that attorney was suggested by Mr. Lawson himself?

Mr. HOWARD. I did. Now, I always try to be frank, honest, and fair with my colleagues in the House. I have nothing to hide, and I say this on my responsibility as a Representative on this floor, that the services of Samuel Untermyer are not satisfactory to me and are not satisfactory to 90 per cent of my constituents. [Applause.] Men are judged by their reputations, and so far as I am concerned—and I do not reflect in the least on my distinguished colleagues on this committee—I have been a prosecuting attorney in my lifetime, and I never did allow a defendant's counsel to select the witnesses he would introduce and prescribe the procedure to which I was to be confined. And here it is being heralded from one end of this country to the other in our great daily press that Mr. Lawson, the man who has drawn the attention of the country to what I believe to be a myth, and who has shown himself in many instances to be an enigma to the great minds on this committee, so far as extracting anything material to the investigation of any probative value, on the train coming from New York to Washington had practically agreed to the employment of Samuel Untermyer to conduct this investigation. Investigate what? Lawson's side of the controversy, or the side of the country? The latter wants the truth to be known as to the vile insinuations against the highest officials connected with the public affairs of this country.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. Would the pending amendment exclude the employment of Mr. Untermyer?

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir. But I am putting out a feeler right now. [Laughter.] That is why I introduced the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. HOWARD. I am putting out a feeler, and, if this House will back me, I will put in that resolution, "Provided further, That the services of Samuel Untermyer as attorney shall not be procured by this committee." [Applause.] There are other men in the country that know as much about stock exchanges as he. I can refer you to half a dozen of them.

Mr. GORDON. What does the gentleman think of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it is against the rules for a Member to sit in his seat and interrupt a Member who is speaking.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not mind answering, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. I know; but the Chair insists on order. That is a disorderly proceeding.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suggest the gentleman make a comment on the suggestion that Charles E. Hughes, who has had vast experience, be employed by the committee.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I have been taught by my good mother to speak respectfully of the dead, and I must refrain from comment. [Laughter and applause.] There are plenty of attorneys—plenty of them—who will think $10,000 for an investigation running over 15 or 20 days and the examination of probably 50 or 100 witnesses, thereby performing a patriotic duty to purify certain sources in this Government, if they are polluted, will be willing to take such a fee, from a patriotic standpoint, that will be reasonable and just. I am like the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]; I have always condemned the miserly and niggardly manner in which the Government of the United States has dealt with its district attorneys throughout this country, and I am not so much concerned about the size of the fee as I am about the character of the man who is to receive it.

And I believe that we ought to have in this particular instance men or a man to represent this committee of unquestioned integrity, a man at whom the finger of suspicion can not be pointed. This is an investigation of importance to the membership of this House, and we should not deal with it slightly. It involves the integrity of the very source of the Nation's Government, and if we permit men to act as attorneys for this committee, men whom the people could say were selected by the very man who brought about this investigation, to conduct it as he pleases, then we will surely be subject to the most severe and deserved criticism. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I believe that, so far as the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] are concerned, the employment as counsel for this committee of either Samuel Untermyer or Mr. Hughes would be an act of such gross impropriety that it will not be considered for a moment by the committee. [Applause.]

I do not favor the limitation of the amount which this committee may expend on counsel or expert fees. I hope and believe that a thorough investigation of this matter will show that no public official in high place has been guilty of what would be treason to the country and the people by betraying the trust reposed in him. [Applause.]

But there is suspicion in the air. There are rumors of all kinds going from mouth to mouth in this Chamber, in this city, and doubtless throughout the country. Not only ourselves but these officials ought to have a thorough investigation. If they should prove to be guilty, they ought to suffer. But it is for the honor of our country to ascertain whether they are guilty, in the hope that they may be proven innocent, and when this committee proceeds, with 30 days in which to make an investigation, and they employ counsel, they ought to have the right, when the trail apparently leads to some place, to have a lawyer follow it up and bring the testimony before the committee. They may need a dozen counsel. They may need dozens of experts. There is not a long time. It has to be done quickly. They should have every facility which can be afforded to them.

This is not a partisan matter, and you can not injure this country, our Government, by proof against a Democrat in high place without injuring all of us; you can not make proof against high officials of betrayal of trusts without injuring the country and all of us. I want to see an investigation, if there be no truth in these charges, which will show to the world that high officials in the American Government, a Government of the people, are not betraying their trust; or if they are, that they shall be punished.

I would not stop on the expenditure of paltry sums of money. It would be better to spend in a case like this and know the facts than to leave it to idle rumor and have no one believe the report of a committee. [Applause.] Whoever has a suspicion, let us find out, and I hope and pray in behalf of a Republic of the people that it will be shown that our officials have not betrayed their trust. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call to the attention of the House the fact that the New York Stock Exchange has 1,100 members. There is a stock exchange firm for each member, except in about 100 instances, where there are two or more members of the stock exchange belonging to a firm. In a great many instances a firm—what we call a stock exchange house, that is, a firm engaged in stock exchange business, at least one of whose members is a member of the stock exchange—has branch houses scattered throughout the United States. Some of them have as high as 40 or 50 branches.

My own personal experience has taught me that the examination of a single stock broker's books, covering the accounts of a single active trader, will require the services of an expert accountant, taking one or two or three weeks, and will cost about $250. If we undertake this investigation in the manner that Mr. Lawson asks that it be undertaken, according to his formula, we would have to have a corps of 1,000 expert accountants to finish it in 30 days.

Not only that, but after the expert accountants have gotten through with accumulating their detail you have got to take it and put it into a room where other experts can match together the evidence they have accumulated on this great fishing expedition. Are you going to get anywhere between now and the 4th day of March?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will it take a thousand experts to examine the two whose names have been mentioned?

Mr. CALDWELL. No.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, that is all that has been suggested so far.

Mr. CALDWELL. If you take the suggestion of Mr. Lawson, who is reported as having stated in coming down on the train what counsel they are to employ, and who furnishes the formula, you will. Examine the record of Mr. Samuel Untermeyer, you will find that for many years he has been endeavoring to get some kind of a legislative body to employ him to go on this kind of a fishing excursion for his own or somebody else's benefit, not for the purpose of accumulating any evidence against any public official, because no man has found anything upon which he could base such a charge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that Mr. Untermyer accompanied the Secretary of the Treasury on his recent South American trip and has received honor from him?

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not know as to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is true. He was appointed by this administration to be one of the commissioners of the United States section of the International High Commission.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from New York if Mr. Lawson did not state that Mr. Untermyer was not employed, but that he did see him on the train and talked with him in a general way only about this matter?

Mr. CALDWELL. I have repeated what I read in the newspaper reports. But I assure you in my opinion this kind of an investigation, followed along this line, will result not in an expenditure of $15,000, not $100,000, but as a matter of fact, perhaps $250,000 before you got through with it, if you followed leads of this kind and went on this kind of a fishing excursion. I favor an investigation, not a fishing expedition for ulterior purposes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield some of his time?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution. It has been charged on the street, charged in the public press, charged on the stock exchange that members high in this Government have corruptly profited by advance information as to its action. To that charge has now been added, in the same locality, a more serious one, to the effect that the majority of this committee and the majority of this House do not desire to have these matters investigated and to ascertain whether the charge is in fact true.

Let me say at the outset that I place no credit in these charges, but at the same time the Committee on Rules owes it to itself and this House owes it to itself to have the truth or falsity of those charges shown and demonstrated and passed upon by some body other than that committee. Who ever heard of a committee being appointed to investigate charges which involved one of its members? True it is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is not himself charged with having performed any corrupt act, but the charge made against him in the testimony is such that if true it would necessarily lead to the conclusion that he did not desire to pursue this investigation. Still this committee proposes to keep the investigation in its control and will proceed to conclusions upon which the gentleman from Texas will vote, as to whether this investigation shall be carried further.

With what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said as to the manner in which this investigation ought to be conducted I entirely agree. But that is by a true investigating committee and not the Committee on Rules, which, to a certain extent, is itself the subject of investigation. My understanding is that the minority of the committee desire to have a special committee appointed. Who believes that any special committee will be appointed if this investigation is carried on in this manner? In my opinion they need no counsel to ascertain as to whether this investigation should be carried on not by themselves but by a special committee. For that reason I am opposed to this resolution in its entirety.

Mr. POU. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]. This proposition has become of such importance that the committee in charge of the investigation should not be handicapped, and the House can not afford to have it handicapped for the sake of economy. While this question involves the reputation or the integrity of certain citizens of this country, it goes much further than that. It involves the integrity of the American Government because of the high official positions held by some of the parties whose names have been connected with it. Therefore, if the charges are true, the truth should be known. If they are untrue, as I believe they are and as I believe a thorough investigation will disclose, it is due not only to the men whose names have been brought in question, but it is also due to the people of the United States that their names be cleared of these charges, because of the high official position that they hold. We have had many investigations in this country, but in my opinion this is the most important investigation of them all, not because of the merits of the charges which led to the adoption of the resolution directing the investigation, but because of the range which the investigation has taken, and I for one Member of this House am unwilling to handicap this committee in the name of economy, thereby rendering it unable to thoroughly sift the whole affair, without which it may not arrive at a proper conclusion. I disagree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] who preceded me, and who contends that the Committee on Rules should not be permitted to go further with the investigation, but that a new committee should be appointed. These charges do not involve the names of any of the committee investigating them, and my confidence in the membership of the committee prompts me to believe that they will deal fairly with the evidence that is presented before the committee. Therefore I think the course taken by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is unjust to the Committee on Rules, and that his accusations are unwarranted. I hope in the interest of truth that this question, which has attracted the attention not only of the country but of the world, may be settled and settled right, which can not be done without a thorough investigation, which the Howard amendment would prevent. I therefore hope that this House will vote down the amendment and give the committee a free hand to make a thorough investigation, so that the truth and the whole truth may be fully known.

I am frank to say that I believe the charges are without foundation, and that the whole affair is a mean conspiracy designed to injure the reputations of certain men in high official positions by persons unfriendly to them or by "Wall Street" gamblers who have been robbed by other gamblers on the stock exchange, and who hope to precipitate a controversy which will result in an investigation of the stock exchange. Therefore the matter should not have received congressional notice. The Wood resolution should not have been adopted, but it was adopted by this House; and the very fact that it was makes it incumbent upon the House to go to the bottom of the charges which it contains. The House having dignified the charges and the resolution by notice and adoption can not now afford to permit itself to be charged with dereliction of duty in investigating same; having put its hand to the plow it can not now turn back, but must fully meet the responsibilities which it assumed by doing so or make itself ridiculous in the eyes of the country.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I do.

Mr. REAVIS. Does the gentleman believe that the chairman of the Committee on Rules, Mr. HENRY, will be enabled to weigh the testimony of the witness Lawson impartially and judicially?

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to the gentleman that the chairman of the Committee on Rules does not constitute the whole membership of that committee.

Mr. REAVIS. I am speaking with reference to a member of that committee. Do you believe that the chairman of that committee, under the circumstances, will be able judicially and impartially to weigh the testimony of the witness Lawson?

Mr. FIELDS. I will say that I think the chairman of the Committee on Rules is an honest man, and I believe that he would deal fairly with it from his point of view. I understand, of course, that because of certain phases of the controversy you might not be willing, or others might not be willing, to risk the chairman of the Committee on Rules to decide the whole question; but I want to repeat what I said, that the chairman does not constitute the whole committee, neither do I think that he, as a member of the committee, would participate in the weighing of any matter pertaining to the controversy between himself and the witness Lawson. He would leave questions of that character to the balance of the committee.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw the amendment offered by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, like the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], I wish to give expression to my convictions and my sentiments alone. Men are governed in their actions by their environment and by their knowledge of situations and conditions, and before this Congress I wish to go on record to-day on this question. I want to say, gentlemen, that I believe this is a most colossal farce and that we are being imposed upon as no legislative body ever has been anywhere on earth. [Applause.] I believe that not for one minute does any Member of this Congress or any sensible, sane man who has knowledge of the methods of Wall Street and of men like Lawson, believe Mr. HENRY is guilty of any wrong. [Applause.] Nor do they believe that any member of the Cabinet is guilty of any wrong, or that any United States Senator is guilty of any wrong. Let me tell you why this appears to me to be such a monstrous farce. I understand that this investigation is based upon a so-called leak. What leak? A leak that the President was in favor of peace? How absurd to anyone who knows the roosters of Wall Street. Why, my friends, did not the President of the United States, early in December, declare from that stand that within a week—yea, perhaps within a day—this country might become involved in war; that, in fact, the sparks were sputtering about us then? Did the market break as a consequence of this deliverance? No; it was not rigged to break. The market breaks only when it is rigged to break. It breaks only when the country suckers are on board long, and then Wall Street waits for the opportunity. The opportunity came. [Applause.] When the market goes up, it is when the country suckers are short, and they are given the squeeze. The one thing above all other things that convinces me that this is a farce, that we ought to wash our hands not only of this amendment but that we ought to throw it all into the street as damaged, worthless goods and beneath the dignity of this self-respecting legislative body—the one thing among others which convinces me that this is a fake and sham and travesty is not only the fact that around Wall Street many of Mr. Lawson's performances are regarded counterfeit, but because it is alleged that somebody "outside" and in Washington made money on the leak, for Wall Street never allows anybody "outside" to make any money.

To save the time of Congress, to maintain our self-respect, and to save the people's money let us dismiss this whole unwarranted and unmerited investigation and consign it to the garbage can, where it belongs. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, if there is any motion in order that will lead to the dismissal of this whole proceeding, I desire to make it. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] three minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, while some persons may be inclined to some extent to agree with some of the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], who has just preceded me, we all must recognize the fact that this House, by unanimous consent, only a few days ago sent these resolutions now pending before the House back to that committee with instructions to further investigate. The investigation has gone to that extent that it is believed it is necessary to go further, and this morning, by unanimous consent of this House, the committee was granted 30 days' additional time to make a full and complete and thorough investigation of all the charges, complaints, and insinuations connected with this whole affair.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe we mean what we say and are in real earnest about this investigation; and if so, there should be no limitation placed on this committee, upon its powers of investigation, or upon the funds to be used by it in making the investigation. Whether there is anything in the charges or not is to be determined, but there is no question but what they are floating around from one end of the country to the other, and headlines in the newspapers indicate that they permeate not only the cities, the towns, and hamlets, but are traveling up and down every rural route in this land. When these charges, suggestions, and insinuations of wrongdoing go out to the people of this country, not only the honor and integrity of the membership of the House is involved and the good name and fair fame of every Member sitting in this body, but Cabinet officers and other people are involved; and the duty now confronting us is to see that no obstructions are put in the way of a full, complete, searching, and unsparing investigation being made, to the end that the flood light of truth be turned on in all its power. [Applause.] I want them to have authority and money to go to the very deepest depths of the whole thing, and expose the roots of every charge, dig them up to the fullest extent, and if there is anything wrong, expose every particle of wrong and corruption, and lay on and spare not. The innocent have nothing to fear and the guilty, if there be any, deserve no consideration. "The wicked flee when no man pursueth; but the righteous are as bold as a lion." The innocent will stand and welcome this investigation, and if the wicked attempt to flee give this committee money and authority to pursue and catch them. If there is nothing in these charges, let that be demonstrated and satisfy the people throughout the land. If there is anything in them, let the people have the truth, and whoever is the guilty party let it be known that punishment may be visited upon him. It is just as important to the people that the innocent against whom these charges are made should be vindicated as it is to find those who are guilty. Therefore, again I say, give the committee full authority and necessary funds, and say to them, "Go to it!" Let no guilty man escape, high or low, and remove every doubt as to the innocent. Dissipate the clouds and let in the sunshine and make happy the innocent and make miserable the guilty, if there be any guilty. [Great applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is opposed to this resolution because in his opinion any further investigation should be conducted by a special committee and not by the Committee on Rules. I want to remind the gentleman from Iowa and this side of the House that whatever opinion he may entertain in that respect that matter is not within the control of either the minority members of the committee or of this side of the House. The majority members of the Committee on Rules have determined that they will proceed further with the investigation. The minority members have agreed that there should be further investigation. Every Member of this House, in view of what has transpired, must also agree to that. It is not within our power to say that a special committee shall be created. That lies on that side of the aisle, and we are therefore left with this proposition: The investigation will be continued by the Committee on Rules. Shall it be continued longer without the benefit of counsel? And that is the only question there is before the House to-day.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. EMERSON. I would like to hear in all fairness why a committee with such good lawyers as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] on that committee, the committee should be in need of requiring the aid of counsel.

Mr. LENROOT. I was just coming to that, and would have come to it without the gentleman's question. That is a perfectly proper and pertinent question and I am glad to state the reason as far as I am concerned.

With me it is not primarily for counsel in order to gain information concerning the intricacies of the New York Stock Exchange, but this is the proposition: The names of certain men have now become involved in this proceeding. Presumably these men will come before the committee, and presumably these men will testify that they are absolutely innocent. Presumably that is the fact, but the country is not going to be satisfied with any general denial upon the part of any witness coming before that committee. The country is not going to be satisfied unless there is a proper cross-examination of that man, we have gotten the truth, whatever it may be.

Now, the members of the Committee on Rules are not the proper ones to make that cross-examination. If the minority members of the committee make it—if they make such an examination as ought to be made, they will at once be charged with being actuated by partisan motives in the questions they ask. They will have to, if they desire to get at the truth, assume the rôle of prosecuting counsel. They ought not to be called upon to do it. Presumably the majority members of the committee in the questions they ask of the witnesses will ask such questions as will support the claim of innocence, and they will bear the rôle of counsel for the defense.

Mr. Speaker, that ought not to be done on either side, but we ought to have counsel, not selected by the Democratic members alone, not selected by the Republican members alone, but counsel of eminence in the United States, a man who has not been active partisan in either Republican or Democratic politics, a man who will serve the Committee on Rules not with the idea of prosecuting or shielding any man, but only to get at the truth, wherever it may lie, and be free to ask any question of that witness that will either draw out the guilt, if guilt there be, or support by corroborative evidence the innocence of the man before the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. ANDERSON. Has the gentleman any hopes of securing such a man?

Mr. LENROOT. I have. I believe there are counsel of that kind in the United States.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have no doubt there are counsel, but on account of the rumors that are going around the House, and in view of the debate we have had here to-day, I have very serious doubts about the committee securing such counsel.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to Mr. Untermyer, I want to say for the committee on both sides, Republicans and Democrats, that there has not been the slightest suggestion by any member of the committee that Mr. Untermyer shall be employed. I want to say to the Democratic side of the House that if this resolution shall pass and if the counsel that is employed shall not be satisfactory to the Republican members of the committee, if he shall be known as a partisan of this administration, if there is the slightest suspicion that the examination he shall conduct will be had for the purpose of shielding anybody, the purpose of this resolution will fail. But I believe it will be possible for both Republicans and Democrats to agree upon some counsel who will not only have the confidence of the membership of this House upon both sides of the aisle, but the confidence of the country as well, so that when our examinations are concluded this House and the country will feel that we have got the truth, whatever it may be.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understand the purpose of this inquiry is to ascertain if any officials holding official positions with our Government were guilty of giving advance information of governmental action by reason of which they or others profited upon the stock market.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it necessary, in order to ascertain that fact, that there be an investigation of the whole New York Stock Exchange?

Mr. LENROOT. I think not; and, so far as I am concerned, there has not been any suggestion of that purpose so far as the Committee on Rules is concerned.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] seemed to advance that idea.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit me to answer the gentleman's question, the reason I said that was because Mr. Lawson, in putting down his scheme by which he was going to find out who was guilty, suggested if they brought in the books they could find who was guilty. He gave what he called a formula by which he was going to find who was crooked in the administration, and if you follow his formula you have to make that investigation.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield further. I will simply say that, so far as the preparation of this resolution is concerned, the reason for the employment of counsel and an accountant was not with an idea that this committee would make any general investigation of the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. If this resolution should pass, is it the purpose of this committee to make the investigation or to determine whether an investigation should be had?

Mr. LENROOT. I can only speak for myself and, I believe, for my associates upon the minority side of the committee. Our view is that there ought to be an investigation now by a special committee, because of the peculiar conditions which now exist and surround this entire matter. Secondly, our position will continue to be that the moment from now on there is any evidence establishing a prima facie case within the subject matter of this resolution this Committee on Rules should suspend its investigation and report the resolution to the House for the creation of a special committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman feels at liberty to answer such a question, I should like to ask whether he feels that he has substantial grounds for a belief that he himself and other minority members of the Committee on Rules will receive consideration, substantial consideration, in the choice of counsel, or will their views be largely neglected?

Mr. LENROOT. I have not, nor do I think my associates have, received that impression, because it has not yet reached that point in the discussion, but I think I can safely say to the gentleman from Michigan that the majority members of this committee, when it comes to the selection of counsel, will not select any counsel who is not satisfactory to the minority members of the committee, because the moment they do they will add to the suspicion that already exists throughout the country, and if that suspicion be unfounded, then this committee as a whole ought to do its best to remove it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to give my entire approbation and support to every honest effort to find all the facts in connection with these accusations. I felt a good deal like the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] all during this matter. I felt at times that I would like to close the whole matter by repeating a sentence of David's prayer, and say, "Let lying lips be put to silence that speak grievous things falsely and contemptuously against the righteous"; but the matter has gone on until now there is no reason in stopping. I am in favor of the present committee continuing its investigations until they find overt acts and prima facie facts upon which they can make a tangible report. I do not want to substitute a new committee for the present committee at this time, for they will have to begin back at the beginning and start up and fish and smell a week or two before they find anything like what this committee knows. I want to continue the investigation until some specific condition is developed, and so far as the chairman of the committee, the Hon. R. L. HENRY, being discolored by Lawson's foul, exuding stench, I just want to suggest that if you create another committee, then that social, political, and commercial polecat that maliciously fumed that stench on HENRY could blow his breath on the new chairman and discolor him at once as he has this chairman. [Laughter.] So I am in favor of going on with the investigation and I am not stickling about the amount of money. If you expend $100,000 to vindicate the honor, stability, character, and official integrity of prominent and national characters, which are at stake, who now, in my opinion, suffer under the rancor of irresponsible rumor and slander, the money will be well spent. Let us develop the truth. If there is no official turpitude, then let these slanders stand to convict the men who uttered them as infamous. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do I understand the gentleman is not going to use any more of his time?

Mr. POU. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have a little time left on this side, but it is not important.

Mr. POU. I will withhold the motion if the gentleman desires.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman may make the motion, with this suggestion.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. POU, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18994, the public-buildings bill, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the public-buildings bill, with Mr. CLINE in the chair.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] in charge of the bill is not present. I wish to know how much time the gentleman from Florida has used and how much I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida has 60 minutes left; the gentleman from Ohio has 1 hour and 20 minutes left.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, by the admission of this administration there will be during the next year a deficiency of about $300,000,000, and by the military-defense program which we have marked out for ourselves extraordinary taxation to meet that deficit and perhaps bond issues are likely to continue for several years. Obviously, then, it is a time when the Government ought to be prudent and sparing in all its routine expenses. Necessities, of course, we should not neglect; we can afford to keep house in a moderate, perhaps in a generous way, but we certainly can not afford luxuries. Now, it seems to me that nobody can deny that the greater part of the buildings provided by this bill are pure luxuries. And they are not only luxuries, they are extravagant luxuries. Nobody, I think, claims that the post-office administration needs these buildings to carry on its business well, but, on the contrary, the very enactment of this law and the very construction of these buildings will increase the expenses of the Post Office administration.

Under the law no building can be built where there is less than $10,000 postal receipts. That law shows that in the opinion of Congress and the committee the necessity for the building is dependent on the size of the postal receipts, and yet, in a great majority of the post offices, where the receipts are over $10,000 the records show that they are now paying for rent, light, heat, and service less than $1,000 a year. Simply to operate the cheaper buildings of $50,000 costs nearly twice that, without including the cost of the building or interest on investment. Therefore if you put in these buildings you increase the current expenses of the department. Now, we all know this bill is not brought in here to improve the post-office efficiency. It is brought in largely to improve congressional fences. It is not peculiar to this committee; it has always been so. These public-building bills are brought in the interest of Members.

My colleague [Mr. GARDNER] on yesterday suggested that he voted for the rule because he hoped that the House would strike out the unnecessary items, and then he could vote for the bill. I do not believe any man in the House shared that hope, because as soon as you strike out one item the bill loses one vote, and if you keep on striking out unnecessary items you keep losing votes until at last there will not be enough enthusiasm for the bill to call for the yeas and nays. You can not amend, improve, and perfect a bill when each Member is personally interested in it, because we are none of us impartial to the matters which affect our personal interests.

The very way in which this bill was prepared shows that it was not prepared for the public interest. It was prepared for the private interest of Congressmen. The chairman of the committee last year sent out letters to every Congressman suggesting that he send in an item for the bill. Is that the way the other committees go to work? Is that the way any appropriation bill would be prepared?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly, I will yield if the gentleman will give me time. The gentleman has plenty of time, I believe.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have not.

Mr. GILLETT. Then I will have to wait and see if I have the time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question. I presume the gentleman does not want to make a misstatement?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I am glad to have a correction if I have made a misstatement.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I sent out no such letters as that.

Mr. GILLETT. I received one.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I sent out letters asking the gentlemen to indicate what place in their district they thought was entitled to more consideration than the others when the committee made up its bill.

Mr. GILLETT. I forget the phraseology of the suggestion which was sent in, but what did the gentleman do in preparing his bill? Suppose a Member of Congress thought that under the present condition of the Treasury no public-buildings bill would be passed this year. Did the gentleman's committee then consider that district, or, contrary, if no suggestion was made by the Congressman, did he ask the Post Office Department what place in that district should be appropriated for, or, on the contrary, did he entirely neglect the district? I say there are districts where no public buildings are provided for in this bill, and yet which have cities of 10,000 and 20,000 inhabitants without post offices, whereas to the friends, the favorite Members, there are scattered broadcast buildings for small villages of two or three thousand.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state——

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Those districts are not provided for because the Members from the districts for some reason or other did not look after the interest of the districts.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman just corrected me a moment ago by saying that they only asked Members which of the places in their district they thought should be the favored one.

Now, the gentleman is apparently intimating that he asked Members whether they should have one or not.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I asked them that when they had more than one bill pending.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman asked them when they did not have any bill pending. The gentleman sent it to every Congressman and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It may have been sent indiscriminately to everybody on the assumption that Members of Congress would look after the interests of their respective districts.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman is looking after the business of the Nation and not simply looking after the interests of Congressmen why does he not look after each district, and when there is no suggestion from a Congressman, when he has not suggested one rather than another, why does not he find out from the Post Office Department what is needed?

The truth is, the gentleman knows and we all know it was intended to make a combination of Congressmen. Now, I do not like to use, and I do not use, and I do not like to hear others use, these words "graft" and "pork" in connection with Congress. I think we are a great deal better men than the public generally thinks we are, and yet I think it is bills like this, bills which appeal to the private interests of the Congressmen rather than to the public interest of the Nation, that make the people credulous and readily believe such unsubstantiated attacks as are now being investigated. I believe there ought to be a new system and method of making up these bills. I admit this has always been the method, but this limitation of $10,000 of receipts is ridiculously lax. It is more economical for the Post Office Department to rent buildings than it is to erect them until the business of the city or town gets so large that it needs a whole building for itself.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that question?

Mr. GILLETT. If you will give me time; otherwise I can not.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can do it in this time if you will take it now.

Mr. GILLETT. I can not yield to the gentleman unless he gives me time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. All right; I have not got it.

Mr. GILLETT. You have plenty of time.

What we ought to do, in my opinion, is not to pass a bill for any town until a special building is required for the post-office business. When a special building is required it is time enough for us to say that we will erect buildings, but otherwise let us rent. That is business; that is economy. Now, I have no doubt that such a rule is too rigid to meet the views of a majority in this House, but in my opinion in business administration the time is coming when such a rule will have to be adopted, and it seems to me that the danger of the present practice is vividly illustrated in this very bill. I can not believe that those who are responsible for the financial condition of the Treasury to-day will allow it to become a law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I wish to give some of the reasons why I am opposed to this bill and why I shall vote against it. I am a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and have been for the past six years, but I had nothing whatever to do with the making up of this bill. I expressed myself, however, as opposed to an omnibus bill on numerous occasions in the committee, and when the committee finally determined to report a bill declined to further participate in its consideration. Chairman CLARK told you the bill was the sentiment and best judgment of the committee, with possibly one or two members opposed. I violate no confidence when I say at least three members of the committee have been steadfastly opposed to this bill, and I know there are several other members on the committee who doubt seriously the wisdom of passing this bill. The bill, however, is doubtless favored by a majority of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I claim no irregularity in any respect. I dislike very much to disagree with my colleagues on the committee, for whom I have the highest regard and who have always treated me with the greatest consideration, and none to a greater degree than the charming chairman of the committee.

I wish to concur in the statement of the chairman that this bill is not sectional. I doubt if there is a committee of the House where partisan prejudice is less manifest. It is unfair, therefore, for anyone who is opposed to the bill to charge that it is sectional. Republicans have had just as generous a piece of pie as the Democrats. In fact, the boys have all been pretty well cared for, and that is what makes it difficult to defeat a bill of this character. To vote against this bill means a vote against a piece of bacon for the folks back home for at least two-thirds of the Members of this body.

The chairman referred to certain gentlemen who heretofore have favored this sort of legislation but who are now violently opposed to it, intimating that it was because they had secured all the public buildings they desired for their district. I did not oppose the public-buildings bill four years ago, and would not oppose this bill now if the conditions were the same as they were at that time, although there are towns in this bill that have as little need for a public building as a pig has for two tails. I have an item in this bill, although I did not ask for it, for a town which now has 14,000 population, and whose postal receipts for the past year were over $30,000. It is a better proposition than at least 150 items in this bill. I have four other towns in my district that do not have a Government building which are fully equal to 100 of the items in this bill. The shoe flung by the chairman does not, therefore, fit me. I expect to vote against the bill, and will vote to strike out all items which have no more merit than the one from my district. But, like the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], I will not offer an amendment to strike out the item for my district unless all items of like merit go out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says he will not move to strike out the item in which he is interested.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Unless all like items are stricken out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the question that is troubling me. How are we to determine which is the best item? The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says he will not strike out his item because it is a proper one, and the gentleman from Ohio says he will not strike out his item because it is a proper one; and how are we to distinguish between the propriety of these items except as the committee recommends them?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman will offer an amendment to the bill to strike out all the items where the postal receipts do not exceed $35,000, which will include my item, I will vote for it.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will.

Mr. BURNETT. How many items has the gentleman had in that bill since he has been in Congress?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Well, I have been cared for pretty well. I will refer to that before I conclude my remarks.

Mr. BURNETT. You will state that, then, before you get through?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If I do not, I am perfectly willing the gentleman should.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds ever considered passing this kind of a law, namely, to fix the conditions under which public buildings shall be erected, as to the income of a post office, the size of the town, and whether they have free delivery or not? After that the erection of public buildings would be purely an automatic performance. Is it possible to do it and get this method out of here?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that in the last public-buildings bill the limitation was made at $6,000 receipts, I believe, and in this bill it is fixed at $10,000 postal receipts.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but this bill and the other bill did not make the thing work automatically.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit, the committee has never considered the proposition of fixing a limit of receipts or any other standard by which buildings could be cosntructed automatically.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I am driving at is this: Is it possible to rig up a law like that, that will take this everlasting squabble out of the House?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think it is. So far as I am concerned, I would be perfectly willing to do so.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I can hardly conceive how a law of that kind could be passed, because it would be impossible for the Government to build public buildings for all the towns that would be entitled to a building under a limitation we most likely would fix.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why?

Mr. ASHBROOK. For instance, if we should fix the postal receipts at $15,000 or $25,000, it would be impossible for the Government, within a considerable number of years, to build public buildings at all the towns that would meet this requirement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose we say $15,000 or $25,000? It does not make any difference where the limit is, so that you can get a law that relieves the House of this continual squabble and from being slandered by every newspaper that wants to slander it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The only way that could be handled would be by fixing the postal receipts so high, say $50,000, that it would not include two-thirds of the items that come in these omnibus building bills. Such a bill in my judgment would not be popular with the Members.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will permit?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. The suggestion that is made that a law might be passed fixing conditions under which a public building could be constructed, and then permit them to be constructed automatically, would require, of course, an affirmative action of some executive officer, and then it would also require that he have control of an appropriation sufficient to construct the building or else he would have to simply report to Congress the number of buildings that he had decided that year came within the conditions, and leaving Congress then to make the appropriation at that time for the construction of the buildings. It would not get around the question of the authorization by law for the appropriation of public money.

Mr. ASHBROOK. And in that event it would work out as most of these things do along that line, the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol would get most of the buildings.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is another matter that is of importance other than the question of rental. That is the question of the type of building. Has it been considered. I know of some instances where buildings have been erected, costing a great deal of money, buildings which, although handsome, were not in keeping from an architectural standpoint with their environments. It was like putting a string of pearls around the neck of a woman who has on shoes with holes in them. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Along the line of the standardization of public buildings, there is legislation in this bill which I believe would remedy the condition to which you refer.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again right there?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There is a box type of building which is now proposed which would answer the purpose very well.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think the committee deserves the thanks of Congress for doing that, and it would be a good thing, also, to set a limit for the sites.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say that in this bill we have drawn no distinctions between sites and buildings, but have fixed the same limit—$10,000—for both sites and buildings, requiring that the city or town show $10,000 of receipts for three successive years.

Mr. ASHBROOK. A man perhaps is justified in buying a twin six if the condition of his exchequer will warrant it, but if he must put a mortgage on his home to buy the speeder he would be a very poor business man, to say the least. A Ford ought to be his limit. A man may have bought a diamond ring and a sealskin coat for his wife when he was flush, but he would be a very foolish man, indeed, to make expenditures of this kind when he was hard pressed for the necessities of life. Because certain Members did not oppose public buildings 4, 6, and 10 years ago is no argument why they should now favor a bill authorizing appropriations of upwards of $40,000,000 when we have a deficit of $300,000,000 staring us in the face and we know not where or how to raise the money.

There are numerous items in this bill which can be defended by all. It is not wholly a bad bill, but there are items in this bill making authorizations for villages which had less than 1,000 population, according to the census returns of 1910, to wit, Susanville, Cal., population 688; Baxley, Ga., 831; Hazard, Ky., 537; Las Vegas, Nev., 945——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for another question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, is he not?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman knew that the subcommittees were engaged in these hearings, did he not?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will ask the gentleman if he attended any of those hearings and objected to the insertion of any of these items in this bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I want to say to the chairman of the committee—and if I do not assert the truth, I ask him to rise in his place and dispute it—that upon every occasion during this Congress when an omnibus public buildings bill was proposed and suggested I opposed it, and when the committee finally determined to report a bill I gave notice that I would not attend the hearings, and did not participate in making up this bill. Is that true?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is true; but does not the gentleman think he ought to have attended those hearings as a member of the committee, and ought to have done what he could to keep out objectionable items?

Mr. BURNETT. And was not the gentleman chairman of one of the subcommittees?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; but declined to act as such. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the query of my friend from Florida [Mr. CLARK] that I do not waste my ammunition in trying to bring down birds out of range and reach. You had too many votes in the committee to make it worth my time to attempt to oppose this bill. I demanded a roll call on several occasions to determine the temper of the committee, and when I found the temper of the committee was to report a bill I acted as I have stated.

At Lewisburg, W. Va., there is a population of 803; at Berkeley Springs, W. Va., 864——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will not the gentleman be fair enough to state that a term of the Federal court is held at Lewisburg, W. Va., and we provided for a courthouse there as well as the post office?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Well, if that is true, I am perfectly willing to have the gentleman interrupt me to make the statement. It is a town, however, of 864 inhabitants.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Does not the gentleman know that I got a building at Berkeley Springs, and that that is in my district?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Well, I dislike to oppose anything in which the gentleman is so much interested.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Did you not help me get that bill through?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think not. If the gentleman had listened to my statement, he would not say so.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Do you not think that there should be a Federal building at a place where 5,000 people get their mail and live within a certain radius of the place?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I doubt that. I know that 864 people are said to live in this village.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Did you not attend the hearings on that item?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Did I attend the hearings?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not think I had anything to do with the making up of this bill.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Does not the gentleman remember Judge Boyce and his brother, who appeared before the committee, and also Mr. RUCKER? Mr. RUCKER is a native of Lewisburg.

Mr. ASHBROOK. How long ago was that?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. About a year, perhaps.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman says it is true, I will not dispute it.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I want to say that there are two colleges in that town.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is a growing town, no doubt.

Lewisburg, W. Va., 803; Berkeley Springs, W. Va., 864; and Newcastle, Wyo., 975. The postal receipts at Susanville for the last fiscal year were $7,058.08.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for just one moment?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman know that at Susanville, Cal., there is a post office, a land office, a courthouse, and a station of the Forest Service to be housed?

Mr. ASHBROOK. How much is the rental for those activities?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, I can tell you later. I do not know it just now, but we are building a building there to take care of the Federal activities of the Government. The gentleman knows it has always been customary not to follow the rule of postal receipts when there are other Federal activities, and here are four or five to be taken care of.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Well, the gentleman knows that those activities are not of great importance. If there is a court there it would be more important.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman think that a United States land office is not important?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is the most important of those activities.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. It may be very important, and yet it could be perfectly well taken care of in a rented building.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes. I doubt whether all of these Federal activities would amount in rental to more than $1,000. I may be mistaken but——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The Government ought to have a building there.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. The amount of rental for the post office activities at Susanville is $600 a year.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I suppose that is for the post office.

For Baxley, $6,639.50; for Hazard, $4,447.43; for Las Vegas, $7,198.68; for Lewisburg, $8,017.37; for Berkley Springs, $6,485.23; and New Castle, $4,174.70. This bill authorizes $10,000 for a site at Susanville, and the Treasury Department estimates the maintenance of the public building would be $4,800 per annum. The rental is now $600.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What does the bill carry for Baxley, Ga.? I will say to the gentleman, to save his time, that it carries $5,000 for a site, and that is within the law, is it not, the postal receipts being over $6,000?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not question that it is within the law as passed in the last public building bill, but at this time I do not like the law.

Mr. BURNETT. And the gentleman voted for that bill, did he not?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I believe I voted with my friend at that time. I have listened very generally to my friend, and often voted with him. But I will say to him that—

While the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return.

Mr. BURNETT. That applies to the gentleman, I suppose, not to myself.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It might, of course, and will work as well one way as the other no doubt. However, we are occupying different pews at this time.

Mr. BURNETT. I see—you are.

Mr. ASHBROOK. At Baxley $5,000 is authorized for the site; estimated upkeep $4,200, the rental now $480. At Hazard $40,000 is estimated for a building, the site, I believe, having already been acquired; estimated upkeep $3,800, rental now $240. At Las Vegas $5,000 is authorized for a site, estimated upkeep $5,100, and the Government now pays no rental at this town.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me to state that a newspaper published at Hazard, Ky., was sent to me showing that they have over 1,000 voters in the town of Hazard to-day.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I received a copy of the newspaper referred to, which is not published at Hazard but at Lexington, but it may be that the conditions are similar to those mentioned by my friend from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE], that if you take in a radius of two or three miles from the town the number of people is larger.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman may.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I see that in the hearings on the Lewisburg post office the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] asked certain questions. Does the gentleman now recall being there?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I made no denial, although I do not remember. I stated if the gentleman said I was present at the hearings, I accepted his statement; but he said the hearings were held a year or so ago.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. All right.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not think I promised my friend from West Virginia that I would favor his bill, though. At Lewisburg $82,000 is authorized, estimated upkeep $6,800, rental now $540; at Berkeley Springs, $10,000 is authorized for a site, estimated upkeep $3,700, rental now $450; at Newcastle $25,000, estimated upkeep $3,800. The Government pays no rental at Newcastle.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand publications like Collier's Weekly and the Saturday Evening Post have denominated this a pork-barrel bill. Is that correct?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will leave it to the gentleman to draw his own conclusion as to the character of this bill, but believe the magazines have so designated it.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe that is correct, that various publications, including Collier's Weekly and the Saturday Evening Post, have denominated this a pork-barrel bill. Now, is it not true that the Postmaster General and various commissions which have investigated the cost of carrying these papers in the mails have stated that the net loss on the carriage of the Saturday Evening Post, for instance, is about $5,000,000 a year out of the Treasury? Would that be pork, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am not discussing the Saturday Evening Post or Collier's Weekly or second-class postal rates. The gentleman is free to form any opinion that he chooses on that question. I do not quite understand why we should issue bonds to provide public buildings for the villages mentioned.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question right there?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman think it would really be more in accord with good sense to knock out one or two battleships that we do not need and put up some buildings that we do need?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am in favor of erecting public buildings where there is absolute necessity for them, and the gentleman knows that I have been in favor during the past Congress of reporting out bills that would stand on their own legs.

In this bill there are 118 items for towns which had less than $10,000 postal receipts for the last fiscal year. Nine of these have less than 5,000 population, to wit, Attalla, Ala.; Eminence, Ky.; Barbourville, Ky.; our old friend, Hazard, Ky.; Owenton, Ky.; Huntingdon, Tenn.; Nephi, Utah; Green River, Wyo.; and Newcastle, Wyo. At three of these villages the Government now pays no rental.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman know, having been a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for several years, that that committee has never attached a great deal of importance to population, but that it has been controlled practically by the business done at the post office; in other words, the annual postal receipts?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true, but all of these towns mentioned have very small postal receipts, as the gentleman will find if he will examine the same. There are eight villages provided for by this kind committee where the postal receipts are less than $6,000 per annum, to wit: Albertville, Ala.; Central City, Ky.; Falmouth, Ky.; Perryville, Mo.; Mount Olive, N. C.; Bamberg, S. C.; Easley, S. C.; Manning, S. C.; Lafollette, Tenn.; West Point, Va.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, there is a customhouse at West Point.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Can the gentleman advise me of the amount of the customs receipts at that point?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can not, but there is a customs office there.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I accept the gentleman's statement as a fact. At three of these thriving towns no rent is paid by good Uncle Sam. Twenty-eight towns in this bill are provided either sites or buildings where the postal receipts for the past fiscal year were less than $7,000, to wit: Ozark, Ala.; Brinkley, Ark.; Monticello, Fla.; Perry, Fla.; Ashburn, Ga.; Baxley, Ga.; Blakely, Ga.; Commerce, Ga.; Jackson, Ga.; Pelham, Ga.; Thomaston, Ga.; Murray, Ky.; Pikeville, Ky.; Stanford, Ky.; Ellicott City, Md.; Okolona, Miss.; Pascagoula, Miss.; Unionville, Mo.; Milan, Mo.; Salem, Mo.; Clinton, N. C.; Williamston, N. C.; Waurika, Okla.; Conway, S. C.; Greer, S. C.; Rockwood, Tenn.; Lenoir, Tenn.; Henderson, Tex.; Berkeley Springs, W. Va.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman mean that buildings were provided for those places?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Either buildings or sites.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, the gentleman knows that under the law we are permitted to provide sites where places have receipts of $6,000 a year. I want to state that Monticello, Fla., has more than $6,000 receipts, and I think every one of the towns the gentleman has mentioned has more than $6,000 annual postal receipts.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have the statement of the Post Office Department which, I believe, is for the last fiscal year. If that is incorrect, it is an error on the part of the Post Office Department. I have used the figures furnished me. I believe the gentleman also has the figures before him.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman mean to say we have provided sites for places whose postal receipts are less than $6,000, the places that he is naming now?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am now naming towns where the postal receipts are $7,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Less than $7,000?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes. I am in that class now.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That may be true.

Mr. ASHBROOK. There also appears to be 28 fine, growing villages cared for in this bill where the postal receipts for the past fiscal year were under $8,000, to wit: Sylacauga, Ala.; Union Springs, Ala.; Sheffield, Ala.; sister Susanville, Cal., before mentioned; Monroe, Ga.; Sandersville, Ga.; Waynesboro, Ga.; Cairo, Ga.; Covington, Ga.; Cuthbert, Ga.; Decatur, Ga.; Winder, Ga.; Carrollton, Ill.; Marengo, Iowa; Pineville, Ky.; Laurel, Md.; Indianola, Miss.; Paris, Mo.; Salisbury, Mo.; Eldorado Springs, Mo.; Rich Hill, Mo.; Windsor, Mo.; Las Vegas, Nev.; Dillon, S. C.; Summerville, S. C.; Rogersville, Tenn.; Dickson, Tenn.; and Crockett, Tex.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. I believe the gentleman mentioned Pineville, Ky.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; I did.

Mr. POWERS. And he stated that the postal receipts were less than $8,000.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I did.

Mr. POWERS. I want to say that the postal receipts for Pineville in 1916 were over $9,000.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The receipts seem to be growing nicely.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The receipts for the fiscal year of 1916 were $9,144.68. The last quarter's receipts show that it will go beyond $10,000 this next fiscal year.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am quoting from figures furnished me by the Treasury Department.

Mr. BURNETT. And those are for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true, I believe.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman got his figures from the Treasury Department?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I did.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. These I am reading are from the Post Office Department, who know much better as to the receipts than the Treasury Department.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am willing that the gentleman should read from any figures that suit him best, but I assume the Post Office Department furnished the figures to the Treasury Department.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. Perhaps the gentleman will come to it later, but has he made any estimate of the gross amount included in this bill that, according to his opinion as a member of the committee, ought not to be included, so that we may compare the gross amount he thinks is unauthorized with the balance of the bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. There are an even 200 items where the postal receipts are less than $15,000.

Mr. BORLAND. How much do they aggregate in the total amount of $38,000,000?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have not figured that out.

Mr. BORLAND. My understanding is that there is less than $6,000,000 that could be subject to criticism. Is that true?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have not figured the amount; I can not say. Of course, that is a mere bagatelle.

I find 20 towns snugly tucked away in this bill with less than $9,000 postal receipts for the past fiscal year, to wit: Essex, Conn.; Rossville, Ga.; Hawkinsville, Ga.; Lewiston, Ill.; Hickman, Ky.; Russellville, Ky.; Morgan City, La.; De Riddle, La.; Clare, Mich.; Eaton Rapids, Mich.; Lexington, Miss.; Winona, Miss.; Bowling Green, Mo.; O'Neill, Nebr.; Ely, Nev.—who seems to belong to the old and well-known family of Get-There-Ely—Albemarle, N. C.; Louisburg, N. C.; Marvin, N. C.; Duncan, Okla.; Brownsville, Tenn.; McMinnville, Tenn.; San Benito, Tex.; and Lewisburg, W. Va.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I telephoned yesterday and have the figures of the postal receipts for Eaton Rapids; they are $9,641.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Then the receipts of that town also seem to be growing.

Seventeen more or less prominent towns having postal receipts under $10,000 here find safe refuge, to wit: Greenville, Ala.; Athens, Ala.; El Dorado, Ark.; Forest City, Ark.; Van Buren, Ark.; Highland, Ill.——

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was wondering how inaccurate the gentleman's information may be. I hold in my hand the record of the postal receipts at Forest City at $10,994.58 received.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I believe my figures are for the fiscal year ending June 30 last, but possibly it is for 1915.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am curious to know if all the gentleman's information is as inaccurate as that.

Mr. ASHBROOK. There seems to be a difference of $1,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Are not the gentleman's figures for the fiscal year 1915? Do not his figures relate to the fiscal year of 1915?

Mr. ASHBROOK. My understanding is that it is the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916; but I say it may be for 1915.

Mr. MANN. I suspect the gentleman is confusing the fiscal years. The original bill was reported July 7, 1916, and the figures for the fiscal year 1916 were not then available.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hold in my hand a report of the Auditor of the Post Office Department, and he fixes the receipts of Forest City at $10,999.58.

Mr. MANN. When this bill was first reported no one knew what the figures were for the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, yes; the first bill was reported July 16, and the fiscal year ended on June 30, 1916.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Did the gentleman have the figures at the time the bill was reported?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; not these figures. But during the hearings we took pains not only to get the report of the fiscal year 1915 but to get the report of the last preceding quarters, and before the bill was reported, in order to determine whether there was such a growth as would guarantee that the fiscal year 1916 would carry them beyond the limit. In these cases where we were satisfied with that, we allowed the item.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am aware of the custom of the committee of applying for the information, and I believe the committee does invariably make the request and consider the information.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman says that Van Buren, Ark., has less than $10,000 postal receipts?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I did.

Mr. WINGO. Where did the gentleman get those figures?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Those figures were furnished me by the Treasury Department. I understood they were for the last fiscal year, but it may be for 1915.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman know anything about the city of Van Buren?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not, but if the gentleman comes from there I know it must be a fine city.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman know anything about the street car system?

Mr. ASHBROOK. No.

Mr. WINGO. Or its smelters?

Mr. ASHBROOK. No; I never smelt 'em. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman know anything about it or have any idea of it?

Mr. ASHBROOK. No; but I would like to ask the gentleman what is the size of the city?

Mr. WINGO. There is no way to determine the present size by the last census, for the reason that it was incomplete. I could name personally more people living in one city in my district than that census gave as the population of the entire county.

Mr. ASHBROOK. There, then, must have been something wrong in the census returns.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Is it largely on account of the present condition of the Treasury that the gentleman objects to this bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman states my position correctly.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. If that is true, I would like to have the gentleman tell the House why it was that in the closing days of the last session he introduced and was responsible for a widows' pension bill being put through the House that carried with it more than $16,000,000 of claims that have already been adjudicated, and thousands still unadjudicated, probably carrying some six or eight million dollars more?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my colleague that I introduced that bill for the same reason that he introduced a bill for the Spanish War widows, and the only difference is that I got my bill through and he did not get his bill through. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say to the gentleman that I am not complaining, but that my colleague is complaining about the present conditions of the Treasury.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am very proud to be the author of the widows' pension bill.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Yes; but the gentleman's statements are not consistent. He is now very solicitous about the condition of the Treasury when this bill is up for consideration, while he was not when his bill was up for consideration.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I understand the gentleman has an item in this bill, and it is for a town where the population decreased in the last decade—Galion, Ohio.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I do not think that is true.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have made the statement, and if the gentleman thinks it is not true let him furnish the facts to convince the House that I have made a misstatement.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman state what are the postal receipts for Galion, Ohio?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have all of those figures, but I left them on my desk there, and I guess the gentleman has them now. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state, if the gentleman will permit me, for his information that the postal receipts at Galion, Ohio, for the last fiscal year were $26,587.67, and for the year before that they were $24,930.60, showing a steady growth.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Can the gentleman tell me the population in 1900 and the population in 1910?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The postal receipts have increased over $2,000 in a year.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Can the gentleman tell me the population of the town?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can not, because the committee has not acted upon the population, but according to the business done.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Very well.

Council Grove, Kans.; Norton, Kans.; Winnfield, La.; Charleston, Mo.; Lenoir, N. C.; Dunn, N. C.; Sanford, N. C.; Hartsville, S. C.; Lewisburg, Tenn.; Alvin, Tex.; Beckley, W. Va.; 82 towns with postal receipts for the past fiscal year ranging between $10,000 and $15,000 can be found in this bill, which, added to the 118 under $10,000 specifically mentioned, make even 200 of the 309 items in this bill with receipts under $15,000. Two hundred and fifty-four of the 309 towns and cities provided for in this bill had less than 5,000 population in 1910. Eleven of these towns for which authorization is here made now pay no rental.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me to ask that he put into the RECORD the list of the 118 towns that he says are under $10,000?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have already read them into the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to longer take up the time of the committee and have already used much more time than I had expected to use. I believe I have given good and sufficient reasons why at this time it is unwise to pass this bill. Those gentlemen who believe that bonds should be issued, or tax burdens increased on the people, in order that public buildings may be erected at small and insignificant towns will vote for this bill. Those who desire to protect the Federal Treasury from raids of this sort will vote against the bill. I believe the bill should not pass. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we have had notice served upon us that the Treasury is facing a deficit approximating $300,000,000 for the coming fiscal year, and gentlemen who have and shall have blithely, cheerfully, and in a great many cases enthusiastically voted for approximately all of the appropriations constituting the enormous total which will create that appalling deficit, now suddenly seek to qualify as guardians of the Public Treasury and arrogate to themselves the merit of superior virtue in opposition to a bill that does not carry a penny of appropriation, which will not increase by any appreciable sum the burdens of taxation or the deficit of the coming fiscal year, but which simply proposes to carry out in a very moderate and economic way a long and well-established policy of the Federal Government. I am willing to admit that there is much in the argument that gentlemen make that these public buildings are not absolutely necessary. I am willing to admit that it can be mathematically demonstrated beyond a question that it would be possible for the Government to house in some sort or kind of quarters all of its activities in all of the towns, big and little, provided for in this bill, for a less sum than a reasonable interest upon the investment that we propose, and the cost of upkeep. That same proposition holds true, in my opinion, on almost every building that the Government ever has built for these purposes, or will build, including this magnificent structure in a portion of which we have our sittings, and in which we take such great pride. I have no sort of doubt that with a much less sum than a reasonable or even a small interest charge upon $24,000,000 that have been invested in this magnificent Capitol, added to the annual cost of upkeep, we could make arrangements with private parties whereby in some sort of a shack the Legislature of this great Government, its Supreme Court, and its other activities might be otherwise provided for. I have no sort of doubt or question but that with a much less sum than a reasonable interest return upon the five millions of investment in that magnificent Library Building across the Plaza and the cost of its upkeep, we could make arrangements with private parties whereby some sort of a structure could be built and maintained for the housing of the library that we have gathered and are gathering. If this rule of three, this proportion of mathematical calculation as to the possible returns of governmental investments and the cost of public activities which is sought to be applied to this proposition of public buildings were applied to all of the activities of the Federal Government, then our appropriations instead of amounting to over a billion and a half a year could well be reduced.

If we did only those things that are absolutely necessary and essential in this country to maintain order and enforce the laws against crime we could reduce our appropriations at least by half, if not more, and we could completely wipe out the great deficit that is facing us. We are at peace with all the world and gentlemen claim that we are tremendously prosperous. Then why, in the name of high heaven, should we halt in carrying out in a proper and decent and very conservative way, as in the case of this bill, a policy upon which the Government embarked many years ago, which has been justified in all of the running of the years by practically everybody except a few gentlemen who apparently seek to make political capital out of an assumption of superior virtue and certain metropolitan journals that are not interested in any kind of governmental expenditures and activities unless they are for alleged public defense or unless the investment is made in or in the vicinity of the great cities of the country. I am one of those who believe that the Government makes no better investment in all the appropriations we make than these investments that house in decent, well-constructed buildings the useful public activities of the people throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Some of these buildings in these so-called small villages, which our friends from the large cities seem to regard so lightly, will represent when erected the only visible sign and evidence of the existence and the presence of the Federal Government in areas almost as large as some of the States of the Union. The flag will float from the summit of buildings which will be erected, if this bill becomes the law, some time in the distant future in my State, where there is not another visible sign or symbol of Federal activity within 100 miles. In my opinion an appropriation to decently house the activities of the Federal Government not only in the great cities of the land but in the smaller towns of the land and in every part of the land, is not only a wise investment of Federal money, but to provide in reason for such building and expenditure is a patriotic duty which we should perform. Gentlemen who are opposing this bill, and yet have items in it, most realize that they are playing a perfectly safe game. They can assume the virtue of opposition to a bill that some assail as a pork-barrel measure and yet be absolutely certain that the item or items in which they are interested will be provided for. I will go further than those gentlemen. I will vote for this bill, whether it contains the items in my district and State or not, and I will do it because I believe there are few expenditures which we make which are more meritorious than these to decently house the activities of the Federal Government in communities large and small. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Did the gentleman use all of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used all of his time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, the only practicable means of obtaining governmental appropriations to provide adequate postal facilities to meet imperative public needs is in an omnibus bill. There is no probable chance of affording relief through the enactment of an individual bill. Consequently if those denouncing the present bill as "pork" should have their way the result must be extremely prejudicial to public interests in many instances.

The Post Office Department is expected by the public to perform its vast and manifold duties with efficiency and economy. The department manifestly can not do this unless adequate facilities are provided by the Government.

In the city of Syracuse less than 14,000 square feet of floor space are provided for post-office work in the Federal building, while the actual amount required to perform the work satisfactorily is 30,000 square feet. Some additional space outside the Federal building has been provided at a rental of more than $10,000 per annum.

I have no doubt that in the pending bill there are many instances authorizing appropriations where the public needs are as urgent and imperative as in Syracuse.

It is apparent that so far as the public business is concerned we can not get anywhere by berating ourselves and indulging in acrimonious discussion about "pork." It seems to me that we might better devote our energies in the institution and carrying out of such legislative reforms as will remove for all time to come the cause of the existence of "pork" in bills authorizing appropriations of public funds and in bills appropriating the same. [Applause.]

The public may not generally know, but we well know that the only remedy is in amending the Federal Constitution, thereby conferring upon the President the right to use the pruning knife upon such bills. As long as the President is required to approve or reject a bill as a whole the cry of "pork" will justly continue.

It has been stated by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the Government will probably face a deficit of some $300,000,000 for the next fiscal year. In this statement is food for serious thought. It becomes at once apparent that Congress ought to devise and carry to completion some real legislative reforms which will result in material saving to the Government. The power to tax should not be exercised to impose unnecessary additional burdens upon those who have to pay the taxes.

Under the Constitution of the State of New York the governor, in the consideration of any bill presented to him containing several items of appropriation of money, has the right to object to one or more of such items while approving of the other portion of the bill, and the appropriation so objected to shall not take effect unless on reconsideration it shall be approved by two-thirds of the members elected to each house of the legislature of the State. The Federal Constitution ought to be amended along these lines giving to the President at least as much power. [Applause.]

Our forefathers, wise as they were in the framing of the Federal Constitution, could not anticipate everything, and probably least of all "pork." In view of present governmental financial conditions it seems to me that the time is most opportune for aggressive action. And I want to say, as far as I am concerned, that while I temporarily remain a Member of this House, I pledge myself to act with any of my colleagues, regardless of party affiliations, in the institution and carrying out of such legislative reforms as will eliminate "pork" in bills authorizing appropriations and in bills making appropriations of public funds.

It is probably not to be assumed that Congress will of its own initiative reform itself in this respect. And I trust that the time will come when some President, as the leader of a great political party, will advocate, recommend, and persistently urge such an amendment to the Federal Constitution which will result in the saving of millions upon millions of dollars annually to the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used all of his time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was impressed a good deal with what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] stated about the merit of each one of the items, but I wish to confine myself largely to the items contained in this bill for the projects in my district. What I may say, however, need not be confined to the particular items which I will mention, but I will say that I believe all the items in the State of Michigan are meritorious, they are economical, and they are needed, and they ought to be provided. Take Detroit, if you please. There is only a million and a quarter dollars provided for that city. This city is making wonderful strides in increase in population and manufactures, and they are absolutely without adequate facilities there for carrying on their postal business.

It is true in the other places they are fair and just, and I think the bill, so far as they are concerned, ought to be allowed.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say something about two items carried in this bill—one for a post-office building and site at Marshall, Mich., at an authorization not to exceed $75,000; the other for a site for a post-office building at Eaton Rapids, Mich., costing not to exceed $7,500.

It is sometimes said that the items carried in the public buildings bill are extraordinary and needless. The bill is sometimes characterized by harsh names, and the Members voting therefor held up to derision. I am not saying anything in particular about the other items in the bill. Let the Member who introduced his bill present his own case. I do not feign to give any Member a standing in presenting the merits of his project further than to say that the membership of this House is composed of men of the highest probity, integrity, and honor, for whom I have the highest respect, and I know you would not be here to-day if you were not such. I do not want to shield myself from any just criticism because of including these items for my district contained in the bill or for being a member of the Public Buildings Committee, to which I was assigned, or my action on such committee. That committee is composed of some of the leading Members of the House, who worked zealously and hard to present a good bill. I think I am only doing my duty in presenting these items. I think they are needed and necessary to properly carry on the Government's business in those cities. If you think likewise, then I ask you to favor them; if you do not, then vote against them. I am sure the items are favored in my district, as I have received no protest against them, but many letters in their favor. So I repeat that if those items can not stand on their own merits it would be a mistake to pass them, and they should be excluded.

I live in a district remarkable in many respects. It is naturally level, fertile, and at one time heavily timbered. It comprises five counties, each of them having an old, historic, well-known, and well-established college of high standing, save one, and that one has a State public school. All have magnificent and commodious buildings. Every city, town, and village supports a high or graded school, while the country schools are situated almost within sight of each other throughout the district. Well-improved farms line each side of the highways, most of the farms comprising from 40 to 160 acres. In the city of Kalamazoo is located the largest book paper mills in the Republic. It is the largest city. Battle Creek, with its health-giving sanitarium and food products known the world over, is the second city. Cities of lesser population dot the district from border to border. Michigan is a pioneer of the public-school system, and before the woodman's axe had felled the timber John C. Pierce, living at Marshall, where this building is to be erected, had planned for the State graded school. So that you are not asked to have this building erected in a wild, arid, or sparsely settled region, but in a prosperous, populous district where the people manufacture machinery, do extensive farming, build substantial structures, and patronize the schools and churches.

Without at this time taking up the question of pork, or the great American hog, I want to say something about the necessity of a post-office building at Marshall—Marshall is the county seat of Calhoun County. It is a city of over 5,000. At one time a bill passed the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan to make it the State capital. It is surrounded by a thickly settled agricultural community. It has no Federal building, but rents a store building in which to conduct the post-office business. This building was not originally constructed for a post office, but for mercantile purposes. It is not fireproof, has no vault, and, although repaired recently for the post office, it is only a make-shift, and a new building adapted to the needs of the post office should be constructed. Mr. Chairman, I wish to quote a letter dated May 22, 1916, written by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, as to this building:

WASHINGTON, May 22, 1916.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Under date of April 6, 1916, a report was submitted on H. R. 3109, which provides for the erection of a public building at Marshall, Mich.

The Congressman for this district, Hon. J. M. C. SMITH, has presented a letter from the Post Office Department which shows that the postal receipts for the calendar year 1911 were $43,368.47, and for the last calendar year were $62,763.35.

Under the classification which was adopted in June, 1915, this would entitle Marshall, Mich., to a stone-faced building.

From the information which Mr. SMITH has furnished it appears that a suitable site centrally and conveniently located can not be purchased for $6,000, but would cost in the neighborhood of $10,000.

In view of the foregoing and supplemental to the report of April 6 it is estimated that a one-story building, stone faced, of the size required, would cost $65,000, and that a suitable site can be acquired for $10,000 additional.

Respectfully, B. R. NEWTON, Acting Secretary.

This letter shows the receipts for the calendar year 1915 to be $62,763.35. I also wish to submit a letter from the Auditor for the Post Office Department, Mr. Kram, showing the cost of operating the post office at Marshall for the years 1911 to 1915, inclusive:

WASHINGTON April 17, 1916.

Hon. J. M. C. SMITH,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: Receipt is acknowledged, by reference from the First Assistant Postmaster General, of your letter of the 8th instant, requesting to be advised as to the cost of operating the post office at Marshall, Mich., during the fiscal years from 1911 to 1915, inclusive. You will find stated below the total in expenditures at the post office in question during each of the fiscal years referred to:

Fiscal year—
1911	$20,291.70
1912	21,072.70
1913	21,316.30
1914	21,908.65
1915	22,340.25

Sincerely, yours,

CHAS. A. KRAM,
Auditor for the Post Office Department.

This letter shows that the operating cost for 1915 was $22,340.25, leaving the net receipts of the Marshall post office for the year 1915 at $40,423.10, or more than 10 per cent on $400,000. Here is a post office that pays out. The bill calls for only $65,000 for a building and not to exceed $10,000 for a site. If the people of Marshall pay more than $40,000 over current expenses to the post office, why are they not entitled to a suitable building, costing not to exceed $65,000, in which to conduct their business? The people who pay this money into the Post Office Department ought to get this benefit out of the surplus. This bill was regularly heard by the committee, the estimate and type of building suggested and proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury and favorably reported.

I want to state as a sound business proposition that if a person were to permanently engage in business in a city or town requiring a building, I think he would be short-sighted if he did not procure a building of his own if he could afford it. But some will say it is cheaper to rent. The same thing could be said about renting a home, but we all want to own one. If it will pay another to construct a building and rent it to the Government for a post office, it is difficult to see why it would not pay the Government, which estimates its interest at 3 per cent per annum, to build one of its own. I am not talking about an architectural monument, but a substantial building, say, of the type of the Ford Building here on Pennsylvania Avenue and of proportionate cost. The authorizations for post-office buildings are not to exceed a certain amount. That they are not always kept within the authorization is not the fault of a bill or of Congress. The Supervising Architect gives the best building he can for the money and the type, and the cost is usually determined before the bill is passed.

I believe we should have a uniform standard type of structure for buildings to be erected in the same zone, where the temperature and conditions are the same.

Taking for an example all of southern Michigan, the ground is usually level with a gravelly subsoil, of equal temperature, of like winds and weather. And it would seem that a typical building at a reasonable price could be used in each one of the county seats and smaller cities, which would be uniform, serviceable, and satisfactory.

However, I am no architect. That should be determined by the Supervising Architect's Office. The authorizations made for these buildings are not mandatory. It is not compulsory to use the full appropriation, and the authorization is more of a limitation within which the cost of construction ranges than it is that the full amount should be used.

In the case of the site at Eaton Rapids, Mich., not to exceed $7,500 is authorized by this bill. The city of Eaton Rapids has a population of about 3,000; has paved streets, electric lights, sewer, large woolen mills, public library, fine school buildings, two banks, artesian wells, two railroads, and a splendid community within and surrounding it. It has free mail delivery, which was granted after the receipts had increased to the $10,000 mark. It has no Federal building. The building where the post office is situated is grossly inadequate, with a lobby of around 10 feet square.

Now, a splendid location on Main Street could be secured. Eaton Rapids is growing and this opportunity may not always be available.

If it would further acquaint you with Eaton Rapids I might add that this was the home at one time of Austin Blair, the great war governor of Michigan, who first commissioned Gens. Sherman, Custer, and Alger. The Montgomeries, one a former Commissioner of Patents, and the other now judge of the Customs Court in this city, were born there. Senator CUMMINS as a young man resided there. Hon. Ray Woodworth, a Member of the Sixty-third Congress, was born there. And many others who have achieved distinction and success resided or began in Eaton Rapids. For a number of years I myself was in business there and am familiar with the conditions and needs of the city.

To purchase a site on one of the principal corners of the city approximately this amount might be sufficient.

I for one am opposed to placing these Government buildings on side or back streets wherever a suitable location can be procured upon the main or business thoroughfare. By placing the post office on the main street it is more accessible and of greater utility to the business of the city. From its flag pole the Stars and Stripes can be seen by every one going and coming. The building itself would cost no more and its service on Main Street would certainly enhance its value and utility.

We are often told that the construction of these buildings is extravagant. If they are extravagant now, they always have been in the past, and possibly to an extent of limiting the amount therefor according to the population by standardizing the buildings or otherwise curtailing the cost.

Abraham Lincoln, back in 1832 in a speech at Salem, Ill., stated that he was in favor of a protective tariff, a national bank, and internal improvements. If this was wholesome legislation at that time it is to-day. No one need hesitate about following the sainted Lincoln.

Some think this bill ought not to pass on account of the present condition of our national finances. As to that, I beg to say that the spirit of economy has not manfested itself very strongly in the recent administration of our affairs. The World's Almanac, 1917, estimates our national wealth at $187,739,071,000. We have been appropriating money for many public improvements.

Some think we might get along without $40,000,000 paid for rivers and harbors improvement. Others think that $50,000,000 for flood control and a like sum for ship purchase too high. I, myself, am inclined to think that $11,000,000 for an armor plant at this time, when the largest steel plant in the world agrees to manufacture armor plate for any price named by the Government, might be saved for a time. Possibly $25,000,000 for the purchase of San Domingo, and a like sum for a bonus to Nicaragua could wait a little; $9,000,000 taken bodily out of the Treasury for rural credits, $20,000,000 for the Muscle Shoals might also wait. Marching the Army to Mexico and marching it back again, at a cost of $100,000,000 or more, being no nearer the border than we were when we started, might have a tinge of extravagance. It shows, however, that we could do it. No one knows what our Mexican policy is. I think we have as much reason and right to go there as we had to go into Cuba or the Philippines, and it is observable now that we possibly made a mistake in the beginning which has been costly to us. We have now conceded to Mexico her own terms. Possibly we will be making a loan to her before long. But in the end I am of the opinion that it will be necessary to go there to restore order, and if we do the Stars and Stripes ought not to be taken down until she has liquidated for the destruction of life and property of American citizens and other countries for which we may or may not be legally liable.

The passage of this bill will not be heralded throughout the country as a grand achievement. Possibly some not very complimentary statements will be made about those voting for it. But the question should be whether or not these items are necessary for the welfare or proper conduct of the business of our Postal Department, and possibly whether or not we should pursue a tenure of tenantry or ownership. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regret very much that I can not support this bill at this time. I am not fundamentally opposed to public buildings, but there is a time for everything, and I do not believe the time is here now to undertake to make appropriations or to even make authorizations for the large amount of appropriations to be made later on. Especially do I believe this argument should appeal to my Democratic friends when the Ways and Means Committee day and night is racking its brains for the purpose of finding some way, some manner, somehow, to raise the money to meet the enormous amount of deficit.

One of the latest propositions I have observed floating through the press is to impose a tax of a certain per cent of over and above 8 per cent net income on corporations, copartnerships, and so forth, which is a direct tax. Another proposition is to issue bonds. Another proposition is to issue certificates of indebtedness. For these reasons, staring me in the face, as they do, it strikes me the time is inopportune and inappropriate to undertake to fasten upon the Government of the United States a liability that must be met some time in the near future. It is true these authorizations do not make appropriations, but they constitute a moral obligation on the part of the Government to later on assume and pay them off by means of an appropriation.

Now, the Architect's Office has come in for considerable criticism on the floor of this House. I am not here to defend it at all. It needs no defense. The Architect's Office in the last year has completed practically a building for every four working days in the year; and during that period of time it turned into the Treasury of the United States nearly $2,000,000 as money saved, economies effected by the Architect's Office over the appropriations made for the purchase of the site and for the erection and construction of the building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that they ought to have been doing that for many years past?

Mr. COX. They probably ought to have done so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have only five minutes of time, and I have not the time to take up all these little items, probably under the five-minute rule, I shall avail myself of time to call the attention of the committee to some of them, but if I do I shall not raise the question where the appropriation is in excess of $30,000, so far as the appropriation for the building is concerned, and if I refer to section 5 I shall not raise the question where the postal receipts are in excess of $10,000 a year.

Now, it does strike me that it is bad policy, gentlemen, and I am at a loss to understand upon what ground any man can defend himself in voting to build a post office at every little crossroad country town in the United States—little third-class post offices. Where does the economy come in? Where does the business of the proposition come in?

Here is one item as to Alfredville, Ala. It is a third-class office. Population, 1910, 1,544; receipts, 1915, $5,663.04; receipts, 1916, $5,978; present rental, $500; site authorized, $5,000; site contracted for, $2,500; saving, $2,500; pending bill, $2,500; department estimate, $30,000; decrease by bill, $5,000. Three per cent upon the appropriation of $25,000 is $750. You have got to add a janitor. That will come, and you can not keep that away from here at all. That will be from $50 to $70 a month, conservatively $600 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD three tabulations prepared by the Architect's Office, showing the number of buildings completed in 1916 and 1917, and the number of buildings now under contract and not completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend certain data in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

[Mr. REILLY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield two and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Now, Mr. Chairman, may I have the two minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I know that one subjects himself to criticism as being inconsistent when there is an item in the bill coming from his district, placed there by a suggestion of the Member, and then he refuses to support the bill. The item in this bill from my district was first introduced in 1910. A site was purchased. The receipts of the post office of that town are $26,000 a year. There are 18 mails every day. There are 9 rural routes. The town is on 3 trunk lines. It has 3 banks, with a capital of $1,308,000. It ought to have a building. I introduced a measure. It is put in an omnibus bill that has in it, according to my colleague from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], 200 items that are not within the Postmaster General's rules.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Did not the gentleman introduce four bills?

Mr. FESS. The gentleman introduced the same bills that had been introduced before. And that again shows, Mr. Chairman, the viciousness of this legislation. A man says that you ought not to introduce a bill unless you stand for it. I have 18 towns in my district that ought to have public buildings if this bill becomes the policy of the Government, and everybody knows that that is perfectly impracticable. The suggestion of my friend is just as far afield as the viciousness of this sort of legislation is apparent.

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against this measure, because omnibus legislation is vicious and ought to be omitted from this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the city of Urbana, Ohio, is located in a very rich agricultural section of the country. As I have just stated, it has three trunk lines passing through it—one interurban line. It has a population of about 9,000, and its postal receipts are nearly $26,000 per year. It is a growing city which at the time of the last census of 1910 had a population equal to 57 per cent of the towns already provided with Federal buildings prior to 1916.

In 1910 a site was authorized and later purchased for $13,000. Bills were introduced in the Sixty-second and Sixty-third Congresses. I reintroduced a bill in the Sixty-fourth Congress which was made a part of the present omnibus bill.

This item is worthy. It falls within the requirements of the recommendations of the Postmaster General. My people want it, and expect me to urge it; which I would like to do. But, Mr. Chairman, I have examined the measure before us. Note what I am asked to indorse in order to have the people of Urbana provided with what they merit. Take the State of the chairman of the committee. There are seven Florida towns included in this bill. Urbana has a population equal to the total of the two highest of the Florida towns, and seven times that of the lowest. Its population is six times that of one town, four times that of any one of three others, and greater than the sum of five out of the seven. If I compare my own district with the provisions of this bill for Florida, I have one town which is one and one-half times the size of the greatest of the seven Florida towns, and 19 towns greater than the smallest of the Florida towns. I have 14 greater than any one of the two smallest in Florida. None of the towns referred to in my district are provided for.

The same is true when compared with Georgia, which has 19 items in this bill. Its greatest town is not half as large as Urbana. This town has seven times the population of two of the Georgia towns, four times the population of seven of the Georgia towns, three times the population of 11 of the Georgia towns, and twice the population of 19 of the Georgia towns.

Take my district in comparison with Georgia in the bill. It has 3 towns with population equal to that of the highest of 19 in Georgia, 4 equal to that of any 1 of 13, 7 equal to that of any 1 of 3, 18 greater than either 1 of 2, and 24 greater than that of the lowest.

The same is true when compared with North Carolina, which has 16 items. Urbana has a greater population than that of the highest of the 16 and greater than the next 2 highest put together. Her population is three times that of any 1 of 12 of the 16 in North Carolina and four times that of any 1 of 6, and five times that of any 1 of 4 and seven times that of the lowest of the 16. My district has 2 other towns, each with a population greater than that of any 1 of 14 of the 16 in North Carolina provided for in this bill. It has 16 towns with a population greater than the lowest of the 16 North Carolina towns.

The same comparison could be made with Kentucky and Missouri, as well as other States, with similar results.

If the comparison is made by receipts of the office, the same conclusions are reached. In 130 items picked out in this bill about 30 would meet the recommendation of the Postmaster General. I note that at least 1 item falls under $5,000 annual receipts, 8 under $6,000, 27 under $7,000, 46 under $8,000, 56 under $9,000, 65 under $10,000, 100 under $15,000.

When these items are compared in receipts with those of Urbana, we find that Urbana has five times those of 1 item in the bill, four times those of any 1 of eight items in the bill, three times those of any 1 of 46, twice those of any 1 of 65 items in the bill, and one and one-half times those of any 1 of 100 items in the bill.

If we take it by district, the same conclusions must be drawn. That is, if the principle of this bill is to be the policy of the Government; then, instead of recognizing 1 town in the seventh Ohio district for Federal attention in the public-buildings act we should have at least 18 towns in this bill. Aside from the county seats, we have the following:

Post office.	Population.	Gross receipts.	Rent, light, and fuel.	Other expenditures—compensation, clerk hire, etc.	Class.	Salary.

[1] Have public buildings.

The status of county seats in my district, to say nothing about the before-mentioned villages herein contained, is stated by the Treasury Department as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 27, 1916.

Hon. S. D. FESS,
House of Representatives, United States.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The following information in regard to public buildings in your district is furnished in response to your request of the 20th instant:

Lebanon, Ohio: There is no Federal building at this place and no bill pending at the present time for the construction of one. A bill, H. R. 15353, was introduced in the Sixty-second Congress by Mr. Denver, and reported on by this department January 27, 1912, but no legislation resulted.

Wilmington, Ohio: The act of March 4, 1913, authorized the acquisition of a site and construction of a building at this place, at a limit of cost of $75,000. While land offered for this site has been examined and reported upon, no selection of the site has yet been made.

Xenia, Ohio: A site was authorized at this place on May 30, 1908, and the construction of a building on June 25, 1910. In accordance with this legislation a building was constructed and occupied in 1914.

Springfield, Ohio: A site and building at this place were authorized March 3, 1885, and additional land and extension to the building authorized June 30, 1906. The extension was completed and occupied in 1909.

London, Ohio: There is no Federal building at this place, and no bill has been introduced providing for one.

Washington Court House, Ohio: The act of March 4, 1913, authorized a site and building at this place at a limit of cost of $80,000. A site has been acquired for $15,000, and it is probable that the building will be placed under construction during the coming calendar year.

Urbana, Ohio: The act of June 25, 1910, authorized the acquisition of a site at this place at a limit of cost of $15,000. A site was acquired for $13,000. No bill is now pending for the construction of a building, but bills H. R. 13914 and 12239 were introduced in the Sixty-second and Sixty-third Congresses, respectively.

Bellefontaine, Ohio: The act of May 30, 1908, authorized a site at this place, and act of June 25, 1910, the construction of a building. In accordance with this legislation a building has been constructed, and was occupied in 1914.

Marysville, Ohio: There is no Federal building at this place, and no bill has been introduced providing for one.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. NEWTON,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, it is but natural for a community to desire a public building erected and maintained at Federal expense. It is an adornment for any town of which the people would be proud. But such an institution entails expense, to be met by public taxation. The upkeep of such a building would be costly, whether the mail was great or small. The Congressman, naturally desirous of pleasing his people, must not forget that the burdens of the Government are what he makes them. To-day, when the Government is using a fine-toothed comb to find revenue to meet the expenses of the Government, it is a poor time to waste the public funds as here proposed.

Already the Government is so far behind the authorizations that our people have become impatient over the delay. In the early part of 1913 an act was passed authorizing the purchase of a site at Washington Court House, a building at a limit of cost of $80,000. The site was purchased, but the building has not yet been advertised. My request for information from the office brought the following instruction:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 26, 1916.

Hon. SIMEON D. FESS,
House of Representatives of the United States.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Referring to the telephone message from your secretary on February 24 relative to the Federal building to be erected at Washington Court House, Ohio, no definite statement can be made at this time as to when the work will be advertised. In accordance with the present program, bids for the construction of this building should be invited during the third quarter of the calendar year 1917.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. NEWTON,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to see a building erected in Urbana, a modern city of over 8,000 people, with 7 schools, including a college, 18 daily mails, 9 rural routes, 12 churches, 20 fraternal societies, the domicile of Company D of the Ohio National Guard, and 3 banks, with $1,308,000 deposits, a city which meets the requirements of the recommendations of the Postmaster General, and equal to any one of the 922, or 62 per cent of the 1,479 post-office buildings already erected by the Government. But when I am compelled to vote for a bill which contains over 200 items excluded, not only by the recommendations of the department, but by the sheerest common sense, it is too high a price to pay. While the people of Urbana will be disappointed, their common sense will justify my course.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SAUNDERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, were received.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

[Mr. KENT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I desire to say that I agree with what the gentleman from Montana says, that it is folly and useless to attempt to rent all public buildings. That is nonsensical.

Now, this bill should be treated just the same as any other bill that comes into this House. Every bill, I take it, has some good points in it, and every bill has, I presume, some bad points in it. Now, it should be read as other bills are read. The good features of the bill should be retained and the bad features of the bill should be stricken out.

Now, that is my position with respect to this bill. I feel that it is unjust and improper to attack the bill in its entirety because a few places are undeserving of having public buildings. The bill should be treated in the same manner that we treat other legislation. I have a provision in this bill for $70,000 for a site and building in the city of Painesville, in my district. There is no public building in my district now. The city of Painesville has a population of something like 5,000 people, with post-office receipts of $43,354.37, over four times the amount required by the rule laid down in this bill.

Now, I want to say to these gentlemen that the committee has not bound me in this matter. If these gentlemen who have provisions in this bill for post-office buildings for their districts and who are opposing this bill are not kind enough to move to strike those provisions out if they should not be in the bill, I want to notify them that I shall be in the House when the bill is read, and I shall move to strike them out; and they will either go on record to vote against the provisions for their districts or they will go on record as being in favor of them. [Applause.]

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. Certainly.

Mr. REILLY. Then, the gentleman believes a post office should be a bribe for a Congressman to vote?

Mr. EMERSON. I do not believe anything of the kind. I feel that there should be post offices in the places where they should be, where the places are large enough, and where the receipts warrant it, and where it would be for the benefit of the public to have such buildings. I regret that there is no way of getting a public building in a place that deserves it except by a bill of this character.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes.

Mr. KENT. Supposing a man has an item in this bill for a place that does deserve a post office, and suppose he conscientiously objects to the form it takes and the district-by-district manner in which it is distributed?

Mr. EMERSON. That is not the position I take. I would give a man a chance to defend it. I do not say that I would vote against it, but I would give him a chance to vote against that particular item in the bill, or show why it should remain in the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Did not the gentleman say he thought this bill should be considered like any other bill, and that items that are not deserving should be stricken out?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes; I did.

Mr. PLATT. And yet you are going to ask them to strike them out?

Mr. EMERSON. No. I will ask them to defend it as I do mine. The city of Painesville, Ohio, by all that is just and right deserves a public building. We could easily withdraw the National Guard from the Mexican border, where it is not needed, and save enough money to take care of this appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield back his time?

Mr. EMERSON. I thought I had used up my time.

The CHAIRMAN. No. The gentleman has used four minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I submit the following as a part of my remarks:

The following facts and figures abundantly prove Painesville's right to the $70,000 proposed appropriation for a new Federal building, and also speak most elegantly on the growth of our city. In the face of this evidence further comment is unnecessary:

The postal receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, were $43,354.37.

The postal receipts for the quarter ending March 31, 1916, were $16,087.37, the largest amount received in any one quarter in the whole history of the office.

The month of May this year shows postal receipts of $3,948.90, a gain of about 40 per cent over a year ago, and a little better gain over two years ago.

The quarter ending June 30 this year shows a gain of $1,437.91 over the corresponding time last year.

The postal receipts of Port Clinton and Eaton are, respectively, somewhere between $11,000 and $13,000, while the receipts of Painesville office for the one quarter ending March 31, 1916, were $16,087.37.

Bowling Green, Ohio, has an elegant Federal building, with postal receipts of less than one-half of the revenue of Painesville.

The gain in revenue, one year over the preceding one, at the Painesville post office represents a greater amount of money than the entire annual revenue of many places in the United States where Federal buildings have been provided.

Nothing indicates the growth of a place more certainly than an increase in sale of 2-cent stamps at the post office of any place. There were sold at the Painesville post office this year in May 76,300 2-cent stamps, in June 59,400, which sales break all previous records for May and June.

In money-order business the Painesville office outranks many places four times the size of this city. There were 50,378 transactions in the money-order department of the local office for the year ending June 30, 1916.

The deposits in the postal savings bank are, per capita, four times the average of the whole country.

The revenue of the local office for the year ending June 30, 1916, met approximately all the local expenses, and there was a balance of $15,756.99 turned in to the Post Office Department.

POSTAL RECEIPTS PER ANNUM OF THE PAINESVILLE OFFICE FOR 10 YEARS.

In each case the revenue is computed for the fiscal year, which is from July 1 to June 30, inclusive:

1906–7	$27,465.25
1907–8	28,148.93
1908–9	29,912.84
1909–10	31,589.99
1910–11	33,049.20
1911–12	33,730.11
1912–13	36,946.42
1913–14	38,012.46
1914–15	41,743.85
1915–16	43,354.37

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know the merits of all the items in this bill, but I believe that this country can well afford to put up public buildings in the various cities to represent the majesty of the people of the United States. [Applause.]

I have an item in this bill for a new marine hospital at San Francisco. The buildings that stand there now were put up in 1875, with the understanding that they were to last 10 years, and then new substantial buildings would be erected. It is now 42 years since those buildings were put up. They are frame buildings, mere shells. The men who are in them are invalids, sick men, and if ever we have a fire in the marine hospital in San Francisco there is no doubt but that the casualty list will be exceedingly great.

Not long ago the grass in the vicinity of the marine hospital began to burn. The officers in charge of the hospital were fearful then that the buildings would take fire. They had to call out the soldiers from the Presidio to put out the fire, so as to save these buildings. Within the last three years we have had four fires in similar buildings in the Presidio of San Francisco, occupied by commissioned and noncommissioned officers and their families. In the four fires eight people lost their lives. Do we want to allow any condition of that kind to continue in this country? Do we want to have public buildings of that character representing the dignity and the power of the people of the United States? I think not. I believe there are many provisions in this bill that are equally meritorious with this one regarding a new marine hospital in San Francisco. I for one am not afraid to vote for this bill, and I shall do so with pleasure. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman yield back?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yielded back two minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, Texas has several items in this bill. There are very few towns in Texas with which I am not reasonably acquainted; and having examined those towns to my entire satisfaction, I take it for granted that they bear the same relation to public necessity that the other buildings in this bill bear to the rest of the country. If they do, there is no pork and no graft in this bill.

We are told that we do not need to build these post offices because we could rent and make out in some sort of other buildings. Why, certainly; and by the same reasoning we do not need to build any splendid schoolhouses, because we could make out in a shack, and sit on a three-legged stool, like I did when I was a boy; but we have outgrown that system, and we stand to-day for progress. All this talk about voting for something we do not need does not appeal to me in this case, because I am sure if we do not absolutely need them now in most of the towns the time is not far distant when we will need them. And I remember that we nearly all voted practically to turn the whole Treasury over to the building of battleships and magnificent floating palaces; and, my God, I know we did not need them, and I pray to God that the time will never come when we shall need them. [Applause.] However, they may serve a good purpose yet. It is possible that we can lariat them to the bank of the ocean and have some of those vast military fandangoes and dances on the decks, where magnificent men with military bearing and epaulets on their shoulders and with coats cut away can waltz to music with women whose clothes are at half-mast. [Laughter.] And so it is possible that we can use them in that way; but so far as the service for which they are built is concerned, I see no immediate use for them, and anticipate that at least during the 18 years of their supposed efficiency we will never need them. Yet we spend hundreds of millions of dollars in anticipation of possible needs. So I am willing to risk a thousand dollars here and five thousand dollars there in the great interior of our country, in some town where the fellow who baptizes the earth with the briny dew that drops from the brow of industry in our fields can lift up his eyes and once in a while behold the flag that waves over a Government agency and a Government institution. [Applause.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] is recognized for 18 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago, on December 7, I placed in the RECORD some suggestions and criticisms in regard to the pending public-building bill. It has been charged that I did not deliver the speech on the floor. I secured all the time to which I was entitled—an hour and a quarter—and I endeavored during that time to answer all questions that were presented. I am not going to add to the information based on official data presented in that speech, but before we proceed to the consideration of this bill I wish to offer one or two further suggestions, which ought to be thought out carefully by this membership.

Mr. GORDON rose.

Mr. FREAR. I can not yield now. I have just started. The gentleman from Ohio may be with me, but I want to get this matter clearly before the House in the limited time allotted to me.

I call your attention to the fact that the two bills now awaiting immediate consideration before this House are the $38,000,000 public-building bill and the $38,000,000 river and harbor bill, which are both awaiting recognition from the Chair. A sum total of $76,000,000 is asked for by these two bills at this time, and in the river and harbor bill only $9,000,000 cash is asked out of $47,000,000 authorizations, so the two bills really represent a total of $114,000,000, with a $300,000,000 deficit facing us in the Treasury, and direct taxation to be imposed to meet these extravagant bills.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to reply briefly to one or two things that have been suggested by committee members during the discussion. The chairman of the committee [Mr. CLARK of Florida], who has treated me with unusual courtesy, made the statement yesterday that this is a nonsectional bill, and that the comments made in my speech on the subject were unfortunate in that respect. I did not intend it to be understood as sectional because of any mere matter of locality. I wish to say that there is not a proposition in the river and harbor bill, North or South, or in this public-building bill, that is a worthy project that ought not to be given to the South as well as to the North. There is no distinction in locality. Extravagant projects in Wisconsin are just as bad as they are in Florida or in any other State. I will say this, too, that no matter where the project is located, it ought to be considered entirely upon its merits. But in my other speech I showed conclusively that 19 projects in this bill for one State in the South were in towns all having less than 4,000 people, and that brings right to my mind the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who said that he had, I think, 28 projects in his own district worthy of immediate consideration, but these were ignored by the committee.

Mr. FESS. Eighteen.

Mr. FREAR. Eighteen projects in his own district that are on all fours with those in this bill—larger and more worthy, doubtless, than a majority of the 19 villages cared for in one southern State which is of average size. I gave many such comparisons to indicate methods of distribution by the committee. The relative importance of projects is not considered here. It is the division of 300 projects among the membership of this House that makes it invulnerable. Do you not believe it? Is there any question about it? I leave it to members of the committee like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] and others who have here said that it is the fact. I do not need to emphasize it. No amendment can strike out one item from the bill because of that fact. What is the character of reports that are made before this committee in order to show value of projects? Who have appeared at the hearings? Does the committee ask for the opinions of experts? Do its members ask for advice from the Post Office Department or from the Treasury Department, or do these departments furnish reports as to the value of projects? No; the Public Buildings Committee declares to the Treasury Department, "We do not want to know your opinion about these things. You are asked not to give your judgment as to the necessity for a public building." That has been stated here by the chairman himself. These hearings as to public necessity are made up of statements by Congressmen alone, without exception men of high character, it is conceded, but that is the way the hearings are held which determine the character of items in the bill and their necessity. Congressmen want them in every case. The hearings show this to be a fact; and so, based on these hearings, in spite of protests of extravagance and waste of public funds, 300 buildings are distributed around the country in every State and in a large majority of the districts. Buildings and sites are mathematically and geographically distributed. That is the vice of omnibus bills. The pressure is hard in every community for public buildings. I do not believe, primarily, it is the fault of Members themselves. I say this in all fairness to the chairman of the committee, that his bill is as good, as he says, and as bad, as past bills—as good and bad as the bill of 1913. The chairman said two-thirds of the responsibility for that 1913 bill belonged to the party on this side of the aisle. There is no question about that, and I do not criticize individuals or political parties in this matter. They are nonpartisan bills, and that makes them so dangerous. The present bill contains hundreds of items. The Treasury Department of the present administration has said that 200 or more of these items are unprofitable for this country. How many of them? Two hundred; and I believe it can be established that far more than that number are unprofitable and wasteful, judging from the letters of the department—wasteful at any time, and particularly at this time.

Now, the chairman made another statement to which I will refer, but I am not going to reply to personalities. I have been criticized severely in the past on the floor of the House by Members for opposing wasteful omnibus bills, but it will not make the slightest difference with my attitude on this bill or on any other bill which I think is wrong and ought to be defeated. It has been suggested that it is unfortunate I am on the floor of the House. But I have recently been given the greatest indorsement ever given from that district. This indorsement, Mr. Chairman, I did not consider personal. I assumed it was in justification of the course that has led me in part to aid in defeating two river and harbor bills which thereby saved to the Government $42,000,000. These were the 1914 and 1915 river and harbor bills, and I trust we will witness the defeat of this public-building bill, even though it has got some good items in it. And so with the $38,000,000 river and harbor bill that is waiting to follow, and which, with this bill, has a tortuous course to travel before it ever becomes a law.

Mr. Chairman, it is an unpleasant duty, and I conceive it to be a duty, to attack many wasteful items when there are good items in the bill. It is unfortunate that the good are linked up with the bad, but it has been declared time and time again by Members in debate that not a single item can be stricken from the bill. They stand or fall together. Why? There are 300 Members here, and the assertion is made that if an item is dropped it loses the vote of that individual Member. That is the general understanding, and the effect is to hold the bill intact, like a river and harbor bill; you can not cut out any items, the only way is to defeat the bill.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] yesterday made some statements that I do not expect to reply to in a personal way, but to discuss impersonally. He said, "Will the gentleman from Wisconsin strike from the list the Wisconsin items, will he be consistent?" That has been the trouble with all the discussion in the House. Will you be consistent? I care not for the charge of inconsistency. A man trying a lawsuit tries to win if he believes it is right to win, even though yesterday he thought it was wrong. You are not trying men's consistency by the merits of this bill. Consistency is only a jewel at rare times. It is an argument that will not deter those who realize the weakness of it. My own course I trust has been consistent in opposition to waste, but the measure and not the man is alone to be enacted into law or defeated.

Why should the gentleman from Pennsylvania ask if I am going to strike out the items for Wisconsin? I do not know whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania is here to-day or not, but I would like to make a suggestion to him. If the chairman of the River and Harbor Committee is here, he will bear testimony that I moved to strike out three-quarters of the upper Mississippi river proposition, involving $2,000,000, in the pending bill; and upon that motion the committee struck out $800,000. It runs about 125 miles past my district—the only project that touches the district—but it is waste, and I know it. I will put in the proof when the bill is reached. It is not a question of individual interest that should govern, if the item is wasteful. Why should the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with his two-million-dollar item for Philadelphia, in the river and harbor bill, and his $750,000 in this bill, question what my action is going to be? What will his action be on bad items in both bills and on the bills themselves? If he believes the Wisconsin items should go out, he ought to move to strike them out. It is his duty as much as mine. I am not a prosecuting officer, but I am trying to give information as best I can as to the items in the bill. When the items are reached, let the record show for itself.

Mr. Chairman, the question has arisen about the accuracy of the Treasury Department's figures. To my mind the question whether $10,000 in annual receipts should govern, as proposed by the committee, is immaterial; it is not material whether the annual receipts are $15,000 or $20,000, although I believe that the suggestion of the distinguished Speaker of this House is a good one. We ought to fix some permanent limit and make it a good large limit in receipts and then make it work automatically without bringing these omnibus bills into the House for discussion.

What possible justification can there be for having one locality where perhaps only one manufactory buys all of the postage stamps and thereby raises the receipts above $10,000—why should that be justification for building a public building there? Receipts have no more relation to the necessity of putting up public buildings than has the collections of a street-car conductor to the cost of the car that he is running.

What is the ordinary business test to be applied by any municipality? Is it not a question of present expense and what will be the future and natural expense of administration? I will later discuss this matter of annual receipts when the bill comes up for amendments, but I have not the time to do so now.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; I yield to the chairman.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Would not the gentleman accept the postal receipts at a post office as a basis as to the needs of a public building?

Mr. FREAR. Not on any such basis as some items in this bill offer where the present rental, for illustration, is $500 and the future cost of maintenance will reach approximately ten times that amount, or $5,000 annually.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman believe that the Government is established for the purpose of being remunerative from its public buildings?

Mr. FREAR. No; not necessarily.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman believe that schools and churches should be destroyed because they do not pay in dollars and cents?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, no. I will go a little further than that, and I will say that I will give the benefit to the Government in certain cases, but I would not pay $10 for a useless, extravagant building where we are paying $1 now. The justification for a building must be based upon actual necessity for its use and reasonableness of the additional expense.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman think that in determining the question of the inequality, the upkeep, and the rental, etc., there ought to be taken into consideration the character of the quarters that the Government is now occupying, the rented quarters, as to their making for efficiency, and their sanitary condition and all that sort of thing?

Mr. FREAR. I will say this, that the chairman of the committee himself signed the report which says that in order to determine what should be taken into consideration——

Mr. BARKLEY rose.

Mr. FREAR. I can not yield further at this moment to the gentleman. I wish to reply to the gentleman from Florida. He declared in his report—and it is the right policy—that there should always be taken into consideration the interest, the cost of the janitor service, the cost of maintenance, in comparison with present rents, when considering new buildings, and I think that is the proper system.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. As one of the elements?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; but not necessarily the controlling element.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not the controlling element?

Mr. FREAR. I said that. Then, let us take the case of the gentleman who to-day is the Postmaster General of the United States. He was formerly a Member of this House. In that same report he says that there should be $15,000 receipts annually instead of $10,000, as proposed in the majority report of the Public Buildings Commission, $1,000 annual rent, and that there should be at least a population of 5,000 people. That is his basis of determination of necessity. Then the Treasury Department placed the receipts at $25,000 or more as the proper basis. But here we have in some cases in this bill receipts of not $6,000 annually. What is the object of putting in a legal limit here attempting to govern the next Congress? You can not govern the next Congress. You do not recognize any such law in this Congress, because you have put in such items here as you choose. Who is governed by any law passed by a preceding Congress? No one; nor have they attempted to be, because these propositions are found before us in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the waste in this bill reaches to something like 200 items, according to the Treasury estimates. The chairman gave two illustrations yesterday; and I speak of this briefly because they are characteristic of many of the items in the bill. For instance, he said that in the case of Lewisburg, W. Va., there was a population of 803 people, as I recollect, and postal receipts of $8,017, according to the 1915 report, which was available at the time the bill was introduced. That office was paying $540 a year rent.

The estimated expense of a new building will be $6,800 a year, at the amount named. This is twelve times as much as the rental there now, and that represents the additional cost of erecting a building at Lewisburg. Oh, you say, but there are other governmental activities.

Mr. Chairman, one member of the Public Buildings Committee introduced 11 building bills this session, and in 8 of those bills for his district which he proposed there were other governmental activities. Other offices were to be accommodated. It is easy to put governmental activities of various kinds at these places in order to qualify in insignificant villages, but you can form an idea of the unimportance of such arguments when I say that in Kentucky they ask for extra courthouses, while they have 12 Federal courthouses in that State to-day, twice as many as they have in Illinois. Think of the absurdity of this situation. Chicago, it is said, has a larger amount in the bill than many of the small towns put together. I do not know whether the necessity and cost is right or not; I do not know whether it is a proper item. No question has been raised. I think there may be some question, however, about some of these larger items as to their necessity at this time, but there are receipts in Chicago of over $19,000,000 every year, enough to meet 600 of these other items which boast of annual receipts of $10,000—more than enough to counterbalance 600 such items, or double the entire number contained in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Chicago has postal receipts of $27,500,000 a year.

Mr. FREAR. Then, think how much greater the disparity. That represents eight or nine hundred of these struggling village items which have postal receipts of $10,000 a year each. So that you see the relative importance is not determined by this question of $10,000 revenue. Why should you build a $30,000 post office simply because there is an annual revenue of $10,000 obtained by the sale of postage stamps? You put a postage stamp on a letter to carry it to England or all around the world or to some point in this country. The revenue is not used to build public buildings, and when a public building is going to cost to maintain some five or six thousand dollars, as is shown to be the case at Lewisburg, W. Va., why do you want to increase it to that amount from $500 or $600 a year, which is now being paid for rent? That is what I have attempted to set forth in this discussion as a fundamental proposition. As I said, there is no question of sectionalism, but I have shown that in one State with 19 items for 12 districts every one of these items is in a town containing less than 4,000 inhabitants—items placed in small towns in order to divide up the bill geographically and secure the support of a majority of the membership of the House for the bill. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said, the omnibus bill is the vice permeating the whole proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I am the oldest member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, in point of service. I was placed there first by the distinguished ex-Speaker of this House, my personal friend, Mr. CANNON. I have served through Democratic and Republican administrations. I believe that I can say with truth, that no matter whether this committee has been composed in its membership of a majority of Democrats or of Republicans, it has been an absolutely impartial committee. We have tried to do right and to do fairly. We have not recognized the argument that gentlemen have made here frequently, that only the great cities were entitled to recognition from this Government in their post-office buildings or for the housing of other governmental activities. We believe that the people in the country, who pay the majority of the taxes of the Nation, ought sometimes to have a look-in on what the Government is doing. We do not believe that merely because brick and mortar and people have been concentrated in some particular center, that therefore the people of all the other sections of the country have no right to recognition by their Government. I have served under various chairmen of this committee. It was my privilege, as the acting chairman of the committee four years ago, when the chairman of the committee, Mr. SHEPPARD, of Texas, was made Senator, to have charge of the bill that was adopted at that time. I remember that the same kind of arguments were made at that time as have been made to-day by gentlemen who are members of this committee, but who to-day have taken very different positions from those they maintained at that time.

I remember when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] had an opportunity to vote for a motion for instruction to the conference committee, offered by Mr. HARDWICK, of Georgia, in which the Senate put on this provision:

> No contract authorized by any section of this act for the erection of a building to be used exclusively as a post office, or for the purchase of sites for such buildings, shall be entered into nor shall public money be expended for such purposes until the receipts of such post office for which any such building or site is intended shall amount to more than $10,000 per annum.

On that motion, Mr. Chairman, a yea-and-nay vote was demanded, and among the distinguished gentlemen—consisting of 190 for to 86 against the adoption of that amendment—I find the names of ASHBROOK and BARNHART among those who led the opposition. [Applause.] And yet, my friends, wonderfully consistent, now come up four years later—it was a Republican administration then and it seems that the gentlemen at that time did not care how much might be expended, I will not say for the purpose of embarrassing a Republican administration, but at any rate they did not want that kind of an amendment put on to hold us down to items for buildings and sites where the receipts did not exceed $10,000.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will yield for a question.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if the conditions of the Treasury, the general conditions, were very much different four years ago from what they are now. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURNETT. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, that is true [applause on the Republican side], comparatively; but still, Mr. Chairman, we are to-day a richer Nation by perhaps one hundredfold, or at least fiftyfold, than we were at that time. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Our resources have increased and the revenues of the Government have proportionately increased. Democrats ought to be the last men to change their position by reason of a change in the condition of the Treasury [applause], because, Mr. Chairman, under the four years of Democratic administration the bow of prosperity has hung over this country from the rock-ribbed coast of Maine to the golden shores of California and from where the aurora borealis spans the Alaskan coast to the orange groves of Florida. [Applause.] And I believe that the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Ohio are the only two gentlemen under the Stars and Stripes who do not realize the increased prosperity of our country. But, Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman again been consistent? I am not criticizing him for passing under his leadership the bill for an increased pension to the widows of Union soldiers. Nor did his colleague from Ohio [Mr. KEY] criticize him by the question he asked him, but only pointed out his inconsistency. I have more pensioners of Union soldiers and more widows of Union soldiers in my district than any five districts in the State of Alabama, and I do not chide the gentleman for that. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman believed it was in his political interest to get the votes of the people in those splendid districts of the North he was willing then to increase the burden upon the Treasury from twelve to fifteen and perhaps twenty million dollars without ever blinking an eye at the increase. Oh, the consistency of the gentleman!

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would like to ask my friend if he was not in favor of that pension bill?

Mr. BURNETT. Absolutely, and in favor of this bill, too; and hence I am not inconsistent. [Applause.] We are not a pauperized Nation, and I am sorry to hear a Democrat here admit that we are. [Applause.] Oh, shame upon any man who in four brief years has changed his position when he said then that no matter how small a town was or how short its receipts were it ought then to have received an appropriation for a public building and yet who now, under the administration of his party, in effect says we are too poor to let the people in the rural districts of this country receive a slight evidence of the great prosperity of a great and grand Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if the condition of the Treasury, so far as the revenue receipts are concerned, is not in a better condition than it ever was at any time during the Republican rule?

Mr. BURNETT. Absolutely; far better. And, Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who stood against the amendment of the Senate to an increase of more than $100,000,000 for battleships in days of profound peace, when there is less reason for our fearing war than there has ever been, and if the gentleman and other gentlemen had been as consistent as I have been, there would not have been even the trouble in regard to Treasury receipts and Treasury deficit.

Mr. SIMS. Emphasizing what the gentleman says, is it not a fact that all the deficit and all the arrears in payment of bills is due to the fact of the instrumentalities of destruction instead of production?

Mr. BURNETT. Absolutely; and I have——

Mr. SIMS. And these Republicans are the very men who howled louder than anybody?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be discourteous to any gentleman, but I want to say just a word or two about the great pork-barrel statesman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], who has been posing for years, at least I have not heard of his doing anything else, as the great pork-barrel reformer.

Mr. Chairman, first answering one or two statements of the gentleman from Indiana, the gentleman says this is a fair bill, but he is opposed to it because he is afraid another body will destroy the efforts of this body to reform the administration of these authorizations. The gentleman is a good parliamentarian and yet he certainly forgets that we will have a say on the action of that other body, and that, following the usual course, the distinguished chairman of this committee and myself, as Democratic members of the conference committee, and the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], as the minority member, will have something to say about that, and that this House will finally pass on the action of that other body. It is a strange kind of argument that the gentleman from Indiana uses when he says that he is opposed to this bill on account of the present condition by which the architect's office is four years behind and puts a building where it ought not to be in his town, and yet the gentleman admits that if this bill is defeated that very condition will continue, and that this bill itself remedies that very condition.

That is a strange kind of inconsistency in the gentleman. Although, Mr. Chairman, I have been here for 18 years I have secured but two buildings for the district which I have the honor to represent, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] in a brief service of 8 or 10 years has, I believe, secured three. And the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], from whose eyes the scales have so suddenly fallen, who has undergone this wonderful conversion, aye, almost resurrection, in the course of a few years, has himself been the beneficiary of two buildings and two sites. But now it is "pork barrel." And the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. With pleasure, but just briefly.

Mr. FESS. Was the gentleman who is now on his feet the one to whom the gentleman referred, the gentleman from Ohio? Who was the one?

Mr. BURNETT. I referred to the gentleman leading this fight against the bill, a member of this committee [Mr. ASHBROOK]. I do not know how much the gentleman, Mr. FESS, has in the bill. If he had a good case and was active for his people he has gotten something. If he has not, then it is his own fault and not the fault of the committee. And all I can say is—and I do not say that, because I love the gentleman, and he knows it——

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. For a question.

Mr. FESS. For just one statement. This present gentleman has not received anything in his district, and if this bill is the policy he ought to receive 18.

Mr. BURNETT. Has the gentleman even asked for one for his people?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. He has? Has the gentleman come before the committee and asked the committee to give him one?

Mr. FESS. It was not necessary.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman has a proposition in the bill?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], the great opponent of the "pork barrel," the great reformer, is scarcely accurate in any statement he makes, though not intentionally inaccurate. I believed when the gentleman first began his fanfaronade against pork it was a matter of pure cussedness. I was with the gentleman and 40 or 50 other gentlemen over in Hawaii two years ago, and the close association that I enjoyed with the gentleman led me to believe that it was not pure cussedness, but that the gentleman goes off without information and is willing to take the unverified statements of the Architect's Office in the Treasury Department, or of the American Institute of Architects, in order to get his basis for an attack on this bill without an investigation.

Three years ago the gentleman made an attack on a proposition for Dam 12 on the Coosa River, Ala. He read a letter from some one who purported to be from Montgomery, whom my colleague [Mr. DENT] representing that district never could find, and whom I never could find. He read it and inserted it in the RECORD. In this letter it was stated that as a result of backwater from that dam there was a grave malarial condition produced, that bacteria was present, and that the people were suffering disease and death from it.

A number of suits were brought involving that very proposition, and one of the most distinguished physicians in the world, Dr. Gorgas, visited the place, and examined it and analyzed the water. The board of physicians of that county visited the place and made careful investigations, and every one of them decided that there was no such thing. Case after case was tried by juries of the neighbors of the people bringing them, and in each case they decided there was not a word of truth in the statement in regard to the prevalence of bacteria to an extent to produce sickness or death.

Now, I am not charging that my good friend has made those charges on his own initiative and on his own responsibility, but he goes off halfcocked, on half-baked statements of people who are interested. I ask him now, when he attacks projects that are in the river and harbor bill or other measures, that he inform himself and find out the source of his information.

What are we going to do about it?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Pass it.

Mr. BURNETT. There is no doubt about that. Somebody says the Senate is not going to pass it. Mr. Chairman, I thank God that as a result of an initiative in this administration within the last few years the American Senators have been made responsible to the American people—those who elect them. And if it is true that there are Senators who are willing to fritter away millions on great armies and on immense battleships, while their constituents never see the eagle upon an American "twenty," or even the buffalo on an American nickel, so far as Government expenditures are concerned, and if those Senators are willing to take that responsibility, gentlemen, let them do it. It is not your responsibility and it is not mine. I never yet, Mr. Chairman, "crooked the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift might follow fawning."

Men say it will receive a veto. That is not your responsibility, Mr. Chairman, nor mine. What do we owe to the boy and the girl and the man and the woman back in your district? What do we owe to our own consciences? It is a question for every man to decide upon his oath. And the man who shirks his responsibility because he is afraid of the President, afraid of the Postmaster General, afraid of the Secretary of the Treasury, or afraid of the Senate is a coward and unworthy the position of representative of brave American people. [Applause.]

Now, they talk about the upkeep. The distinguished gentleman, my colleague on the committee, Mr. ASHBROOK, referred to what the upkeep of these buildings would be, according to statements of the Treasury Department. Mr. Chairman, in all common sense, ought there to be any more expense in the upkeep of a $25,000 building in Hazard, Ky., or in some little place in my district or yours, than there is in the upkeep of a good rented post office now at the same place?

Why is it necessary to employ janitors and charwomen? And yet for the purpose of trying to deter Members of Congress from doing their duty that kind of stuff is undertaken to be rammed down the throats of men who are responsible to the people who sent them here. Every man knows that that is merely for the purpose of creating sentiment against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair notifies the gentleman at his request that he has used 20 minutes.

Mr. MURRAY. Give it to them, little giant! [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the appropriations in this bill are not all or the majority part of it. As long as I have been serving on this committee, through Democratic and Republican administrations, we have been trying to get the Supervising Architect's Office to adopt standards for buildings so far as it is possible to do so. We have not been able to do it. I believe that if this bill is adopted, by the expeditiousness that will be gained and the economy that will be secured there will be a worthy achievement.

But that is not all. We provide for the reorganization of the Supervising Architect's Office and the inauguration of a commission. Suppose we do pay a good architect $10,000 or $15,000 a year. Is not that cheaper than to pay these high-priced architects 6 per cent commission on every two or three million dollar building for which they prepare the plans and specifications? A $3,000,000 building at 6 per cent makes an architect's commission of $180,000. I believe it will take $10,000 a year to get an absolutely competent architect; but if it did, would it not be better than to pay an outside architect $180,000 every time a $3,000,000 building, a building of monumental size, is constructed? The big architects, many of them, throughout the country are fighting this bill because they know it will deprive them of the graft they are now getting from the Government, sitting like vultures, eager to prey upon the American Treasury, and crying "Pork barrel!" and getting the great metropolitan newspapers of the country to denounce this bill as "pork." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time to the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back the remainder of his time.

Mr. BURNETT. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. BURNETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], in answer to the challenge of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], says it is not his duty to move to strike out the items from his own State. Mr. Chairman, if it is his duty to criticize them, is it his duty to sit stolidly here and see them go in without attempting to strike them out?

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. Does not the gentleman think he is anticipating the situation?

Mr. BURNETT. Oh, the gentleman himself anticipated it in trying to answer the unanswerable argument of my friend from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE] when he said it is not his duty to strike them out, but our duty to leave them out, or the chairman's duty to move to strike them out if the items are wrong. Then the gentleman can not sit here under his oath and refuse to make the motion, whether he comes from Wisconsin or Alabama.

Mr. Chairman, there is no sectionalism in me. I came on in the dark days of the Civil War. I thought at one time that gentlemen away up in the cold regions of the North had hoofs and horns. [Laughter.] But when I met gentlemen from that section all over the country, and especially since it has been my honor and my privilege to associate with them here, I have learned that on great questions among gentlemen of honor there is no North and no South, there is no East and no West.

I hear some small men here raising that cry. It reminds me of Mose Smith, a boy who used to go to the Methodist camp meetings in Alabama. I am an orthodox Methodist, Mr. Chairman—orthodox on the doctrine of "falling from grace." I not only believe in the doctrine, but I practice the faith. Mose Smith was one of the bad boys that used to attend our camp meetings. One night, when the altar services grew warm, he got one of those black racer snakes that we have down in Alabama and threw it over the altar, created consternation, and broke up the meeting. The next day he was captured and put into the chain gang for 12 months for disturbing religious worship, a punishment which he deserved, and a year later, when he had been released from the chain gang, he came to the meeting again, a much wiser and better boy. Among us Methodists we think the presiding elder is the "big gun," and we put him up to preach on Sunday. The presiding elder began his sermon with these words as his text, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness." Mose Smith thought that had some reference to the serpent that had gotten him into prison 12 months before, and he could not stand it any longer. He jumped up and threw the hymn book at the preacher and said, "Parson, stop that right now. I don't want to hear another word about that darned old snake story. I am willing to let bygones be bygones." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, when I hear men raising a sectional cry on any of these questions, I am reminded of Mose Smith—"I don't want to hear any more about that darned old snake story. I am willing to let bygones be bygones." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to give effect to and execute the provisions of existing legislation authorizing the acquisition of land for sites or the enlargement thereof, and the erection, enlargement, extension, remodeling, or repair of public buildings in the several cities hereinafter enumerated, the limit of cost heretofore fixed by Congress therefor be, and the same is hereby, increased, respectively, as follows, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the completion of each of said buildings within its respective limit of cost, including site.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether under the phraseology of the paragraph that has just been read the Secretary of the Treasury would have authority to purchase a site, for which an appropriation has already been authorized in the act of three years ago, to the extent of the additional appropriation herein carried?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not exactly understand the gentleman's question. Was the site authorized in the bill of 1913?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Now, with the additional authorization here, would the Secretary of the Treasury have the authority to use the entire amount for the site only?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is the amount increased in this item?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is indefinite. It is provided for in one of the items following here.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Which is the item?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am referring particularly to the United States post office, west side, Milwaukee, $100,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There is no question about that. This is an increase of the limit of cost heretofore paid. I understand the gentleman's question now. This says:

That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to give effect to and execute the provisions of existing legislation authorizing the acquisition of land for sites or the enlargement thereof, and the erection, enlargement, extension, remodeling, or repair of public buildings in the several cities hereinafter enumerated, the limit of cost heretofore fixed by Congress therefor be, and the same is hereby, increased, respectively, as follows.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman stops there, but let him read on—and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the completion of each of said buildings within its respective limit of cost, including site.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not that mean that the aggregate expenditure for such a building must be within the total amount appropriated for at that place?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, no; not at all. This is the language that has always been used in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was fearful that that latter clause would limit the prior phraseology, so that the full amount could not be expended for site alone.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; the full amount can be expended for site. There is no question about that.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Bath, Me., $10,000.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the bill as introduced called for $30,000, and that $10,000 was allowed by the committee. I note that the population in 1900 was 10,477, and that 10 years afterwards the population was 9,396, a loss of over 1,000 people.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What place is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. JAMES. Bath, Me. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he knows the amount that was originally appropriated?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not quite understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what was the amount originally granted for the post office and site at Bath, Me.?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The act of May 30, 1908, authorized the extension of the building, with a limit of cost of $35,000; the act of June 25, 1910, increased that limit to $55,000. In awarding a contract for the extension of the building it was found necessary to omit work in connection with the approaches which were originally intended, and also some other items in order to bring the amount within the balance estimated. It is estimated that the increase of the limit of $10,000 would be sufficient to make the approach work along the lines originally contemplated. That is the report of the committee.

Mr. JAMES. Making it $35,000 altogether?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; $65,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Chicago, Ill., $4,250,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The story of Chicago's growth and progress is more marvelous than can be told by man. I have seen its population grow from 150,000 to 2,500,000. When we put up a building for a post office in 1896 it had 121,000 square feet of floor space. It soon proved to be inadequate. We erected a new building in 1906, with 246,000 feet of floor space, which was inadequate from the day we entered it. By remodeling the building in several ways we were enabled by the use of the basement, to get 423,000 square feet. The revenues of the post office when we entered that building were $12,000,000 a year. For the calendar year closed December 31, 1916, the revenues were $27,500,000. To-day the needs of the postal service in Chicago require 1,000,000 square feet of floor space. Ten years from to-day, I have no doubt, if the present rate of growth continues, we will need 1,500,000 square feet of floor space. The city continues to grow with such marvelous rapidity that no man can to-day prophesy what space will be adequate for the postal service of the future.

It is because of the experience of the past and because of the present needs and also the needs of the days to come that we require so large an amount of money as we provide in this item to add to the appropriation which we already have available for the purchase of a site for a new building in which to conduct the postal business of Chicago. To-day there are 7,300 men employed in the Chicago post office. They are growing in number every year to meet the needs of the increased population and the increased business of this great office.

Fifty-eight per cent of all the mail arriving in the city of Chicago comes within less than 80 rods of the site which is proposed to be purchased for the new building. It may be said that we are asking for a lot of money, but the site upon which we have the present building cost $1,000,000, and if the Government of the United States wishes to sell that site to-day, it can be sold for $12,000,000. We can not meet Chicago's growing needs by even the appropriation which we are making for the purchase of a site to-day. The sooner the Government of the United States begins the erection of a new building in which to conduct this great business of Chicago's postal service the sooner we will be able to conduct the business with the dispatch with which it ought to be conducted in order that the rest of the country may be properly served by the expeditious movement of the mails through Chicago.

Chicago is the clearing house for the movement of the mails from the East, from the West, from the North, and the South into every section of the Union. There is not a city anywhere within the confines of the Union that is not as much interested in having adequate facilities for the Postal Service in Chicago as is Chicago itself. To-day the people of Chicago out of their private purse are spending more than $100,000,000 every year in the construction of 65 miles of buildings to house the ever-increasing population of that great city.

There are 1,121 mail trains arriving and departing every 24 hours over the 39 trunk-line railroads entering Chicago, representing more than 150,000 of 250,000 miles of iron track, reaching every section of the Union.

Chicago has its hands upon the traffic of the Nation and notes every pulse beat of the business of the continent. Chicago is the great center, the commercial heart throb of the American Continent, whence more than 4,000 passenger trains arrive and depart every day. Seven hundred million people ride on the trains in the United States every year, and 1 out of every 7 must pass through Chicago in order to reach his destination. So that when we get the $4,250,000 appropriation which this bill proposes and the site for the post office is purchased with it and the $1,750,000 now available we will still be obliged to come to Congress for money to erect the building; and you need not be surprised if when we come we shall be compelled to ask for not five millions, not six millions, but fifteen million dollars with which to construct a building which will be adequate for the business of the Postal Service in that great city. It is not alone the postal business of Chicago which we seek to facilitate by this appropriation, but it is the postal business of the Union as well. We of Chicago realize that this appropriation is not being made on the recommendation of any Member of the House or of the 10 men who represent Chicago here; it is being made because of the needs of the growing Postal Service of the country, for Chicago is so situated geographically that it has become the clearing house for the Postal Service, reaching every section of the Nation. Chicago comes to you through her Representatives, then, to bespeak early and favorable action not only on this appropriation for the purchase of a site but a further appropriation of money necessary to erect a building in which to conduct the business of the country which goes through the post office of this imperial city of the Central West.

Now is the time to prepare for the future. Land values are increasing every day; available sites are few. The new building should be located to the best advantage, having the future in mind. Economy of operation is more important than all else, and it is with this in view that we urge present action to the end that the only available site may not pass beyond the possibility of purchase. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Narragansett Pier, R. I., $10,000.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The amount asked for at Narragansett Pier, R. I., was $10,000, of which $5,000 was allowed. The population of this town in 1890 was 1,408, and in 1900 it was 1,523, and 1,250 in 1910. I would like to ask the gentleman the original amount appropriated for Narragansett Pier?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman wants to know the original amount authorized?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Sixty-nine thousand dollars.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman if any hearings were held on the request of an increase of the amount by $5,000?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think there were no hearings other than the reports of the Treasury Department, which I will give the gentleman, if he desires to hear them.

Mr. JAMES. I just want to know the original amount.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at York, Pa., $25,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 4, page 4, for the purpose of offering an amendment. My attention was distracted at the time that the Clerk read that portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to return to line 4, page 4. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, following line 4, insert the following:
"United States post office at Waterloo, N. Y., $9,000."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I will state that the original amount authorized for this place was $55,000. There were some expenditures on the part of the Supervising Architect's Office for advertising, and so forth. The amount available now is $47,700. They have advertised several times for bids, and the bids were $54,750 and $52,000, and along there. The Supervising Architect's Office states that it is absolutely necessary to have $9,000 more before they can get a bid within which they can construct this building. The matter has been pending for a long time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman respecting the item in lines 9 and 10 for the post office at York, Pa. There is an increase provided here of $25,000. It has been my good fortune on more than one occasion to visit the magnificent building in that city, which was constructed in commemoration of the fact that the Continental Congress back in 1778 happened to hold a session there. The building must have cost several hundred thousand dollars, as I estimate it, and it seemed to be entirely complete and finished. What is it that calls for the additional appropriation? It is a new building, completed only within the last few years. It is very ornate in the interior, finished with marble and bronze. I can not conceive of a more lavishly ornamented and furnished building than the one at York, Pa., and it is hard for me to conceive why there should be any additional appropriation called for.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I will state that the Treasury Department says, in response to an inquiry as to the necessity for the increase, that the original design of the building contemplated the use of statuary. The statues were not included in the general contract, but the sum of $15,000 was set aside for the purpose. Afterwards there was found necessity for the construction of a wall in connection with the approaches, and that exhausted the amount reserved for statuary. The building is now completed and equipped and there are no funds available for the statuary, which would add greatly to the appearance of the structure. It is estimated that the increase in the bill, $25,000, will be sufficient to provide for the statuary in keeping with the design of the building. This being a historical building, it was originally contemplated that this statuary should be placed upon it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the information furnished by the gentleman gives me what I desired to know. I could not conceive how the building could be otherwise than finished, except for some further ornamentation.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office and Subtreasury at Boston, Mass., $250,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting between lines 15 and 16, on page 4, the following:
"United States post office and courthouse at Aberdeen, Miss., limit of cost, $20,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is quite a mooted question whether there is need of Subtreasuries throughout the United States except those at New York, Chicago, and San Francisco. The matter has been seriously considered by the Committee on Appropriations of abolishing the other Subtreasuries. It has been contended that the Federal Reserve banks would ultimately and in the near future take over the work of the Subtreasuries. The House declined, when this question was under consideration this session, to discontinue the use of these Subtreasuries; but I wish to inquire what is the need, in view of the unsettled condition of the policy of the Government, to provide for the Subtreasury at Boston as an adjunct to the post office?

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin the Subtreasury occupies a very small portion of the post office in the city of Boston. They are both in the same building, but the Subtreasury occupies only part of the second floor in the post office. The greater part of this appropriation is to go for repairs on the post office itself. The courts are in the post-office building, the United States district attorney's offices are in the building, so that all of this appropriation is to be used almost exclusively to make repairs in the post office itself.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the money is not to be utilized for Subtreasury purposes, I have no objection to the item. If it is going to be used for such purpose and applied to the Subtreasury part, why, there could be good argument raised against it. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment of the gentleman to strike out the last word. I assume the condition in Boston in postal matters is similar to the condition now in most of the big centers of business population in the United States. The postal business of those centers is growing very rapidly on account of two factors. One is the parcel post and the other is the postal savings bank. Additional quarters have to be provided in all city post offices for postal savings banks. But, more than that, a great deal of additional space is made necessary for the parcel post. I do not know what the plan adopted in Boston is or what the plan adopted in Chicago or other big centers, but not very long ago we had to meet that condition in my city of Kansas City, and it was decided, after a personal visit from the Secretary of the Treasury and Assistant Secretary Newton, that the only solution in the future for this tremendous growth of postal business was to separate, so far as possible, the parcel-post business and the blue-tag mail and second-class mail from the first-class mail and provide a system in the big cities of a terminal post office. Now, when we reach the Kansas City item you will notice that that is purely the terminal post office. The uptown post office is built on high-priced ground, which now can not be enlarged to meet the growing postal needs of the city, and will be entirely devoted to the courts, and the down-town post office, with all the Federal activities located there—the Immigration Service, and the railway valuation, and the grain inspection, and the pure food and drugs act, and the Department of Justice, and so on—all of the mail will be collected and distributed at the terminal post office, which adjoins the Union Terminal. That will not be transported uptown and back again, as it has been in the past. That is the only possible way in which provision can be made for an extension of this business. Now, I take it that the expansion in Boston is not due to any Subtreasury they have there, and I would not be surprised if it were not true they are going to use all of this space for legitimate postal needs and, in addition, to the probable needs of the activities of the Government housed elsewhere in the city of Boston. When we reach the item of the terminal post office I want to state to the committee what I think will be the future plan of the Government in regard to providing for the expansion of mail facilities in the great mail centers of the country.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Decatur, Ill., $50,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 14 after the figures "$50,000," insert:
"United States post office at Iowa City, Iowa, $100,000."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is an item for Iowa City, Iowa, one of the largest growing cities of Iowa, and the first capital of Iowa, a place where one of the great universities of this country is located. Now, this item is not one for which I have asked. It is one that the post-office inspectors themselves have recommended. Now, gentlemen, talk about consistency and about being fair; I am not afraid to defend the things you are doing in this bill, but you do not do the things that you ought to do, you are not consistent. I am not going to take up very much of the time of this great committee, but I am going to read to you a letter written to-day from the Treasury Department in regard to this item.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. GORDON. What was the population of this town at the last census?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will tell the gentleman all about that before I get through.

Mr. GORDON. Has the gentleman presented this matter to the committee?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I did and I will let the committee explain why the item is not in if they have any explanation.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 17, 1917.

Hon. HARRY E. HULL,
United States House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Referring to your personal call in regard to the proposed enlargement of the Federal building at Iowa City, Iowa, you are advised that the department is in receipt of a communication from the Postmaster General, under date of August 26, 1916, containing the following information:

"In view of the fact that the workroom contains only 1,500 square feet of floor space, while 3,400 square feet are needed at the present time, and approximately 4,500 square feet will be required 10 years hence, it is recommended that the necessary steps be taken looking to the extension of the building so that not less than 4,500 square feet of floor space will be available in the workroom."

The department is also advised that the rural carriers are located in the basement of the building, without proper supervision, and much time is wasted in carrying the mail there from the workroom floor. The parcel-post mail, it is understood, is also handled in the basement without adequate facilities for protection. These conditions are not only unsatisfactory, but the mailing division is cramped for room and the conditions appear to be constantly growing worse because of the increase in business. The postal receipts for the fiscal year 1905 were $41,006.40, for the fiscal year 1915 were $81,936.73, and for the fiscal year 1916 were $83,496.13.

The report of this department to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, under date of July 15, 1916, on bill H. R. 16581, estimated that an extension covering 5,500 square feet ground area would be required, and that the cost of same would be $80,000, including the necessary alterations and repairs to the present building. As the lot is not of sufficient area to accommodate the required extension, it is thought necessary to acquire more land adjoining the site, which it is estimated will require $20,000 additional, making a total of $100,000 for the purchase of additional land and the construction of the extension.

Respectfully,
B. R. NEWTON,
Assistant Secretary.

That is the report of the Treasury Department. The population of Iowa City has nearly doubled since 1905. It is over 12,000 to-day.

Mr. GORDON. What was it by the census in 1910?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It was 10,007 in 1910.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to oppose an amendment of this kind, but the bill was introduced very late. There is a building at Iowa City now. I have no doubt it is inadequate; but there never has been any hearing upon this proposition, and there never has been any report from the department on it. For that reason I shall certainly have to oppose this amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Was it my fault that there was not any hearing? Did not I ask for one?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know whose fault it was. The subcommittee has had it in charge and held the hearings. All I know is that there was not any hearing on this; but the gentleman did have a hearing upon a bill which was included in this bill and taken care of, but we could not, of course, put this item in the bill without knowing anything more about it than we do, and I shall therefore have to opposite it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. May I ask a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Have you held a hearing upon any more evidence than you have right there in the letter of the Post Office Department?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know. We might want more evidence than that; yes. We have differed very materially with the department on some of these propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I think it is evident that the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury are against this bill, or are certainly opposed to many items in it. Now, both of these officials of the administration, in the letter read in the hearing of the committee here, have practically indorsed this proposition, so that it meets with the approval of those in high authority who are criticizing most of the items in this bill.

This is one of the most congested post offices to which the attention of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been called, and I exonerate the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] from any failure to do his duty. It was not his fault that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had no opportunity to hear his case, for he was persistent, he was anxious, and through no fault of his did the committee fail to have his case presented; and I want to say it is just as meritorious and deserving of the support of this House as the other items contained in this bill, and I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Always.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this excluded from the bill because it had the indorsement of both the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General? [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. No. Their indorsement came here under to-day's date, and I am always anxious and willing to vote for any recommendation for an appropriation the Secretary of the Treasury or the Postmaster General or anybody else will recommend. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Was not the real reason why this was not included because it happened that this gentleman had two meritorious projects in his district and he was given only one by the committee?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not any argument against his amendment.

Mr. TILSON. That is so; and I am in favor of it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to ask the Chairman if it is a fact that the reason why this district is not given this post office is because the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] already has a project in this bill?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There is another project in this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is it the plan of the committee to give only one project to each district?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; it is not.

Mr. STEENERSON. I know I have had two very meritorious projects. [Laughter.] The receipts in one place were $18,000, and in the other $20,000, and the committee gave me only one.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say to the gentleman that this bill is not constructed as to districts at all. We have attempted to sift out from the various districts what we consider to be the most meritorious projects.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does not the gentleman think if he adopted this amendment he would be giving a precedent favorable to my case?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If this bill is loaded down by amendments the whole thing will fall. That is the size of it.

Mr. STEENERSON. But mine are meritorious.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, others are equally meritorious all over the country. But it is utterly impossible to take care of them all, and if the committee undertakes to load this bill down with amendments, then the whole bill falls.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is it not a fact that one district in the United States is given three distinct projects in this bill, or in fact four projects?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It may be possible; but as I told the gentleman before, we have not constructed this bill upon the line of giving each district an item. We have constructed it upon the line of taking care of the meritorious projects as far as we could.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, well, the populations of one district are approximately the same as of the other, and they ought to receive about the same consideration.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Florida has stated that the bill is not constructed upon district lines. Has he in mind any district in a Northern State which had already received more than one project? If so, I would be glad to know the district.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY], I think, has two. I think I could name many more if I tried.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would be very much interested in hearing them.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman insist that this is a sectional bill after the figures that have been produced here?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am asking for information from the chairman on that very point.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am trying to give the information to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman from Florida does not know, surely I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am naming the district of the gentleman from Wisconsin. He has two items in the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is that the only case?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; the district represented by Judge TOWNER has more than one, and the district of the gentleman from Massachusetts over here has three.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota withdraws his pro forma amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Flint, Mich., $100,000.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLEY: Page 5, line 16——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the amendment is reported, will not the gentleman from Florida move that the committee rise? There is another little matter to come before the House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLINE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18994) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of certain public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for certain public buildings; to abolish the Office of Supervising Architect of the Treasury and to create and organize in the Treasury Department a Bureau of Public Buildings and define its duties, powers, and jurisdiction; to create and establish the office of commissioner of public buildings; to fix the salary and prescribe the duties and powers of the said commissioner of public buildings; to create a board of estimates and prescribe its duties and powers; to provide for the standardization of certain classes of public buildings, and for other purposes, and came to no resolution thereon.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—DEATH OF ADMIRAL DEWEY (H. DOC. NO. 1945).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

It is with the deepest regret that I announce to the Congress the death of Admiral George Dewey at 5:56 o'clock on the afternoon of yesterday, the sixteenth of January, at his residence in this city.

Admiral Dewey entered the naval service of the country as an acting midshipman from the first congressional district of Vermont on September 23, 1854; was graduated from the Naval Academy as Midshipman June 11, 1858; served with distinction throughout the war of 1861–1865; and thirty years later had risen to the rank of Commodore. It was as Commodore that he rendered the service in the action of Manila Bay which has given him a place forever memorable in the naval annals of the country. At the time of his death he held the exceptional rank of The Admiral of the Navy by special Act of Congress. During the later years of his life he was the honored President of the General Board of the Navy, to whose duties he gave the most assiduous attention and in which office he rendered a service to the Navy quite invaluable in its sincerity and quality of practical sagacity.

It is pleasant to recall what qualities gave him his well-deserved fame; his practical directness, his courage without self-consciousness, his efficient capacity in matters of administration, the readiness to fight without asking any questions or hesitating about any detail. It was by such qualities that he continued and added luster to the best traditions of our Navy. He had the stuff in him which all true men admire and upon which all statesmen must depend in hours of peril. The people and the Government of the United States will always rejoice to perpetuate his name in all honor and affection.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 18, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, a thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday when they are past, and our years, how swift they fly! We are swept into the great current of Thine own vast eternity. Yet our years are related to Thy eternity. We come to Thee in the midst of the sorrow of the Nation on the death of one of the national heroes. We bless Thee to-day that Thou hast laid Thy hand from time to time upon men who in the crises of our national history have served us well, that Thou hast prepared them before for the coming crisis, and that Thy hand is seen in every turn of the affairs of our national life. We bless Thee that Thou hast led us on. We see to-day how dependent we are upon Thy guidance, and Thy providence, and Thy care to prepare mighty men for the issues of our national life. We pray that we may put ourselves under Thy command and in Thy control, and that we may be guided by the Divine counsel to accomplish God's great purpose in us as a Nation. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES. I have a letter in the nature of a petition from Dr. Aline Bradley, legislative superintendent of the Fourth Division Drys, of Fairbanks, Alaska, setting out the conditions there and the result of the vote at the last election. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FOURTH DIVISION DRYS,
Fairbanks, Alaska, December 20, 1916.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: You are aware that Alaska voted dry on November 7 by a majority of more than 2 to 1 in her four judicial divisions.

You will admit that when the Alaska of dance-hall, gambling, and saloon fame thus registers her protest against the liquor traffic—when more than 8,000 voters out of approximately 12,000 sign their names to such a gigantic petition against alcohol, the petitioners are entitled to their demand.

Make no mistake—liquor has had the ruling hand in Alaska, as well as the robbing hand, hence the vote against it, which vote was not simply a protest against alcohol, but even more a protest against Alaska's rule by alcohol in all channels—local, Territorial, and judicial.

The plebiscite asked that Alaska be made dry after January 1, 1918. There is no good reason, however, why Alaska should await the memorial of her legislature before securing the passage of an act by Congress prohibiting the sale, manufacture, and importation of alcoholic beverages into Alaska.

We therefore beg to ask your earnest consideration of the reasons why Alaska's prohibition bill should be passed during the present session of Congress:

1. Section 410, Compiled Laws of Alaska, creating a legislative assembly for the Territory, provides that "The authority herein granted * * * shall not extend to * * * the establishment and maintenance of schools * * *."

Before its 1917 spring term the authority of the Alaska Territorial Legislature as regards the "establishment and maintenance" of her schools must be fixed with absolute certainty. Otherwise the school revenue which will begin to fail as licenses expire in 1917 could not be replaced in time; district schools (Nelson) would be closed for lack of funds, while those in incorporated towns would be crippled for the same reason. Our helpless Territorial legislatnre could not remedy the condition until its next session, in the spring of 1919.

Alaska's children simply can not face two years without proper school revenues.

2. Barring the beers of domestic manufacture, all liquors consumed in Alaska come into the southeastern portion through its ports of entry, and into the interior by one of three routes—St. Michael, White Pass Railroad via Skagway, and via Valdez and Cordova over the trail into Fairbanks and other points. Hence Alaska can be made as dry as a bone if Congress so elects.

3. Having no fear that Alaska would go dry on her first vote, the liquor interests shipped into interior Alaska last summer only the usual annual tonnage of liquors, which supply must last the vast interior territory until the spring of 1917, unless shipped in over the trail at a prohibitive cost.

Should the importation of liquor go unchecked next summer the quantities shipped in will be beyond computation. The liquor interests, through their three wholesale dealers in Alaska, can afford to place as large a stock as they may wish—no limits. The liquors remaining on hand after licenses expire and after January, 1918, will supply material for a profitable bootlegging business for several years to come.

After reading the foregoing we believe you will admit that Alaska needs three things:

1. A prohibitory measure, which shall prohibit the sale and manufacture of liquors in Alaska after January 1, 1918.

2. A clause in the above prohibition measure prohibiting the importation of liquors into Alaska after May 31, 1917. This last and most important clause in order to cut off the bootleggers' supply and settle the bootlegging problem.

3. A sister measure giving Alaska the right to control her schools, bearing in mind that from the Territorial revenues must come the substitute for the liquor-license revenues. These two measures must be enacted concurrently by this session of Congress.

In conclusion, will you introduce and support, or secure and work for the introduction and passage, of the above measures for Alaska? Telegraph rates from Alaska are prohibitive—Alaska too far away for the usual methods of influencing Congress. We are therefore appealing to your sense of fairness and justice in the only manner open to us.

Will you aid us and work for us?

Respectfully, yours,

ALINE BRADLEY,
Legislative Superintendent.

Ruckelshaus and sundry other prominent citizens of Indiana, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which was ordered to lie on the table.

WHITE-PINE BLISTER RUST.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a petition signed by very influential parties in the State of New Hampshire in favor of an added appropriation to care for the white-pine blister rust, a matter that is engaging the attention of the people of New England as well as of other parts of the country. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD with the few names which are attached to it.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WARNING—WHITE-PINE TREES BEING DESTROYED—THEY ARE VALUED AT $261,000,000, AND THE WHITE-PINE BLISTER RUST IS KILLING THEM.

A disease known as the white-pine blister rust threatens the destruction of all the white pine and other five-leaved pine trees in the United States.

It has already appeared in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and in Quebec and Ontario.

There is no known cure for it. It kills the white pines infected and it spreads steadily. The spores or seeds are blown from diseased pines to currant and gooseberry bushes. They germinate on the leaves of these bushes. The leaves then produce millions of spores or seeds of the disease which are blown by the wind from the bushes to the pines, and these, even those several miles distant from the nearest bushes, are infected, become diseased, and die.

The white pines in New England are worth $75,000,000; in the Lake States, $96,000,000; in Western States, $60,000,000; and in the national forests, $30,000,000, or a total of $261,000,000.

Unless the ravages of the white-pine blister rust are stopped these pines will be destroyed.

The American Forestry Association urges people in all the regions where the disease has been discovered to destroy at once all currant and gooseberry bushes, diseased pines, and others exposed to infection.

This will help to stop the spread of the disease.

AMERICAN FORESTRY ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C.

HON. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned, being especially interested in the preservation of millions of dollars worth of white pine in southern New Hampshire, and realizing the danger to this tree from the white-pine blister rust, and that the destruction of the white pine would seriously affect the industries of southern New Hampshire, herewith respectfully beg to call your attention to the necessity of obtaining sufficient funds from the Government to carry on an effective campaign against this most serious disease, and beg to urge you to lend your assistance toward obtaining such appropriation as may be sufficient to combat in an effective manner this disease, which is threatening the business interests of southern New Hampshire.

I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Navy and the memorandum accompanying it may be printed as a part of the committee report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

SELECTION OF INDEMNITY LAND.

Mr. STERLING. From the Committee on Public Lands, I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 198) providing for the confirmation of the agreements between the States of South Dakota, Montana, and Idaho and the United States relating to the selection of lieu or indemnity lands, and I submit a report (No. 945) thereon.

In view of the emergency which exists in my State now in regard to this agreement relating to indemnity lands, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 198.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the agreements between the States of South Dakota, Idaho, and Montana and the United States relating to the selection of lieu or indemnity lands, dated January 4, 1910, October 4, 1911, and August 23, 1912, respectively, so far as heretofore consummated in accordance with the proclamations of the President, dated February 15 and June 4, 1912, and March 3, 1913 (37 Stats. L., pp. 1729, 1743, and 1777), are hereby ratified and confirmed.

Mr. STERLING. I offer a formal amendment to come in at the end of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution insert a comma and the following words:

And that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to approve all selections made in pursuance of said agreements as so consummated.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me that that is a direction affecting the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. It occurs to me the Secretary will act according to his discretion without the direction of Congress.

Mr. STERLING. So far as that is concerned, I will agree to strike out the words "and directed."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may we have order, or will Senators speak louder? We are interested in this measure and would like to hear what is going on.

Mr. STERLING. I will modify the amendment by striking out the words "and directed."

Mr. MYERS. May I ask what is to be stricken out?

Mr. STERLING. I have agreed to modify the amendment by striking out the words "and directed."

Mr. CLARK. There was an amendment directing the Secretary of the Interior to approve the agreements that had been made between the Forestry Service and the States named. I interposed the query as to whether Congress should direct the Secretary in the exercise of his discretion. The Senator from South Dakota says it is perfectly agreeable to have the words "and directed" stricken out.

Mr. MYERS. It is merely proposed to strike out the words "and directed" and to leave the amendment otherwise stand?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to approve the selections.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to have the amendment read as modified.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the joint resolution:

And that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to approve all selections made in pursuance of said agreements as so consummated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DECISION ON WEBB-KENYON LAW.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have received—and I presume all other Senators have received—a great many requests for copies of the opinion of the Supreme Court on the so-called Webb-Kenyon law. All the copies are exhausted, and it is impossible to get any more. I have here one copy, and I ask unanimous consent that the opinion be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator consent to its reference, as all such matters are referred, to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, it is utterly impossible to hear what is going on.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I have asked that a copy of the opinion of the Supreme Court in passing on the Webb-Kenyon law be printed as a Senate document. The Senator from Utah asks that it may go to the Committee on Printing, and I have no objection to that course. I will say, Mr. President, that I think the committee ought to act upon it without any delay, because requests are coming in by every mail. If the opinion is to be printed at all, it ought to be done immediately.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator absolutely.

Mr. NORRIS. Let the matter be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

NOMINATION OF WINTHROP M. DANIELS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer a Senate resolution which I ask may be read and go over under the rule until to-morrow.

The resolution (S. Res. 322) was read, as follows:

Whereas in secret executive sessions of the Senate on January 3 and 6, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] delivered an address in opposition to the confirmation of the Hon. Winthrop M. Daniels to become a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and

Whereas said address was printed in confidence for the information of Senators; and

Whereas after said address had been thus printed and before the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom the said Winthrop M. Daniels prepared in writing a reply thereto, which reply was afterwards printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and

Whereas said reply shows on its face that at the time of its preparation the said Winthrop M. Daniels had in his possession a copy of the said address delivered by the said Senator from Iowa; and

Whereas the said Winthrop M. Daniels could not at said time have procured a copy of said address without a violation of the rules of the Senate by some Member or officer thereof; and

Whereas the rules of the Senate provide that any Senator who discloses the secret or confidential business or proceedings of the Senate shall be liable to expulsion, and that any officer of the Senate who is guilty of such violation shall be dismissed from the service of the Senate; and

Whereas the furnishing to the said Winthrop M. Daniels of a copy of said address was a flagrant violation of the rules and ancient and time-honored landmarks of the Senate: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That a committee of three Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to make an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the Senator, or officer of the Senate, who has been thus guilty. Said committee is hereby directed to take the testimony of said Winthrop M. Daniels and such other persons as may be necessary to ascertain the means by which, and the persons through whom, he obtained a copy of said address. The said committee is authorized to issue subpœnas, compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, and do all things necessary to fully carry out the purposes of this resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether there will be any expense attached to the proposed investigation?

Mr. NORRIS. I think not. I have not included any expense.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason why I spoke of it is because the resolution provides that subpœnas shall be issued and papers sent for, and I thought there would be expense attached to it. If so, under the law the resolution should go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume if it should be found, for instance, that Mr. Daniels could not appear without a subpœna or something of that kind the committee would have to get authority. I assumed that there would not be any difficulty of that kind.

Mr. HUGHES. There is no provision for counsel?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not think the Senate will care to have counsel.

Mr. HUGHES. I think the committee ought to be represented by counsel. But, of course, it is not my resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

COMPLAINTS OF AMERICAN SHIPPERS.

Mr. PHELAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 324), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Senate hereby requests the Interstate Commerce Commission to supply it with a list of complaints made by American shippers against discriminations practiced by belligerent carriers.

COMMUNITY FORUMS.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I have received a communication from the Commissioner of Education, transmitting a copy of a bill to provide for and regulate the use of public schools as community forums. I desire to have the matter printed as a public document, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be done.

POWER AT NIAGARA FALLS.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue temporary permits for additional diversions of water from the Niagara River" having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 3.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1 and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"Any such permittee who without further authority of Congress diverts after the time herein named for the expiration of such permit any part of the additional amount of water authorized by Congress to be diverted for the first time under this resolution shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year nor less than 30 days, or both, in the discretion of the court; and each and every day on which such violation occurs or is committed shall be deemed a separate offense: Provided, That where such violation is charged against the company or corporate body, the offense shall be taken and deemed to be that of any director, officer, agent, or employee of such company or corporate body ordering, directing, or permitting the same."

And the House agree to the same.

MARK A. SMITH,
JOHN K. SHIELDS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. D. FLOOD,
CYRUS CLINE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

EMBARGO ON FOOD PRODUCTS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, a few days ago I gave notice that I would ask permission to address the Senate to-day at the conclusion of routine morning business on Senate resolution 316. I now ask that that resolution be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and lays before the Senate the resolution referred to by the Senator from North Dakota, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 316) which had been submitted by Mr. McCUMBER on the 13th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That an embargo against the exportation of any food products, or any legislation which would narrow or destroy the markets for such products, or in any other way interfere with the operation of the law of supply and demand in establishing their prices, in the face of the great increase in the price of land, labor, and every article which the food producer must purchase would be an act of the grossest injustice to a most important portion of our population.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, one of the most frequent subjects of journalistic discussions, of magazine contributions, of fiction writers, Chautauqua lecturers, college and high-school essayists, commencement orators, and embryo presidents is the infidelity of public officials to the interests of the people whom they represent; that the Member of Congress as soon as elected is either afflicted with a loss of memory touching preelection promises or metamorphosed from a Dr. Jekyll to a Mr. Hyde. So persistently has this falsehood been poured into the public mind that the whole body politic has become saturated with it and poisoned with its virus.

No greater error ever rooted itself in the public mind. Every day's record of the proceedings of Congress writes the word "lie" across these insinuations; every day's record discloses a deluge of bills to meet every wave of public sentiment and answer every complaint, great and small, real and imaginary.

If Congress is subject to any criticism concerning its responsiveness to public thought or sentiment, it is that in the alertness of individual Members of that body to respond to public desires in their eagerness to initiate the first measure designed to meet any complaint they fill the RECORD with bills and ofttimes press with patriotic zeal measures detrimental to the people as a whole. The result of this proneness to curry favor from every society, class, or organization seeking legislation for its special benefit has shown itself in class legislation that is rapidly undermining our whole economic structure and threatening the very life principle of our Government—the equality of all under the law.

An analysis of this ardent responsiveness will disclose in very many instances a strong admixture of political consideration and interest, the desire to earn the approbation of the greatest number of the constituency of any Member with the hope that such approbation may return as bread upon the waters at the next election.

Now, all this would be most commendable and beneficial to the country were all our interests homogenous, and that which is demanded by one constituency never inimical to the interests of any or all of the others. But, Mr. President, it so happens that we are a country of vast and diverse interests which, if allowed to adjust themselves under the great law of supply and demand, will yield the greatest possible blessing; but which, if disjointed and antagonized by special legislation conceived to benefit one class or one constituency at the expense of the other, will not only diminish or destroy their natural beneficence but will engender a discord and social upheaval that can end only in paternalism with all its degenerating influences.

Were all these bills responsive to public demand enacted into laws, the great commercial and industrial structure builded by the architect of adaptation, through centuries, would, through discordant and antagonistic legislation, collapse and come tumbling to the earth. Happily the same spirit which seeks to promote the interests of one class or the majority of one constituency also operates as a potent force to guard the interests of some other class or constituency against the demands of the first, and thereby acts as a check against most of this proposed legislation.

With 48 States and about 430 congressional districts, each one of which has special industries to be promoted or safeguarded, we may confidently look for such an equilibrium in legislation as will be beneficial to the whole without injury to the parts. It is only when the interests of a class, permeating all these States and districts, are sought to be advanced at the expense of the other classes throughout the country—when the contest is purely a class conflict rather than a sectional one—that the danger and injustice become acute and imminent.

If, to promote the interests of a national political party, we bribe one class of voters who may hold the balance of power by legislation which will advance their interests at the expense of some other class; or if, actuated by political exigency, we legislate for the interests of the majority at the expense of an important minority, we are nearing the end of true popular government. There is no autocracy so dangerous, so tyrannical, as the autocracy of mere numbers. The only true government is that which, capable of comprehending the interests of the whole, never loses sight of the interests of the smallest part, and which so legislates as to afford the individuals engaged in all the diverse industries of the Nation equal opportunity. And, Mr. President, as we must purchase our comforts and pleasures in this world, equal opportunity must mean equal compensation for labor expended, measured by its character and the preparation and intelligence necessary for its performance. Toward this great end should all legislation, so far as legislation can promote it, be directed.

In this very Congress we have been tempted by the demon of political exigency to depart from this purpose. And, Mr. President, we have fallen. That glaring evidence of our weakness prompts me at this time to raise my voice against a repetition of an error of the same character, a crime against one class of our citizens at the behest of another. I refer, Mr. President, to the many bills introduced at the beginning of this session for an embargo against the export of food products from this country. I refer to the purpose of one class of our citizens to deprive another class of its just compensation for its labors; to overcome the law of supply and demand by destroying the market of our farming population; to drive one class to penury that the other may continue to revel in extravagance.

Most of the dangers from these bills, responding to the demands of special interests, would be mitigated were we not misled by the persistence or violence of any complaint as to its relative importance. If the cry for relief or for special legislative favor increased in volume in proportion to the numbers affected or the justice of the demand, we might be able to measure out a relief which would approximate a standard of fairness to all. But a very casual observation will convince any thoughtful person that the volume of noise is no indication whatever of the severity of the ailment. One man of stoical character will endure any amount of pain without a murmur. Another will groan at the scratch of a pin. One class, accustomed to self-denial and a life of rigid economy, adapts itself to any financial stringency that may overtake it. Another class, pampered with luxury and spoiled by extravagance, regards any condition which would diminish those luxuries or check those extravagances as a national injustice which can only be remedied by a heavier toll on the frugal and industrious. One section cries loud and reaches long into the Federal Treasury to compensate it for every loss by bursting dike or torrential flood; another, with grim and manly resolution, sees its whole year's crop annihilated by storms or drouths with never a thought that the Government should stand as an underwriter against the blighting visitations of Providence. And as the honest, the industrious, the frugal of human society must always in the end pay for the debts of the dishonest, the sluggard, the prodigal, or the beggar, the rights of that portion of the public entitled to the most considerate attention of the Government are generally sacrificed that the clamorous may be satisfied.

I might give a little illustration, which is very apt in this connection, by citing the fact that almost every year Congress appropriates vast sums of money to relieve those whose homes and crops have been destroyed by floods occasioned by the overflow of the Mississippi River near its southern end, and yet in a single year in the Red River Valley, in my State, we have lost more by floods than has been lost in all the years of the history of the section to which I refer; but we have not asked, and are not asking, that the Government should make good our losses.

And so to-day, Mr. President, the self-indulging, leisure-loving, pleasure-chasing portion of our population, sensitive to every condition that will check their extravagances or diminish their pleasures, observing in the rise of the price of bread and other food products a possible necessity for the practice of some little economy in their other expenses, and without the slightest consideration for the welfare of those they would injure or the justice of their demands, cry out for an embargo on food products. And Congressmen, responding to that cry, and with the same lack of consideration, proceed immediately to press measures for an embargo against the exportation of food products.

That these bills spring from the desire of one class to acquire special benefits at the expense of the other is clearly shown in a recent article in the Modern Miller. The writer of that article sent out inquiries to all classes of our people to ascertain their attitude on the question of an embargo on food products, and he summarized the responses as follows:

Consumers are for it; producers are against it!
Town people are for it; country people are against it!
Laborers are for it; farmers are against it!
Common people are for it; agriculturists are against it!
The "shorts" are for it; the "longs" are against it!

It is true, Mr. President, that notwithstanding our vastly increased wheat acreage, the world crop this year was exceptionally short, and the United States crop somewhat below the average. These causes, combined with a great world war, has increased the demand and enhanced the price of wheat and flour, and hence the cry for an embargo. The fact that the price of every other commodity (that which the wheat producer must purchase) has advanced as much as or more than those commodities, seems in no wise to enter into the equation in the mind of those who favor this destruction of farm prices by legislation.

Are the prices of farm products exorbitant to-day? This is the first question which presents itself for consideration. On the answer to this must rest the whole of proponent's case. That the producer of food cereals is entitled to a just reward for his labor expended in producing them and a reasonable return upon the capital employed in their production, every one will admit, at least in debate. The difficulty arises in determining what is a just reward. Here, I regret to say, I find the sentiment everywhere prevalent in our great cities—a sentiment hoary with age and hardened by time—that the vocation of the tiller of the soil is of such a menial character that he ought not to aspire to the standard of ordinary urban living; that if he receives such prices for his products as will enable him to have sufficient food and clothing for his physical comfort during his working years and enable his children to supply his few necessities in his declining age, it ought to satisfy him; that he ought not to expect any degree of affluence in his chosen vocation beyond this.

Numerous, Mr. President, as are those holding this view, it is a waste of time to attempt to convince them of its wrong and injustice. Their ailment, atrophy of conscience, complicated by chronic selfishness, can only be reached by a change or reversal of environment. I speak only to those whose sense of justice enables them to accept as axiomatic that all labor should reap a reward proportionate to its arduous character and the preparation and intelligence required in its performance; that like labor, whether performed in the field or in the factory, whether rural or urban, ought to assure like comforts to the toiler; and that capital invested in one legitimate enterprise has the same right to reasonable return as when employed in any other enterprise.

From this viewpoint and measured by this standard, are the grain and cattle producers of this country receiving more than a just compensation for their products? I maintain, Mr. President, that not only are they not receiving more than they ought, but measured by the earnings in other vocations and trades and other lines of business their compensation to-day is far below their just deserts.

Mr. President, in all other lines of production in which advancing cost requires a doubled or quadrupled capital to conduct it, we naturally look for higher-priced products and accept the result with equanimity. Do you realize that the price of land throughout the wheat-raising sections of the United States during the last 20 years has increased from fivefold to tenfold? Do you realize that labor has doubled in price during the last 20 years? With such increase in required capital and labor, what right have you to expect the maintenance of the old price for farm products?

Mr. President, I have had some experience in farming and have given the subject no little consideration, and I know that if farming were carried on the same as other lines of business, if all the work employed was paid for on the basis of like labor employed in other vocations, no farm would ever pay a dividend upon the capital invested under ordinary market conditions. It is only because the labor of the farmer and his entire family is employed without any standard of compensation that the business has not collapsed. With the present prices of land, present prices of labor, and the price the farmer must pay for his necessities, he should receive for his several products in normal times as much as he is now receiving during a great world war and a short world crop, and a greater sum for many of the products of his farm than he is now receiving.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am very much interested in the speech which the Senator is delivering; and I want to ask him whether the low price of farm products has not been the cause of that drift of the people from the farms to the cities which has been such a curse, or supposed curse, to the welfare of the Republic; and if stable and fair values are given for farm products, whether that will not remedy the very evil that is supposed to exist by reason of this drift and make the people of the overcrowded cities come back to the free life of the farm?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, population will always drift to the point of greatest compensation for a given amount of expended energy. That applies the world over. Whenever you make farming produce such a return upon its labor and upon its investment that those who follow the vocation can reap the same comforts and luxuries and live upon the same standard as the average life in the city, the population will drift again from the city to the farm.

If I were to enumerate what I should consider a minimum farm price for the products of my State, in order to make farming reasonably profitable, I should give about the following:

Wheat	per bushel	$1.50
Oats	do	.65
Barley	do	.85
Flax	do	2.00
Corn	do	.70
Potatoes	do	.70
Rye	do	1.25
Beans	do	2.50
Beef on hoof	per pound	.07
Pork on hoof	do	.08
Butter	do	.35
Eggs	per dozen	.45

I am dealing now only with farm prices, and not retail prices.

With such prices assured for a period of 10 years, making allowance for the average losses, partial or total, farming could be conducted on a fair basis.

I read from a recent report in the Nation's Business the following:

Wheat is dear in 1916. For 34 years, however, during which generation of time boys became men, with homes and cares of their own, the farm price of wheat was less than a dollar a bushel, except in case of corner. The farm price of wheat on December 1, 1881, was $1.19 a bushel. On the same day during every year that followed down to 1915 the farm price was less than a dollar a bushel. On October 1, 1916, the farm price was $1.36.

And, of course, that means only the highest quality or grade.

Let me ask those who are now wishing to strike down the market price of wheat with a legislative bludgeon if they really think that a raise in price above the dollar mark once in 34 years, and which price to-day is not sufficiently high to enable the farmer to pay going wages for labor employed, is so excessive as to merit the assault which they are making against the wheat producer?

Do you not know that the moment that this war ceases and the moment we reap a normal world's crop there will come upon the farmer such a diminution in the value of his products, due to stagnation, that will be nothing less than a calamity? And are you not willing that he should have this little ephemeral prosperity, which has come to him after 34 years, if prosperity it can be called, to compensate him for the long years of underpay in the past and the other years of stagnation in the future?

Those who propose this measure attempt to deceive the public, if not to deceive themselves, by comparing the 1916 crop of the United States with the 1915 crop. They make this comparison for the purpose of pointing out the danger of a catastrophe in the food supply of the country. They are careful to compare this year's shortage with the most phenomenal crop ever raised in the United States. As a matter of fact and truth, it ought to be known that the 1916 crop of 639,886,000 bushels is but little below the average crop of this country. During the last decade the average crop of this country, including the nearly double crop of 1915, has been 732,839,000 bushels.

During the past decade we have had five crops, each of which fell below 700,000,000 bushels. The 1915 crop of wheat in the United States was 1,011,500,000 bushels, or about 400,000,000 bushels above the normal. And this phenomenal yield is being put forth as a basis of comparison for the purpose of frightening the American people into the idea that there has been an enormous shortage in our wheat supply. If we should simply tell the truth, that an average yield is about 700,000,000 bushels, and our consumption for seed and bread about 550,000,000 bushels, and our crop this year is nearly 640,000,000 bushels, the phantom of starvation would immediately vanish. No, Mr. President, the whole trouble is that these people do not want to pay the price fixed by the law of supply and demand.

Has it ever occurred to you that the farmer can not eat this unground wheat or corn, but must buy his flour and many manufactured products of which he furnishes the raw material and pay as much for it as you do? Can you not understand that the farmer pays higher prices for his labor, higher prices for his machinery, higher prices for his shoes, higher prices for his clothing, higher prices for his drugs, higher doctors' bills, and that all of these have increased in the last few years far beyond the increase in the price of his products, even in war times? And do you expect that you alone shall be the elect of Providence and go right on with ever-increasing charges for the things you sell him and he should sell you for the same old prices?

A friend of mine in Washington who keeps an account of the prices paid at retail for all items entering into household expenses gave me the following table of comparisons between what he paid for certain articles in December, 1915, and December, 1916, as follows:

Articles.	1915	1916	Per cent increase.
Women's shoes	$5.00	$6.50	33
Men's shoes	7.00	8.00	15
Matches, per box	(1)	(2)	33
Boy's suit	10.00	14.00	40
Coal	7.00	8.25	18
Ice per 100 pounds	.30	.40	33

[1] 3 for 5 cents. [2] 2 for 5 cents.

Of course, the cost of ice was caused by the war!

Do you stop in your everlasting arrogance, your extreme selfishness, to contemplate that while you, and I mean every man of you, from the lowest-paid laborer on the streets to the moneyed magnate of the country, insist on taking advantage of the law of supply and demand wherever it affects your products, you deny that right to the farmer?

Mr. President, wheat and barley have advanced greatly in price since 1914. But their advance is due entirely to scarcity. Can you not therefore understand that if the farmer in my State harvested only one-fourth of a crop of wheat, that one-fourth of a crop would have to advance 300 per cent in value to yield him the same returns, and that an increase in value of 60 per cent will still leave him far below an average return? On the other hand, you know that the enormous advance in the price of everything the grain raiser must purchase is not due to shortage. There is no shortage whatever in clothing, shoes, matches, and coal. There is no shortage whatever in ginghams, and prints, and shirtings, and sheetings, and drills, and hickories, and piquots. The manufacturers and dealers in these articles have got both the goods and the higher prices. The farmer has the higher prices, but he has not got the goods. And in the face of this natural hardship to the grain producer we find men either so ignorant of the real situation or so deaf to the voice of justice that they are aiming their blows at the only real sufferer.

Comparing the fall of 1914 with that of 1916, I find that beef cattle increased just 7 per cent. I find that in one year, from 1915 to 1916, round steak increased at retail in this city 40 per cent. I find that hogs increased in price during those two years 20 per cent, but the retail price of pork has increased more than 40 per cent. I find that calves increased in price 10 per cent, and that sirloin steak increased in one year 40 per cent. I find that from December 1, 1914, to December 1, 1916, corn increased in price 36 per cent, but I find also that a boy's suit increased in the last year 40 per cent. I find that oats increased in two years 15 per cent, but brown sheetings increased from 90 to 100 per cent. I find that rye increased 37 per cent, but prints increased from 75 to 80 per cent. I find that butter increased in two years 22 per cent, but that coffee increased 80 per cent. I find that eggs increased per dozen 21 per cent, but that ginghams increased from 50 to 75 per cent.

To bear out these statements I ask to have inserted at this point a table taken from the Monthly Crop Reporter, showing the farm prices of farm products in November and December of 1914 and November and December of 1916, together with the percentage of increase.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if that table gives the prices in the local markets and then the prices in the cities?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; this gives the farmer's price—an estimate of what the farmer receives at the elevator, direct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator ask unanimous consent to insert the table in the RECORD?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Farm prices of farm products.

[Monthly Crop Report.]

Articles.	Nov. 15, 1914.	Nov. 15, 1916.	Per cent increase.
Hogs, per 100 pounds	$7.00	$8.74	20
Beef cattle, per 100 pounds	6.02	6.44	7
Veal calves, per 100 pounds	7.78	8.60	10
Sheep, per 100 pounds	4.68	6.41	36
	Dec. 1, 1914.	Dec. 1, 1916.
Wheat, cents per bushel	98.6	160.3	60
Corn, cents per bushel	64.4	88.9	36
Oats, cents per bushel	43.8	52.4	15

Rye, cents per bushel	86.5	122.1	37
Butter, cents per pound	28.4	34.4	22
Eggs, cents per dozen	29.7	38.1	21

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to have this followed by a table showing the increase in the price of canned goods, on which many of the people in the cities depend, for the same period, taken from the American Grocer, and for the purpose of showing this enormous increase in the price of canned goods as compared with the increase which the farmer receives for his product which goes into the canned goods.

For instance, I find that asparagus increased 90 per cent; that canned beets increased 65 per cent; that standard corn increased 100 per cent; that even sauerkraut, when canned, increased from 80 cents to $1.55, or 95 per cent. I find that granulated sugar increased 50 per cent; that corn increased 50 per cent; that coffee increased 80 per cent, and so on. I ask to insert this table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish now to insert a table taken from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter, showing the wholesale price list of fabrics of general consumption by the agriculturists of the country on December 24, 1914, and on December 24, 1916, and the percentage of increase. This table ought to be very interesting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. McCUMBER. I find, for instance, that staple gingham increased 45 per cent; that Everett shirtings increased 75 per cent; that seersuckers increased 50 per cent; that prints increased 80 per cent; shirtings, from 50 to 80 per cent; brown sheetings increased from 90 to 100 per cent; bleached shirtings increased from 50 to 66 per cent; pillow cases, Piquot, increased from 30 to 50 per cent; hickories increased 50 per cent. All these are things which the farmer must purchase with the articles which he sells, most of which have increased from 7 to 20 per cent.

Another table taken from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter shows the price of woolen yarn, December, 1914, and December, 1916, with the percentage of increase. I am assuming that the farm wife, to a considerable extent at least, still knits these yarns into socks and stockings for the family. It will be interesting for those who purchase the manufactured product to comprehend the increase in prices to her and her family. I will simply state generally that worsted yarns increased from 65 to 90 per cent and ordinary woolen yarns from 60 to 75 per cent.

These tables are all instructive, and ought to be read and understood by the American people, and especially would I submit them to the thoughtful consideration of the Association of Bakers who are asking for an embargo on food products.

Now, you people right here in the cities fix your own prices for what you sell. Think, then, a moment of the injustice, aye, the criminal injustice, of the people who themselves fix the prices of everything they sell, proposing to boycott the only class of American people who are compelled to take just what the other people see fit to give them for their products! The farmer never fixes the prices of his products. Of course, he wants to get all he can; but when he brings his products to the market he does not say, "This is what I am charging for my wheat, my corn, and my potatoes." He simply asks, "What are you paying to-day?"

Here is a question I wish to ask the boycotter:

Are you willing to give the farmer in my State 6 per cent interest on his investment in land and equipment and allow him to pay his wife and adult daughters what you pay for a colored cook and housemaid, to pay himself and his adult sons what you pay a carpenter? If you are, then drop your embargo nonsense and prepare to vote him a bonus, for, even at the present high prices, he is not receiving a quarter of that.

Mr. President, there is probably considerably less profit made by the middleman on flour and grain than on other farm products. And yet on these articles the spread between the farm price and the consumer's price is far greater than it should be. Prof. Ladd, of the agricultural college of my State, made a report a very short time ago showing clearly that the grain raiser of the State of North Dakota and, of course, of every other State, is euchred out of his legitimate compensation for his product when compared with the price charged by those who purchase from him.

The experiments made at the agricultural college of North Dakota by Prof. Ladd showed that the milling value of grain purchased from our State under the term "D feed" was far greater than the price allowed would indicate. I will give an example of one carload of "D feed": Price to the farmer who raised it, $653.01.

It is probably proper to explain here that on account of the blight of the wheat crop of the Dakotas and western Minnesota the vast majority of the bushels of wheat taken in are taken in as rejected or under these new terms.

It will be seen, therefore, that this carload of wheat brought the farmer only about $635. There are probably not less than 1,200 bushels in that carload; from that up to 1,500 bushels. So you can see that he really received probably for this grain from 40 to 65 cents per bushel.

Minneapolis price on track, $992.06; the mill product as wholesaled, $1,660.15; the mill product as retailed, $2,107.03. It will be observed, therefore, that this grade increased in value at wholesale two and a half times and at retail about three and a half times what the farmer received. Allowing for all freight and labor charges, the profit would still be exorbitant.

Mr. President, the Society of Bakers of New York and vicinity have sent to each Member of Congress a petition for an embargo on wheat. While they are asking the Members of Congress if they are aware of the deficit in the American wheat crop, it might not be amiss to ask them a few questions.

Mr. Baker, are you aware of the fact that the wheat farmers in my State raised only about one-quarter of a crop in actual weight? Are you aware of the fact that with that little one-quarter of a crop they must pay the same taxes as they paid with a full crop; that they must buy coal at a vastly increased price; that they must pay higher prices than ever before for clothing to keep them from freezing? Are you aware of the fact that everything they must purchase has advanced in price even more than the farm prices of the things which they produce, and that while there is the excuse of shortage and war demand to explain the considerable increase in the price of wheat, there is no excuse on earth for the advance in the price of most of the other articles of common use in this country, but that such prices represent imposition of the highest degree? Are you aware of the fact that most of them have mortgages on their farms, and that the mortgages will grow just the same whether there is any crop or not? Are you aware of the fact that with one-quarter of a crop they must still pay for a full crop of interest? Are you aware that while you fix the price of the bread which you make and never sell it at a loss, the farmer does not fix the price of his product and is often compelled to sell at a loss? Are you aware of the fact that if the farmer charged for his own labor in producing wheat what you pay for your labor who produce the bread for you, there is not one of them in the whole Northwest that would not run behind, and that he is only able to keep his head above water by putting in his own labor and that of his wife and children for their board and cheap clothing? Are you aware that the American farmer, his wife, and adult children, earn in this country with normal crop only an average of 20 cents net per day? Are you aware that in the face of that meager earning under normal conditions, and in the face of nearly a crop failure in my State, when most farmers have lost heavily, that the present administration, to purchase four more years of control, added 25 per cent to the wages of railroad employees who are now receiving from $5 to $8 per day; and that the farmer in my State, who this year has not earned one penny, and who has on the average only a net earning capacity of 20 cents per day, will in the end pay, in higher freight charges, this added sum to his brother who already receives from $5 to $8 a day? If you are aware of that fact, have you no consideration then for them and for their necessities? When you are crying "Feed the American first," has he not just as much right to cry to you, "Clothe the American first, shoe the American first, doctor the American first"?

If the American consumers of food products could once get thoroughly impregnated with the conviction that the food producer is not a class designed by Providence solely to produce food for them and in turn to be exploited by the balance of humanity, but that not only their interests but their right to enjoy the average standard of living is mutual, we would hear less complaining about farmers' prices and make a greater effort to increase the farm value of their products. I admit that he himself is partly responsible for your rather low estimate of his vocation. I admit that he does not give the same thought to his business interest that you give to yours. I admit that his acts are often inconsistent and unexplainable. I admit that he is often misled by demagogic and pretended leaders who seem to create prejudices which they capitalize for their own purpose. I have known him, forgetting his own true interest, to vote to destroy one President because he was willing to put some of his products on the free list, as between this country and a single other country, and then turn around and vote for another for President who would put everything he produces on the free list as against the whole world. Of course, I can not always understand his reasoning, but I do understand his interest and his rights, whether he sometimes makes a mistake or not. And one of his sacred rights is to market his products at a reasonable profit.

Now, Mr. American Baker, as you are the complaining witness against the American wheat producer, will you please submit yourselves to a little sidelight inquiry. Why is it that while the English miller pays about 20 per cent more for his American wheat than the American miller he nevertheless sells his bread at least 33 per cent lower than you charge for yours? Why is it that even in these stringent war times the English baker purchases in America the same flour which you purchase, transports it across the ocean at now enormous expense, makes it into bread, and sells at a less price than you receive for your bread?

My colleague in the House, Mr. HELGESEN, presented the other day a statement from the Agricultural Department, quoting the Bureau of Chemistry, that 325 pound loaves could be made from a barrel of hard wheat flour and 320 pound loaves from a barrel of soft wheat flour. He also asserted—and I assume after inquiry—that the best grade of flour costs the baker in the District of Columbia $8.50 per barrel. We then have cost of flour to the baker, $8.50; 325 loaves of bread, at 6 cents per loaf, $19.50; leaving a margin of $11. A pretty large margin to be easily explained. But this is only about two-thirds of the whole truth. As a matter of additional truth, your loaves of bread, retailing at 6 cents, weigh only about 11 ounces, moisture and all. To be accurate on this I had a friend purchase and weigh 13 different classes of bread sold in the District on December 11, 1916. Here is the result. I will give the kind and the price and the weight in ounces. Of course, a pound loaf of bread ought to weigh 16 ounces, but here is what it does weigh. First, here is the Corby 10-cent loaf. That is supposed to be what we call a 2-pound loaf. It sells for 10 cents and it weighs 21 ounces instead of 32 ounces.

I will ask to insert this table at this time and then comment on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Without objection, it will be inserted.

The table referred to is as follows:

On December 11, 1916, on weighing different loaves of bread, he found the weights as follows:

Kind	Price.	Weight in ounces.
	Cents.
Corby's	10	21
Corby's rye bread	6	10½
Corby's lunch bread	12	26
Havenner's	12	24
Corby's Mother's	6	11
Corby's table cream	6	11½
Butter Krust	6	11½
Schneider's	6	12
Havenner's Vienna	6	10½
Corby's Vienna	6	11
General Baking Co.'s Grandma's	6	11
Corby's	5	9½
Rolls	6	7

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, quoting again from the Department of Agriculture, referred to by Mr. HELGESEN, we find this declaration: "We get about 1½ pounds of bread from a pound of flour, household methods." In other words, a barrel of flour of 196 pounds weight will make 294 pounds of bread, or 4,704 ounces. Dividing this by 11 ounces, the average weight of a loaf in the District, we have 427 loaves. Now, making the computation, 427 loaves at 6 cents per loaf amounts to $25.62.

RESULT.

Cost of flour to the baker	$8.50
Cost of bread to the consumer	25.62
Gross profits	17.12

Mr. President, it will require considerable explaining to satisfy either the producer or the consumer of the justice of this increase from flour to bread of 300 per cent. May not the public justly ask you, Mr. Baker, are you aware of the fact that the increase in price of wheat ought not to add more than 1 cent to the cost of a 16-ounce loaf of bread, not an 11-ounce loaf of bread? Are you aware of the fact that, taking advantage of this comparatively slight increase in the price of wheat, the bakers of the city of Washington, and undoubtedly yourselves as well, sell 11 ounces for a pound loaf of bread? Are you aware of the fact that in doing this, you are actually defrauding the consuming public out of nearly one-third of a pound of bread in every loaf you sell, and yet in addition adding 1 cent to the price of every loaf?

So much for you, Mr. Baker.

Now, a word about the cause of the high cost of living. It is true that a dollar does not purchase as much as it did a few years ago, and the dollar as a purchasing agency is getting cheaper every day. Why? First, because the quantity of dollars is rapidly increasing. I shall not now discuss that feature. Second, we ourselves by making ourselves "easy marks" have contributed to the increase, and, third, because of our senseless extravagances.

Mr. President, the tramp who begged for 30 cents with the explanation that he wanted 5 cents for a sandwich and 25 cents to tip the waiter is but a fair illustration of the attitude of the American people toward the question of the high cost of living, and of the reasoning, I may be permitted to say, of those who introduce bills in Congress to strike a blow at the producer of food products to offset general public extravagances.

What elements enter into the cost of any commodity in this country?

A little retrospection would be most valuable to the American public along this line. For the most part prices are fixed by the gullibility of the purchasing public. And I wish that they would put that sentence into their notebooks. Prices are only partly governed by the law of supply and demand. At least another factor must be taken into consideration, namely, the ability and willingness of people to pay whatever is demanded. People who have the power to fix prices charge what the public are willing to pay and never what the thing is worth. The average American purchaser simply goes into a store and orders this and that, or more often orders by phone. If he is running a bill, he seldom even asks what the price of the article is. How often do you hear one of them say, "This is too expensive; I won't take it"? In the old country the idea of bargain and sale is still extant. The merchant may ask an exorbitant price to start with. The purchaser may offer half what the article is worth, and they finally arrive at a figure which gives a fair profit to the one and a reasonable charge to the other. I do not, of course, commend that system in the least, and especially I would not commend it to Americans who go over there to make purchases; but if this country were inhabited by French people you would purchase your products for at least 35 per cent less than you do to-day.

Again, Madam Boycotter, yesterday you went into a millinery store and you selected a hat. The wire frame in that hat can be sold at a profit for 8 cents. Add to that a nickel buckle worth about 5 cents, velvet covering worth 30 cents, ribbon worth 30 cents, total 73 cents. The girl who sewed on the velvet, the buckle, and ribbon may have received 75 cents. That makes about a dollar and a half. That hat ought to have retailed for $3. What did you pay for it? You paid $18, or more than five times what you ought to have paid. That $15 of excess would have bought you 300 eggs, at 60 cents per dozen, and no self-respecting hen ought to be required to lay an egg for less than a nickel—enough to have lasted you and your family three months. Now, honestly, did it ever occur to you that you might boycott those criminally extravagant prices? You purchase a flimsy dress that will not wear you three evenings for $75. You ought to have been able to have purchased it for $20, and you could have purchased it for $20 if you just would not pay the extravagant prices.

I read the other day an article concerning the price of refrigerated eggs. A Chicago food speculator admitted that he had 72,000,000 eggs in cold storage, and, asked why the excessively high price of eggs, he merely stated that the people were willing to pay it, and that it was his duty to get all he could for his product. So long as the people are willing to be imposed upon, then the imposition will be dished out to them with ever-increasing prodigality.

Why is it that everything is cheaper in Windsor, Ontario, than in Detroit, Mich.? One reason is that the Canadian woman has not lost her sense of prudence and frugality; the American woman has.

There are two things, Mr. President, that stand out clear and distinct in this investigation of the cost of living. First, that the labor expended upon our farms is the poorest paid labor in the United States; second, that there is practically no proper relation between the meager price the farmer ordinarily receives for his products and the excessive price charged the ultimate consumer for the same product, either in its original or manufactured state. The proponents of the embargo seem to be perfectly oblivious to these facts.

But here again, Mr. President, the consumer has the remedy in his own hands as against the last vendor. That weapon is substitution. There are so many substantial foods in the country that he need not confine himself to the most expensive kinds.

How many people give the slightest consideration to the subject of substitutes in the daily necessities of life? We do this in the larger concerns. When lumber becomes too expensive the builder begins to compute the cost of a cement or brick building. And this demand for the more economical will decrease the demand for the more expensive and operate as a lever to bring down its price. You say that wheat flour at $8.50 per barrel is too expensive. All right, then, substitute. Are you aware of the fact that in this country we raised in 1916 nearly 3,000,000,000 bushels of corn, selling for about 80 cents per bushel, and that corn meal makes the finest hot Johnny cake and corn bread imaginable, and that if the consumer could get it served good and hot he would usually take it in preference to the wheat bread? Are you aware of the fact that this country raised in 1916 about 1,230,000,000 bushels of oats, selling for about 40 cents a bushel, and that no cereal on earth makes such nourishing breakfast food as oat meal? Are you aware of the fact that we raised in this country in 1916 about 184,000,000 bushels of barley, selling for about 75 cents per bushel, and that barley meal is a most nourishing diet? So if wheat flour is too high, just diminish your consumption in that direction and make a corresponding increase in one or more of these other directions, and down will come the price of wheat flour.

Of course, I do not expect any one of you to do this. Why? Because you know and I know that what you pay out for your flour and, in fact, what you pay out for your food materials generally, is such a mere bagatelle as compared with your other living expenses that you will not stop to give it serious thought. Just look at this rise in the price of bread proposition squarely in the face and see how insignificant it is after all. An average family in the United States, according to Government figures, is composed of five members. Those five persons will eat two loaves of bread per day. On account of the increased price of wheat, bread has advanced from 5 cents per loaf, the price for half a century, to 6 cents per loaf, entailing upon that family the awful increase of 2 cents per day; if the family purchases the bread already baked, $7.30 a year, and if the family does its own baking, probably less than half of that. Just think of it, to save those 2 cents per day to a city family you would club to death the farmers who have dared to breathe for one little year the fragrant air of American prosperity.

Mr. President, our real ills to-day are not because of the cost of the things we put into our stomachs to sustain life, but because of our vast expenditures for ever-increasing extravagances, which do not leave us sufficient means to meet just food prices. The whole trouble with us is that while we measure with critical eye what we pay for the necessaries of life, we fail wholly to take into consideration what we expend for pure extravagances.

What we need most in this country is some form of education that will bring home to us our criminal extravagances. There is not a paper in the whole country that will attempt to educate the people along this line, and very naturally we can hope for little sentiment for reform from this source when we realize that our great dailies are themselves denuding our forests and making a wilderness of vast tracts of what might be a matter of pride and wealth to the country in order that they may feed the public with their Sunday stuff, 60 per cent of which is worse than useless. You have a paper famine. Well, cut down the size of your paper to real legitimate business. One-half of the country is crying for condensed information, and the other half is becoming mental dyspeptics because of the character of the literary conglomeration devoured by them.

From the lowest paid laborer to the highest salaried official, there is not one that does not expend from ten to one hundred times as much for unnecessaries as he pays for the reasonable necessaries of life. I have before me a table which indicates what four beers a day for a year will buy for the support of a family. It is but just to say that I took this table from some prohibition literature, but the items which are enumerated are:

One man's overcoat, 1 man's suit, 1 man's sweater, 1 man's hat, 2 suits men's underwear, 1 woman's suit, 1 woman's separate skirt, 1 silk blouse, 1 petticoat, 1 woman's hat, 1 pair woman's shoes, 2 suits underwear, 2 boy's suits, 2 boy's overcoats, 6 blouses, 2 hats, 2 sweaters, 6 pairs hose, 2 little girl's coats, 4 little wash dresses, 4 suits of underwear, 2 girl's hats, 12 children's handkerchiefs.

These prices were advertised in a Washington paper of January 28, 1916. I think they are a little below the prices one would have to pay for those articles to-day, as I have previously shown in the tables which I have presented.

It is estimated that we pay for—

Confectionery annually	$178,000,000
Furniture	245,000,000
Public education	325,000,000
Boots and shoes	450,000,000
Flour	455,000,000
Soda-fountain products	500,000,000
Potatoes	225,000,000
Cotton goods	675,000,000
Meats	1,500,000,000
Tobacco	840,000,000
Beers and liquors	2,500,000,000
Auto repairs and gasoline	5,000,000,000
Other amusements	5,000,000,000

Now, Mr. Tobacco User, you spend 40 cents a day for the weed, or $146 a year, on yourself alone. You spend for flour $8.50 a year. Do you not really think that before you crack your throat with your shrieks about an $8.50 barrel of flour a year you had better consider the $146 you pay for tobacco? Madam Housekeeper, a loaf of bread advanced from 5 cents to 6 cents, and you are weeping your eyes out about the extra penny. Have you given any consideration to what you pay out for theaters in a year? Have you for a single moment thought that what you pay for yourself alone for a box in an ordinary theater or a seat at a grand opera for just one evening's entertainment will equal the increase on 500 loaves of bread? You say you are paying 5 cents apiece for eggs. Have you stopped to think that you are also paying 5 cents apiece for apples, and that there is more food in one egg than there is in half a barrel of apples? Do you stop to consider that you are paying 10 cents for 1 grapefruit, and that there is more nutriment in 1 egg than there is in 40 grapefruits? Do you realize that while you are paying 30 cents a pound for good ham you are paying 30 cents for food for half a dozen persons, and that there is more nutriment in a pound of ham than there is in a hundred of these fruits? And before you get so hysterical that you can't reason at all, hadn't you better just cut out your morning grapefruit or your evening apple and invest the savings in eggs and butter and meat?

Among the extravagances that might well be mentioned is the enormous amount paid out in gasoline and auto expenses for pleasure rides only; and yet I think they are the most excusable of all. The automobile has come to stay. We are glad it has come. It has given the people of the country the fresh air, the exhilarating sunshine, the rest, the ability to see their own country—an enjoyment that no other instrumentality of human progress has given to them. And were it not for the worries and vexations and exasperations due to inefficient workmanship and exorbitant prices for repairs, it ought to reduce the doctor bills. Some time ago I read a statement of just what the American people pay out yearly for gasoline, tires, and automobile upkeep. The amount was more than $5,000,000,000 annually, far more than the cost of the entire Civil War. That was a couple of years ago, before gasoline had reached its present price, or before so many people owned autos.

I have no data to determine the amount paid out annually for jewelry; I simply know that it is vast. The vast number of multimillionaires, with their wildest extravagances, their palatial mansions, their retinue of servants, speak the enormous sums paid out by the American people for patent medicines, the greater proportion of which is far more dangerous than the ailments they are advertised to cure. I would not deny them their right to indulge in such extravagances, but I would ask them to cease their cry against what the farmer receives for his wheat until they have reduced their expenses along other lines.

Mr. President, I am not concerned alone in the fact that the increased leisure and vastly increased extravagances of city life have blinded the eyes of those people to a fair sense of justice toward our rural population. There is a far deeper significance, a real peril, to the Nation. This revelry in extravagant habits, this unquenchable demand for amusements, for continuous mental intoxicants, is undermining the sturdiness of our younger generation, filling the country with boys who can not bring themselves down to the stern realities of life, filling the country with I. W. W.'s, who, though well educated in our public schools, despairing of making their own way in the world, fall back on the only alternative that the country owes them a living.

There are few boys of 18 years and over in the United States who to-day could not tell you the relative standing of all the baseball teams in the United States and discourse intelligently on the qualities and characteristics of every actress in the United States; but the number who would be able to tell you how many Senators each State has would be amazingly small. The bulletins of your city dailies may describe an event that will change the whole current of thought, of life, of geography in the world, and you may observe a dozen people reading them. If you would go a few blocks farther, where the returns from a national game are being thrown upon the board, you would find the streets for two blocks closed with a dense mass of humanity. The man who fails to note this almost total surrender to the intoxication of amusement and its effect upon the younger generation has but little patriotism in his make-up. Fabulous prices are paid to footlight favorites. The American people are spending not only enormous sums of money to make this possible, but seem to be obsessed with the idea that the main thing in life is amusement, play, entertainment. This undermining of our American and world character, destroying the ability for sober, philosophic thought, is vastly increasing the number of people who can not make a living and yearly adding hundreds of thousands to the ranks of socialism.

The aimless cigarette victim who spends his money and his time to satisfy this insatiate, abnormal propensity throws down his $2 for a theater ticket for a play that is not worth 15 cents, waits at the door to supply the chorus girl with flowers, is then compelled to go to a cheap restaurant where he expects to be supplied with ham sandwiches at a penny apiece, and, failing, joins in the cry to boycott the farmer, who would pinch a 50-cent piece an hour before he could wrestle down his conscience to spend it for a like seat. It is not the price we pay for our food products that we need think so much about, it is our everlasting extravagance, our failure to bring about a proper adjustment between the prices of necessities and what we are paying out for excesses. The best thing that could ever happen the American people would be the closing of every theater and place of amusement in the United States for 10 years. There should be a closed season that would allow the people to regain some of their old stability, some of their old composure, that would allow them time to accustom their minds to the consideration of the real things in life rather than the artificial things.

Nor is this the only evil flowing from the extreme prodigality of urban life as compared with the extreme economy enforced upon rural vocations. Extravagant earnings lead to extravagant spendings; extravagant spendings to an increase of prices; increase of prices adds to the cost of lots and buildings. Higher cost of buildings means higher rents, and higher rents lead to higher charges for commodities sold within such buildings. And so every turn of this jackscrew of prodigality pushes prices higher and higher in our cities without producing corresponding advances in the price of farm products.

There is just one remedy against this urban increase. With the handle of frugality let the public begin to turn the jackscrew the other direction and prices will go down. Then make up your mind that you will not be robbed, and your high-priced articles will go down to meet your just demands, and all of these inflated city prices will go down to a normal and healthful state.

We hear of no attempt to boycott the enormous prices paid for real estate in our great cities and consequent fabulous sums paid for rents. We have a vacant lot down on the corner of Vermont Avenue and H Street where once stood the Arlington Hotel—a splendid hotel, fit for kings—but it was torn down to meet the more extravagant demands of the American public. That little piece of earth to-day is valued at $1,250,000. The owners are now trying to figure out what use they can make of that corner that will pay the enormous interest upon that investment—what business for whose necessarily excessive charges the American people will stand. They will find a way; they must find it or lose the capital invested. If a hotel is erected, I assume the gentleman who will pay $4 for a pound of sirloin steak will charge that high cost of living to the farmer who receives 8 cents for it, and will be demanding an embargo.

Mr. President, I have presented these facts and these sentiments not with the expectation that they will have a hearing, much less an influence in checking prodigal habits that can not continue without disastrous results sooner or later, but rather with the hope of showing to these people who are seeking to compel the food producer, by a reduction of his income, to relieve them from extravagant habits, the injustice of an attempted embargo upon those food products, and to make them realize, if possible, their own duty to begin their economy in the field of prodigality. By so doing they can pay the increased value of flour and food products which this war and scarcity have produced and still have left a reasonable abundance for these unnecessaries of life, and thereby confer a blessing upon themselves as well as upon all their countrymen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). What disposition does the Senator desire made of his resolution?

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so referred.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 408.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent to offer a substitute for the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] put in the RECORD a few days ago an article in regard to the development of water power in Italy, and it was very interesting. I have a similar article in regard to water power now being developed in the Republic of France along the same line that I desire to have printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FRENCH WATER POWER.

In sharp contrast to the nonaction of the United States Government, France is now spending millions of dollars to develop the water power of the Alps, the Pyrenees, and the central mountainous regions.

It was the war that acted as an incentive to France in developing water power for the operation of mills manufacturing shells, chemicals, and other necessities for the army.

In the valley of Durance new plants, aggregating 74,000 horsepower, for the electrochemical industry are under way, while above Modane one of the biggest chemical works in France has acquired rights to about 120,000 horsepower of waterfall that will be utilized speedily. Electric energy for Paris brought from the Alps is the most ambitious project for the future. A dam 75 yards high in the Rhone at Genissiat, backing the water up 14 miles to the Swiss frontier, will furnish a fall sufficient to operate a power station of 325,000 horsepower and 240,000 kilowatts. The line of transmission will be 312 miles long. It is estimated that this enterprise alone will economize 1,800,000 tons of the 20,000,000 tons of coal France imported annually before the war.

President Wilson once remarked that the "we-will-and-we-won't" policy had been delaying progress in the United States. That this delay is apt to become a serious handicap is shown by the manner in which European nations are encouraging the development of their water power. The fear that some one will make some money out of development in the United States should no longer retard progress. The coal bill and the farmers' fertilizer bill can not be cut down except by the extensive development of the vast water power that is now going to waste in this country.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have an editorial from the Washington Post, which I also ask to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be done.

The editorial is as follows:

A WATER-POWER PLAN.

Legislative progress is made by compromise. Where there are so many Members of Congress coming from different sections of the country, having different constituencies to satisfy, it is inevitable that there should be much conflict of opinion as to what is best for the country, and it is only by general concessions that any progress at all can be made.

For many years there has been general recognition of the need for water-power development. The House has passed a water-power bill, known as the Adamson measure, and the Senate has passed a conflicting bill, known as the Shields measure. The two bills have been in conference for many months, and apparently the effort to reconcile the two measures has been abandoned.

The point upon which the two branches of Congress have failed to agree concerns the right of the Government to collect a tax upon each horsepower developed. It is urged that if such a tax were fixed as a principle of the general water-power bill all new development projects would be taxed, while well-established successful plants would go untaxed.

As a feasible compromise it has been suggested in the Senate that instead of this tax there should be included in the new revenue-raising bill an excise tax on all water-power development in the United States. This would apply to established plants as well as to new projects.

In view of the present revenue needs, and especially because of the need for development of the power now going to waste, the two Houses might do worse than agree upon this compromise.

Secretary Lane, of the Interior Department, sums up the arguments in favor of immediate action by Congress in this statement:

"It is generally conceded that the water-power resources upon the public domain can not be developed under existing laws, because of the uncertain tenure involved by revocable permits: (a) Because the engineer and the promoter fear to embark upon an enterprise under such conditions; (b) because the capitalist will not loan money upon such security; (c) because the consumers can have no positive assurance that they will be supplied for a fixed and definite period. It is an established fact that numerous responsible persons who have obtained permits to develop water-power sites under the existing law have been unable to construct because of the foregoing."

Any group of business men would have been able to compromise their differences of opinion in a matter of this kind after several conferences. The failure of Congress to take action is an unnecessary handicap to the national prosperity.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the article I have presented in regard to the development of water power in the Republic of France, notwithstanding that country is engaged in a war that almost involves the existence of the nation, challenges attention to what we are doing in this country along the same line. We have, as shown by official reports, about 61,000,000 horsepower of water power. About 27,000,000 of it is in navigable rivers, the remainder upon the public domain. According to official reports, only about one-tenth of this vast natural energy has been developed and the remainder is going to waste. The cause of that is our present impractical and prohibitory laws.

Mr. Secretary Garrison, in a statement made before the Interstate Commerce Commission while a water-power development bill was pending in the House, said that under those laws only about 140,000 horsepower of water power had been developed since their enactment in the navigable rivers, and that those laws were the direct cause of stagnation in water-power development.

Mr. Secretary Lane, while the bill which has lately been occupying the time of the Senate, the Myers bill, was before the House committee, said:

WATER POWER OF THE WEST CAN NOT BE DEVELOPED UNDER THE PRESENT LAW.

It is generally conceded that the water-power resources upon the public domain can not be developed under existing laws because of the uncertain tenure involved by revocable permits—(a) because the engineer and the promoter fear to embark an enterprise under such conditions; (b) because the capitalist will not loan money upon such security; (c) because the consumers can have no positive assurance that they will be supplied for a fixed and definite period.

It is an established fact that numerous responsible persons who have obtained permits to develop power sites under the existing law have been unable to construct because of the foregoing.

Mr. President, a few days ago in an address in the Senate I called attention to the provision of the present restrictive laws which are causing stagnation in the development of water power in the United States, authorizing the imposition of royalties to go into the Federal Treasury upon all water-power developed, and I suggested that if there must be Federal charges upon such development it should be in the form of a general tax, which is the only constitutional charge that Congress can impose upon the water powers of the several States, and at the proper time I will offer an amendment to the revenue bill for that purpose, in these words:

That all persons, associations, and corporations engaged in the business of operating plants for the production of water power shall pay an excise tax of 10 cents per horsepower year of energy produced and used or sold or otherwise disposed of.

All persons, associations, and corporations subject to this tax shall annually file with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on January 1 of each year, a detailed statement of the horsepower produced, sold, used, or otherwise disposed of by them for the previous year, duly verified by a person having knowledge of the facts: Provided, That this tax shall not apply to any person, association, or corporation during the five years next after having begun the business of producing, using, selling, or disposing of water power, nor to persons, associations, or corporations producing, using, or selling less than 100 horsepower: Provided further, That no person or company required by the terms of the permit granted to them by Congress, or any authorized agent of the United States, to construct a dam or dams in navigable streams for the development of water power to pay any rent, royalty, or charge of any nature, or of any amount, shall be subject to the said tax, and no such royalty or charge shall exceed the tax hereby levied.

The rate is tentative and may be increased if deemed advisable.

Not only have these laws caused stagnation in the development of the water power of the United States but they have driven millions of dollars of American capital into Canada and Norway, there to be invested. Further, I am reliably informed that not only have they driven this capital out of this country but France in the great movement it now has to develop the water power of the Republic is negotiating with the greatest hydraulic and electrical engineer in this country, Mr. Hugh L. Cooper, the engineer who built the Keokuk Dam in the Mississippi River, with a view of getting him to leave this country and take charge of the development of water power in that country.

I think these facts ought ot have some bearing upon those who are now attempting to maintain the present proscriptive legislation upon the statute books and thus defeating all water-power development in the United States.

FUNERAL OF ADMIRAL DEWEY.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, anounced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (No. 68) providing that appropriate funeral services over the remains of the late Admiral George Dewey be held in the Rotunda of the Capitol on Saturday, January 20, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m., and that the Houses of Congress attend the services, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 68) of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in recognition of the long and distinguished service rendered the Nation by Admiral George Dewey appropriate funeral services be held in the rotunda of the Capitol on Saturday, January 20, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m., and that the two Houses of Congress attend said services.

That as a further mark of respect his remains be removed from the Capitol to Arlington Cemetery for burial in charge of the Navy Department, attended by the Sergeants at Arms and the committees of the two Houses.

That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), such officers of the Navy as may be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, and the Chief of Staff of the Army to attend the exercises in the rotunda of the Capitol.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer the following resolution, and ask that it be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 323) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate appoint a committee of 12 Members of the Senate, to join the committee to be appointed by the House, to attend the funeral services of Admiral George Dewey at Arlington, Va.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this resolution, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith on the part of the committee of the Senate be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT, under the first clause of the resolution, appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. LODGE, Mr. PAGE, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. KERN, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. SAULSBURY, and Mr. SMOOT.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be found on pages 41 and 42, Federal Farm Loan Bureau.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, on page 42, line 6 of the pending bill, I move to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$6,000." This refers to the salary of the secretary of the Farm Loan Board.

The gentleman who is occupying this position, Mr. Flannagan, prepared a digest of the Federal farm-loan act which, I think, was printed as Senate Document No. 500. He testified and was examined as an expert before the joint committee upon the general subject of Federal farm loans. In other words, he is not the ordinary clerk; he is an expert who has made a study of this subject, and because of his knowledge his advice is sought by those who want to understand generally the subject. Therefore he is not to be treated as being in the class of an ordinary clerk.

Mr. President, the secretary of the Farm Loan Board corresponds to the secretary of the Federal Reserve Board, and that official gets $9,000 a year. I think the Senate would be making a mistake to take a backward step. If the four gentlemen who constitute the Federal Farm Loan Board fixed this salary at $6,000 it means that they think they ought to have a $6,000 man, and they picked an experienced, cultivated, educated man to fill the position. He is discharging the duties satisfactorily, and he is doing a great work there in organizing the board.

I, in a way, resent an attempt to do anything that might affect the policy of the Federal Farm Loan Board. It is something that the farmers are interested in; they feel that they have been kept out of it for many years. This Congress has taken the forward step. The right kind of men have been appointed. We yesterday set a precedent by retaining the salary at $10,000 as fixed by the original act. I do not think we ought to give the secretary of the board the same salary that we give the chief of the bond division who is under that secretary. I think the committee has made a mistake. No doubt it did it honestly, but I think the Senate ought to correct it promptly.

I therefore offer the amendment to increase the salary to $6,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this man was not appointed as an expert. The act allows the board to appoint such experts as they may think necessary. This man was not appointed as an expert; he was appointed as secretary to the board, and his salary, as I said yesterday, is more than that of an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. The committee fixed his salary about on a par with that of other secretaries who perform similar service done by secretaries of boards. I wish to hasten this bill as far as possible. There has been a great deal of discussion over this matter. I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator might have gone further and said if we adopt the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia we would pay the secretary of the bureau a higher salary than the secretary of a department.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, when the Farm Loan Board was established originally it was established as an independent board, as I said yesterday, and then later it seemed wise, in order to bring it closer to the Treasury Department, to make it a bureau in the Treasury Department, and to make the Secretary of the Treasury a member ex officio of the board; and that was done.

It is stated that Mr. Flannagan was not appointed as an expert, but was appointed as secretary. In appointing Mr. Flannagan as secretary and getting the services of an expert the board has acted economically. If this salary is put at $3,000, the board will have to hire a $3,000 man and then employ Mr. Flannagan, or some one else who knows the subject, as an advisor.

In the Federal Reserve Board the secretary not only receives $9,000 a year but he has an assistant who receives $7,500 a year. The secretary of the Federal Reserve Board occupies the same relation to the Federal reserve act that Mr. Flannagan occupies toward the farm-loan act.

I was personally introduced to Mr. Flannagan by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. The Senator from Virginia has known Mr. Flannagan all his life, and he vouched for him to me. Mr. Flannagan worked with me on the farm-loan act without compension of any sort, and paid his own expenses in Washington for a year. Then, when the joint committee was established by statute and was given an appropriation of $10,000, Mr. Flannagan was made its secretary.

There is no man in the United States who knows the farm-loan act as intimately as Mr. Flannagan does. Mr. Flannagan is an expert on financial matters. When the Federal reserve act was under consideration he was invited to testify as an expert before the House Committee on Banking and Currency, and also before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] recommended Mr. Flannagan as a member of the Federal Reserve Board. He later asked me to go with him to see the President and recommend Mr. Flannagan as a member of the Farm Loan Board, and later I think he recommended Mr. Flannagan as secretary of the Farm Loan Board. I read an extract from a confidential letter written by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] regarding Mr. Flannagan. He said:

> I have known Mr. Flannagan for many years, and not only hold him in high esteem as a friend, but I entertain a very high opinion of his ability and capacity. When he left Virginia many years ago I considered him the best equipped bank officer in the State. I do not know a man who in my judgment is better equipped, or even so well equipped, as Mr. Flannagan is for a position on this Federal Farm Loan Board. He was born and raised in my home county. He and his father before him have been my warm friends from boyhood. I have had the fullest opportunity to know all about his character, habits, attainments, and ability. If the rural-credit system is to be made a success, it must be through just such men as Mr. Flannagan. I have no hesitation in recommending him in the most unreserved manner.

It was said on the floor yesterday—I do not know whether it got in the RECORD or not—that Mr. Flannagan is just an ordinary secretary. He is decidedly not an ordinary secretary. He is a man who knows banking and currency and finance intimately. He is a real expert. He has worked over the farm-loan act as no other man has. He knows every part of it. He knows the relation of one part to another.

The idea of the Appropriations Committee acting on their information, if they really had it, that he is just an ordinary secretary points to the vice of this whole system. Here is a Farm Loan Board and a farm-loan system set up by the Senate and the House and the President. It is provided that there shall be a board to run it, and that that board shall select such assistants as it needs, and when the board has been in operation only a few months the Committee on Appropriations, the members of which do not pretend to be particularly skilled in banking and currency or with the farm-loan act, on their meager information, information so meager that it is not even reported in the report of their proceedings, say that the salary of the secretary should be cut from $6,000 to $3,000. That merely shows that this is not the proper way to treat the board or the act.

Expert knowledge of banking and economics and law and general office management are required. The four members of a Farm Loan Board tour the country, as they are required to do by the act; and from the time they were appointed up to a month ago the entire direction of the office was under Mr. Flannagan. He has from 1,200 to 2,000 letters to handle every day. He attends to the office management. He is the one who had to provide the technical system and to get out the circulars of information that were required by the act, and he has done it.

If the Senate, following the lead of the Appropriations Committee, reduces this salary it will simply mean under the act that they will have to hire a stenographer to act as secretary and pay him $3,000, it may be more than he is worth, and get the benefit of Mr. Flanagan's services or that of some other expert by paying him a higher salary.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator if the board has by any rule or resolution assigned an annual salary to the secretary?

Mr. HOLLIS. It has not. The board is simply employing men temporarily. No man is hired by the board except by the month.

Mr. THOMAS. What is Mr. Flannagan's age?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not know. I know that he worked with me for two years on the farm-loan act, nights and at all times, and he had all the activities of an able-bodied man. I never asked him how old he was.

Mr. THOMAS. I asked the question because it has been said that he is a man of advanced years.

Mr. HOLLIS. He is not a young man, but I do not know how old he is.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the amendment of the committee does not reflect on Mr. Flannagan in the least. It proposes to fix the salary of the secretary of the board, and that is all it does. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] has been referred to. The truth of what he said about this man no one can doubt; but if the Senator from Virginia were here, I know him so well that I have no idea he would agree to any such salary as is proposed in the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I made a few remarks yesterday in answer to a question by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] as to what salary Mr. Flannagan had been receiving before. I know Mr. Flannagan. While he is a Virginian, he has been for a number of years a resident of Montclair, N. J., very close to my home town. I know him very well. I know that his reputation stands very high among banking men and in many banking circles.

I can state this fact, and I know it to be a fact, that when president of a bank—I can not just recall the name of the bank—in the city of New York he was receiving a salary of $12,000. I mention this to show his standing in the city of New York among banking men and in New Jersey. At the same time he was employed as president of another organization or corporation, and receiving a salary from it as well. He was considered an exceptionally efficient gentleman in that direction. Matters of health involved a cessation of obligations at that time.

Whether the salary proposed is too much or not is left for the judgment of the Senate to determine, but I do feel that I would be far short of my duty, knowing him as I do and knowing his general reputation and the estimation in which he is held in the State of New Jersey, did I not mention this fact.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that there is no Senator who will take the time to examine this appropriation bill and compare the salaries paid to employees in the other departments of the Government who can justify the payment of $6,000 to the secretary of the board. If the members of the board do not understand the intent of the law and can not manage its affairs and are dependent upon the wisdom of Mr. Flannagan, the secretary, then we did wrong yesterday in providing a salary of $10,000 to each member of the board, and we ought to reconsider our action and pay the salary provided for the board to Mr. Flannagan and reduce the salary of the members of the board.

Mr. President, we pay the Assistant Treasurer of the United States $3,600 a year. The highest-paid chief clerk in any of the departments of the Government is $3,600. The salary of the chief clerks runs from $2,000 to $3,600, according to the amount and importance of the work they do. The committee, in considering the salary to be paid to the secretary of this board, took into consideration what we were paying to employees in other departments, men who are doing work at least as important as that in which he is engaged.

I wish to say now that there are chief clerks of divisions in the departments who are receiving $2,500 who have just as much work and just as much responsibility as the secretary of this board will have. You can not justify a salary of $6,000, Mr. President.

Another thing, if the members of the board had in the first place been required to submit to the Committee on Appropriations an estimate of the amount to be paid to the secretary of the board, I know the Appropriation Committee of the House of Representatives would not have allowed $6,000 for the place. I also know the Senate committee would have objected. As long as it remains at $6,000, how are we going to refuse to increase the salaries of the chief clerks in the other departments of our Government?

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. CHILTON. What does the Senator say to the proposition that the secretary of the Federal Reserve Board gets $9,000? Does not the Senator recognize that there is a distinction? Does he think there ought to be less ability and experience on the part of the secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board than there is in administering the Federal reserve act?

Mr. SMOOT. There is a great deal of difference and never will be as much responsibility. The work of the two boards are not to be compared.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator, of course, can say there is; but I think even with his ability he would have a great deal of difficulty in convincing me that there is. I should like to hear him try it.

Mr. SMOOT. I would not undertake to convince the Senator, but I want to say to the Senate that there is a great deal of difference in the responsibility and work of the two boards. The members of the Federal Reserve Board receive $12,000, and there is a reason for this large salary. The fact that that board has the whole financial system of the Government under its control was considered in fixing the salary. Not only does it have the finances of the Government to direct but their action in directing the same may affect the finances of the world.

There is just as much difference between the two boards, Mr. President, in the responsibilities and the duties of the board as there is between some of the bureaus of our departments and the departments themselves.

I could not be justified in voting for more than $3,000 for the salary of the secretary of the board, and the Committee on Appropriations decided it could not justify any greater amount, if we intend in the future not to pay greater salaries to employees of one department of the Government than to another.

It is entirely with the Senate as to what they shall do. If they want to single out one man in one bureau and pay him twice as much as is done for work of a similar nature by men in other bureaus of the Government, then vote for the salary of $6,000. But if the Senate wants to have justice done between the employees of the Government it will vote for the salary of $3,000 provided for in the bill, as reported by the committee.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is a very distinguished and a very experienced member of the Committee on Appropriations. His inability to distinguish between the duties of the secretary of the Farm Loan Board and the chief clerk of some bureau in a department indicates the very reason why Congress should not leave the salaries to be fixed at the outset by the Committee on Appropriations. The act treats the whole matter from an entirely different standpoint and for the very reason that the Committee on Appropriations is one that has practical hard sense but is not supposed to be gifted with very much imagination.

In inaugurating an important system of this kind it is possible that in some cases high salaries may be paid. My fear is that the salaries paid will be too low and the system will not have a fair chance. My criticism of the Farm Loan Board up to the present is that they have not hired enough men or good enough men to do the work; that they have been somewhat cramped. They have tried to go very carefully, and I think they have gone carefully.

The secretary of the Federal Reserve Board does not begin to occupy so important a position relative to the country as does the secretary of the Farm Loan Board. In the first place, the Federal Reserve Board do not run any banks; they do not issue any bonds; they do not have to perform any one of the manifold duties which the Farm Loan Board have to perform. The Federal Reserve Board found the national banks—75,000 of them—all in existence, all running, with their officers, but the Farm Loan Board have to create a system; they have got to pick out officers and establish 12 Federal land banks. They therefore need the very best help and the very best advice they can get. The idea of comparing the secretary of a board like that with a chief clerk of some bureau of the Government is entirely outside of the field of argument.

I feel that the Appropriations Committee has undertaken to administer the farm-loan act itself, and that, too, without information, as was shown by their reference yesterday to Mr. Flannagan as just an ordinary secretary. One would think, therefore, that he is merely a stenographer, who has shown a little executive ability. That shows the lack of ability on the part of the Appropriations Committee to appreciate the situation.

I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] will be adopted.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, what are the special duties of the secretary of the Farm Loan Board?

Mr. HOLLIS. The secretary of the Farm Loan Board, in the first place, while the members were investigating the farm-loan needs of the country, had to establish the office curriculum; he had to send out the circulars and forms to farmers' associations throughout the country telling what the farm-loan act was. He has had to answer the correspondence, which is voluminous in amount, some 1,200 to 2,000 letters a day. He has had to formulate a plan for issuing farm-loan bonds and to do the thousand other things in an executive capacity that the board have to pass on in their official capacity. He is the right-hand man of the members of the Farm Loan Board.

The members of the Farm Loan Board, so far as I am informed, had not made a study of the farm-loan act. They were men who had been selected because of their experience and ability as shown in other directions, but they were not any of them men who had had to do intimately with the farm-loan act. I know that they would have been at a great loss if they had not had the services of a man who was intimately acquainted with the act to guide them.

Mr. OLIVER obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to interrupt the Senator for just a moment to say, in order to see whether he agrees with the statement——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] has the floor.

Mr. OLIVER. I will postpone taking the floor until the Senator from Florida shall have concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. What I desired to say was merely in line with the answer of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] to the question propounded to him by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] as to the duties and work of the secretary of the Farm Loan Board. I would remind the Senator from New Hampshire, also, that the correspondence in the office is enormous. I have been told that they have received as many as a million inquiries with regard to this act; how it can be put into operation; the methods whereby the farm-loan associations may be organized; the steps to be taken in order that the people of the country may avail themselves of the credit facilities afforded by the act, and so forth. There are questions embodied in inquiries coming to the secretary, which go to the very gist and meaning of the operation of the act. People will inquire from one part of the country as to the steps necessary to be taken there to form local associations, as to the details of their organization, and the requirements generally of the board respecting the steps to be taken in order that the benefits of the act may be enjoyed. Those questions are answered by the secretary of the board. I know that, because every day I get letters from various parts of the country asking questions of me as to what effect this will have, as to whether this can be done, whether that can be done, and various other things under the act. I have frequently referred those letters to the secretary of the board, and he is called upon to answer those inquiries, and also to send out and distribute the literature on the subject. In addition to that, he prepared Senate Document No. 500, which is the farm-loan act annotated by him, and carefully prepared, so as to be in the most useful form.

I merely wanted to suggest that to the Senator from New Hampshire as somewhat enlarging upon his answer to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Florida know that all those questions which are asked are incorporated in the pamphlet the board is sending out to everybody. They have been sending that pamphlet out to my constituents—just one pamphlet.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely; but there are questions asked regarding that pamphlet.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the secretary is doing all that, what is the board doing?

Mr. FLETCHER. The board have a great deal to do with organizing this whole system. In the first place, they had to divide the country into 12 districts; that has been done. They then had to locate those banks, and that has been done. They have to select the officers and the five directors for those banks. They have also to select appraisers throughout the country, so many for each State. They have a thousand and one things to do to establish the system and to put it into operation.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, when the subcommittee which had charge of this bill entered upon its duties the members of that committee were confronted by requests from every department of the Government for increases of salaries, and particularly for increases of salaries of men holding positions corresponding exactly to this one, very few of whom are in receipt of as high salaries as that fixed by the committee for this secretary. The subcommittee was unanimous in recommending the reduction of this salary from $6,000 to $3,000; and, if I am not mistaken, I think the committee was unanimous in sustaining that action of the subcommittee. There was some division in the subcommittee, as well as in the full committee, with regard to the salaries of the members of the board because of those salaries having been fixed by statute, but there was no difference of opinion as to the salary of the secretary. The committee decided that, although the increases of salaries demanded were in many instances justified, on account of the condition of the Treasury they would grant no increases.

I tell you, Mr. President, that the Senate, if it fixes this salary at above $3,000, will be making a mere pretense of any attempt at economy in the consideration of this bill, because there are thousands of employees covered by this bill who are much more deserving of higher salaries than is the secretary of the Farm Loan Board. I hope the committee will be sustained in this one attempt at economy.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in relation to this matter. I know the gentleman who is occupying the position of secretary to the Farm Loan Board; he is a very able man; but it seems to me we have reached that period in the affairs of our Government when it has become absolutely necessary that we should economize. As a usual rule, when a business is running behindhand, instead of even keeping salaries at the rate which employees have previously been receiving, there is a tendency to reduce the salaries. That is true in all business transactions; and I do not see any reason why it should not obtain as to Government transactions.

In committee I favored the payment of $10,000 for the salaries of the members of the board, although originally I was opposed to it. I voted for that rate of salary yesterday only upon the ground that these gentlemen had, under the law which provided for $10,000 salaries, left their homes and left their business for long periods of time, expecting to occupy these places, and that consequently they should receive the salaries which they really entered into a contract with the Government to receive. When, however, it comes to fixing the salaries of men in the first instance, at least in view of the present condition of the Treasury, I feel that it is our duty to be as economical as we reasonably can be. I believe, in view of the present condition of the Treasury, a fair compensation for this officer is $3,000. For that reason, it seems to me, if we are going to economize at all, that we must begin at some place. It may be that it is disagreeable for one to do it; it is certainly disagreeable for me to do it, but, nevertheless, we have got a duty to perform here, and, so far as I am concerned, I feel that we ought to perform that duty and support the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations to fix this salary at $3,000 per annum.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when this bill was under consideration by the committee we were told that we must be economical in view of the condition of the Treasury, and the committee endeavored to follow out that injunction on the part of the majority members of the committee, who have a more direct interest perhaps in this matter than have the minority.

It will be recalled, Mr. President, that two or three days ago I called attention to the salary of the superintendent of the Botanic Garden, a man with great responsibilities, a man of great experience and fitness for the place, who is getting the meager salary of $2,000 a year. The salary was estimated by the Treasury Department at a higher rate, but I was deterred from pressing that matter in committee upon the plea that we must not increase salaries this year, or must not agree to large salaries this year. I called attention to it in the Senate, and Senators on both sides of the Chamber agreed with me that the increase should be made, but contended that, unfortunately, this was not a good time to do it. I therefore did not press the amendment which I had offered and submitted to the committee.

Now, Mr. President, if the secretary to a commission is to receive more than $3,000 a year, I shall offer the amendment to which I have referred when the bill gets to the Senate, and shall do everything in my power to see that an adequate salary—at least a decent salary—is given to that man, who is deserving certainly of as much pay as a secretary to a commission can possibly be entitled to.

What is true of that item of the bill will be equally true as to other items of the bill. There is no reason why one man should be singled out and given an exorbitant salary while the claims of other men who are underpaid should be ignored on the ground of the necessity for practicing economy because of the condition of the Public Treasury.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

So Mr. CHILTON's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the action of the Senate on the salary of the secretary of the board indicates their desire not to have large salaries paid, and no doubt the Farm Loan Board will take notice of the vote and govern themselves accordingly. I am afraid, however, that if the action of the Senate stands as the Appropriations Committee has recommended, that action will be misunderstood. There is no movement that I know of to attack the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal reserve act in any such way, to interfere with the authority of the Federal Reserve Board to employ their assistants and experts as they think wise, and to pay them such salaries as they think are deserved. I know that some of the Members on this side were governed in their votes on the last motion by their desire to economize, and some of them were governed by other considerations.

The Farm Loan Board came before Congress and asked for $400,000 in this bill to carry on their necessary work. They said frankly that they did not know how much of that it would take, and nobody can tell how much it will take, because it is a new business; it is an untried country; and they have asked for what they thought they should have. The House of Representatives cut that request from $400,000 to $300,000, but otherwise left the farm-loan act as it was originally, without undertaking to dictate to the Farm Loan Board as to the officers they should have and the officers they should not have, or the salaries they should pay.

If this amendment is agreed to as it has been perfected, it will result in saddling on the Farm Loan Board a publicity agent for one year from the 1st of next July whether they want a publicity agent or not. It will saddle on them the chief of a bond division at $3,000 a year, whether they want him or not, and a certain number of clerks and stenographers that may be needed or may not be needed.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the Senator mean to say that the Farm Loan Board will be compelled to employ these officials simply because their salaries are appropriated for in the appropriation bill? I rather think not.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think if they have any heed to their future appropriations they will follow very strictly the rule that the Appropriations Committee has laid down for them here. I certainly should if I were on the board.

Mr. OLIVER. If it is good policy for them to spend this money, no doubt it will be spent; but there is certainly nothing to compel them to employ a publicity agent unless that publicity is necessary for the transaction of the business. I think, however, they will find that these officials are necessary, and they will spend the money.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, thinks so, or he undoubtedly would not have favored it. The point is that the Appropriations Committee ought not to assume, four months after the establishment of this board, to run their business for them. It was not intended by Congress that they should.

Mr. OLIVER. If the Senator will allow me again to interrupt him——

Mr. HOLLIS. I will.

Mr. OLIVER. I will state, for the information of the Senator, that all of these positions were inserted by the committee at the suggestion and upon the request of the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. HOLLIS. There is nothing in the record to show that. My information is that that is not the way it came up; that the Farm Loan Board were asked to produce a list of the officials and assistants and salaries, and they did so.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. HOLLIS. They stated that this was a temporary list; that none of them were hired by the year; that they were all hired by the month, and that there would likely be changes. That is what I understand to be this case.

Mr. OLIVER. I was present at the meeting when they appeared, and, of course, they submitted this list in response to a request from the committee. They stated that these officials or employees were the ones for whom they had arranged; and in accordance with that the committee provided for these positions, but reduced some of the salaries.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong this discussion. We went through it all yesterday. I want the Senate to understand just the effect of the committee amendment, however. The effect of it is that after the Farm Loan Board has been in office four months the Appropriations Committee undertakes not only to cut down the appropriation asked for, and the appropriation made by the House, but to legislate on certain offices and certain salaries, before the Farm Loan Board has had a fair trial. The members of the board were inexperienced. They had not been before Congress before, and they very likely did not give to the committee full information. I ask that the amendment may be rejected, so that the provision of the House may stand, and that the board may be left for one year to work out the provisions and objects and purposes of the farm-loan act as Congress originally intended.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I was very much surprised to hear the Senator from New Hampshire say that this was a veiled attack on the Farm Loan Board, when nothing was further from the truth.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I did not say it was. I said I thought it might be so construed; but I made no charge of the kind.

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon, then.

I want to say, Mr. President, that we went into this matter fully. We took no action until we had these gentlemen before us, talked to them in confidence, and conferred with them; and we took this action for what purpose? They told us they had appointed their office force. That was about as far as they had gone. Then we asked them for a list of the officers and their salaries; and when we found that their salaries were all out of proportion to the salaries of the Assistant Secretary of State, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and the Assistant Secretaries of the great departments of this Government, we made the salaries of the officers of the Farm Loan Board conform to the salaries of other officers of the great departments of this Government, and it was our duty to do so.

The idea that any man on the committee wants to cripple the Farm Loan Board is preposterous. There are as good friends of the Farm Loan Board on the Committee on Appropriations as the Senator from New Hampshire himself; and we desired to do nothing whatever to cripple that board.

Why, Mr. President, we knew that those gentlemen—excellent gentlemen, splendid men—were strangers to Washington, and to appropriations, and to the salaries that other officers here were getting. They came before us fairly and honestly and spoke to us like fair men, expressing their ignorance of these matters. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that if the board knew, as we knew, the salaries that were given—they so expressed themselves—they would not have fixed these salaries at the figures they did. Why, sir, if they had known that the Chief of the Bond Division of the Treasury Department was getting only $2,000, do you tell me that those four men would have appointed a man at $3,900?

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the trouble is that the committee made exactly the mistake that I indicated a little while ago. The clerk in charge of the Bond Division in the Treasury Department has no such duties as the man who will look after issuing the farm-loan bonds, billions of them. He has nothing of the kind to do. His duties are entirely technical and administrative, and are not at all in the line of constructive work of this kind.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I know that it is the same name—the same office.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is it exactly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suppose that when there are any bonds for sale in the Treasury, he will have the same thing to do. In fact, this man will not have much to do. I believe these bonds will sell themselves. I do not believe this man will have to go up and down the country hawking bonds. I think all he will have to do will be simply to sit in his office there and do an administrative act, because I believe these will be the best bonds on the market, and they will sell like hot cakes.

Mr. President, I resent the idea that this committee were in any way trying to cripple the Farm Loan Board. We were sitting there trying to legislate in behalf of the taxpayers of the country who will have to pay this money; and we did not believe that at this time, with $300,000,000 deficit staring us in the face, we ought to be extravagant. We were perfectly satisfied that this board, if they knew what other officers were getting in the different departments, would have fixed the salaries of their employees on the same standard; and it was practically admitted, in talking to us, that they did not know about these things.

So far as the appropriation of $250,000 is concerned, we asked them about that. We wanted to give them everything they needed. They do not know—it is impossible for them to tell—how much money they need; so we made it $250,000. If they need more, all they will have to do is to come here with a request for a deficiency appropriation, and they will get it. If they need $150,000 or $200,000 more in the deficiency bill, the Committee on Appropriations will be glad to give it to them. We want to give them such amount of money as they need; but nobody knows; they could not tell themselves within $50,000 or $100,000 of how much they will need. So we concluded that we would give them a lump sum of $250,000 to spend in their discretion as they thought best. Then, if there is a deficiency, they can come back, and they will get it without any trouble.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just one word.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] intimates that we are dealing with this board differently than we have with other boards, or differently than we have with other bureaus of this Government; but we are not. Whenever there has been a bureau created in the Government service, it has always been created in exactly the same way that this board was created. The first appropriation bill passed after the creation of a bureau with a lump-sum appropriation to begin operation has provided for specific salaries, just the same as we have done for the Federal Farm Loan Bureau in this bill.

We have not dictated to the board. We have not interfered with any rights of the board. We have no idea of crippling the board in any way. As I stated yesterday, when the question of reducing the appropriation from $300,000 to $250,000 was being considered, one of the subcommittee asked one of the members of the board, "Is it possible for you to get along with $250,000 for the coming year?" He frankly admitted that perhaps it would be, and no doubt it will be possible for them to do it; and it was upon that statement that we reduced the amount. Not only that, but in considering the matter after the members of the board left the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee decided that upon the answer of the member we would make the amount $250,000, but that if there was a deficiency Congress would be in session again before the time expired for expending the whole of the money, and it would take care of whatever deficiency there was in a deficiency appropriation bill.

That is the case as it really happened, Mr. President, and I sincerely trust that the amendment of the committee will be agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong the discussion at all; but I really believe that the House provision is preferable to the Senate provision, everything considered, in connection with this item covering the Federal Farm Loan Bureau. That leaves it open, as the Senator from New Hampshire has said, for the board to arrange their affairs and adjust their work and engage such employees as they need, as the circumstances and conditions may warrant. They need not pay $3,000 if they can get a good, capable man to do the work for less, and so on. But just as an instance, it seems to me the committee is short-sighted in providing in this amendment that three clerks must be employed at $720 each—that is to say, clerks in this important bureau, attending to duties which must require first-class ability, at $60 a month—and then one at $600. What sort of a clerk do you suppose is going to be of any help to any board anywhere that you can get for $50 a month? Then there are these stenographers, three of them, at $720 a year.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, they fixed those salaries themselves at $720.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the committee's recommendation in this amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am talking about what the board furnished us. They furnished us a list of their clerks—one of them at $600. We did not disturb that.

Mr. FLETCHER. They can not get very good clerks very long at that figure.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, that is the figure at which they fixed the salary.

Mr. FLETCHER. But those are all temporary employees.

Mr. OVERMAN. We did not touch that.

Mr. FLETCHER. You put it in the law. You have fixed it. You have limited it by this act for the next year so that they must employ three clerks at $720 each and one at $600.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to be in error about this matter. If the Senator will read the section, he will see this language.

For salaries and expenses under the Federal Farm Loan Board, created by the act approved July 17, 1916, including the actual necessary traveling expenses of the members of the board and such salaries, fees, and expenses as are authorized by said act—

That is in the second paragraph.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know; but I am talking about the first paragraph.

Mr. OVERMAN. The first paragraph only fixes the office force that they have now. It does not attempt to interfere with the salaries of any other offices of any kind.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that perfectly well. It fixes the office force that they now have. They have said that it is a temporary force. They have said that they do not know when they may need changes. The employees at present are only employed by the month; but you are putting it in the law so that they will be obliged in the next year to employ such clerks as they need; three of them, say, at $720 each, and one at $600; and then you provide for one stenographer at $1,200, seven at $1,000—I do not complain of that; that seems to me to be fair—but four at $900 each. I doubt if you can get proper stenographers, stenographers capable of doing this work, for that compensation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, let me interrupt the Senator again. Here is what they furnished us. The Senator complains of the clerks being paid $720:

Mr. Francis W. Weeks, Miss Caroline Collins, Mr. Albert W. Finch, $720.

They fixed it themselves. We did not change these lower salaries.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know they fixed them at that figure to begin with.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the way they fixed the salaries themselves.

Mr. FLETCHER. To begin with, yes; but you are putting in the law a provision requiring them to employ these people for the next year at this figure, and that is too low; that is not enough. Any stenographer who is thoroughly capable ought to get more than $60 a month.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I assume that my friend the Senator from Florida knows that there are thousands of stenographers in the departments who do not get more than that. I say "thousands"; I think I am within bounds when I say that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is within bounds.

Mr. FLETCHER. If so, they are not doing the work that the stenographers in this bureau will be required to do. This is technical work of a very important character and requiring skill and ability.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think if the Senator will look at this list of salaries that they sent us he will find that we have not changed those at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is possible that at the start they have been able to employ people temporarily at low salaries.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLETCHER (continuing). But I do say that to limit this board to those figures for the next year for the employees they need is not fair to the board. I do not believe they can get capable work, such as they ought to have, for that figure.

Mr. CLARK and Mr. OLIVER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, these salaries are exactly the same as the salaries that are fixed for clerks of the same class in all departments of the Government; and why the Farm Loan Board should be authorized to pay more than other branches of the Government I can not understand.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator will not say that all stenographers in the other departments of the Government get only $60 a month.

Mr. OVERMAN. All the stenographers here do not get $60 a month.

Mr. FLETCHER. You have one stenographer at $1,200 a year and seven at $1,000 a year, which I say is fair.

Mr. OLIVER. There are stenographers in this list that get more than that. The stenographers to the members of the board, for instance, get more, and I do not see why the Farm Loan Board should be allowed more. Besides, Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. You have here four at $900.

Mr. OLIVER. We are giving them in this bill exactly what they asked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If they could take this chorus, they would be worth more than $60 a month. [Laughter.] One at a time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have said all that I care to say on the subject.

Mr. CLARK. I wanted to ask the Senator a question, in view of one of his statements. I understood the Senator to say that if we agreed to this amendment as reported by the committee it would compel the employment of these clerks and stenographers, and so forth, at the salaries herein fixed.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I do not say you compel the employment of them; but if they need these stenographers, then you limit them to this pay.

Mr. CLARK. Then my question will not be asked, because it would be of no use. I understood the Senator to say that we were compelling them to employ these clerks and stenographers at this salary.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I say you are compelling them to pay only $60 a month for three stenographers, if they need those, and $50 dollars a month for one of the clerks.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator mean that under this bill they could not pay more than $60 for a stenographer? What is the purpose of the second paragraph of the section?

Mr. FLETCHER. I say that they are limited to the employment of four stenographers at $900 each and three at $720.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all. There is no limit at all.

Mr. CLARK. I can not agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the language of the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish the Senator would show me where they are limited.

Mr. FLETCHER. Why put it in the bill, then?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, we fix the salaries of those that are already employed, giving them the power hereafter to employ as many as they think necessary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Why put in this amendment then, that this board are allowed—for that is what it means—one clerk of class 4 at $900, three at $720, and one at $600? Why put that in there, if they can employ clerks without regard to that provision? And then why put in there a provision that they are allowed to employ one clerk and stenographer at $1,200, seven at $1,000 each, four at $900 each, and three at $720 each? If they can go on and employ stenographers at salaries to suit themselves without regard to that provision in the law, why put it in there?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. I will say to the Senator that if he will turn to page 37 he will find, in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, that it is specified that he shall have "three assistant secretaries at $5,000 each, clerk to the Secretary $3,000, executive clerk $2,400, stenographer $1,800, three private secretaries, one to each Assistant Secretary, at $1,800 each," and so on.

In all the departments of the Government we specify, as far as possible, the number of clerks that shall be employed by each department and in each bureau, and specify the salary that shall be paid to each. We are only doing the same thing in reference to the Farm Loan Board. Why should they be placed upon a different plane from all the other departments or bureaus of the Government?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is precisely what I have been contending for—that you have specified and expressed these figures and these items and these clerks, and that means they are limited thereby.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. FLETCHER. But the Senator sees fit to cite the other provision, the second paragraph of the amendment, and to present the thought that the board is not confined at all to these provisions with reference to these stenographers and clerks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that if the board had all their employees engaged that it intends to have for the next year, and all had been specified, there would have been no lump-sum appropriation provided for in this bill; but in paragraph 2 the amendment provides for a lump sum, and out of that lump sum the board can employ whatever experts, stenographers, and clerks they may desire for the coming year within the appropriation. If they had the force completed, the same as the other departments of the Government are, there would have been no lump sum, but every clerk and every employee of the board would have been specifically provided for, as the clerks in other bureaus or departments of the Government are legislated for.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word on the action of the committee in reducing the lump-sum appropriation from $300,000 to $250,000. In the House hearing Mr. Norris, of the board, estimated that their annual expenses in the office would be from $125,000 to $150,000. It will be observed that the office expenses, which include the office force, are only $67,000, and that is somewhere between $60,000 and $70,000 more than they need.

I think it would be a great mistake to leave any board with a lump-sum appropriation after the board is established. This is nothing different from what has always been done upon the establishment of every board. We have in the nature of things to make a lump-sum appropriation until they get started, and after they get in operation they are required, and ought to be required, to furnish an estimate, not leaving them do as they please but requiring them to submit an estimate and let Congress fix the salaries. That has been the uniform practice of Congress, and the Farm Loan Board is not of such dignity rising above all the others as that an exception should be made in this case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when Mr. KERN's name was called). The Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before and withhold my vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is absent from the Senate in the performance of official duty.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I desire to ask if the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have a pair with that Senator. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but I understand from his colleague that if he were present he would vote "yea" upon the pending proposition. I therefore consider myself at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "yea."

So the amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the committee passed over is on page 109, under the heading "Post Office Department," where the committee proposes to strike out the House text down to and including line 19, on page 115, and to insert the matter in italics from line 20, on page 115, to line 4, on page 119.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the amendment ought to be read. I do not think we are in such haste that we ought not to have the amendment read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. On an examination of the RECORD I find that the amendment has already been read, and unless some Senator particularly desires it the reading might be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asked that it be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it has been read, I withdraw the request. I was not aware that the amendment had been read before.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, when this matter came up in the committee I inquired with reference to the paragraph on page 117 providing for a readjustment of the salaries of clerks under this provision. The matter came up in the committee several times and the committee considered it. It was stated that it made no change in existing law except to authorize the Postmaster General to make the adjustments within the limits of $100, as herein provided, instead of $200, as now provided by law. I have looked the matter up as carefully as I could within the time that I have had, and I do not believe that the paragraph ought to remain in the bill.

The paragraph proposes to make a change in the law with reference to the Post Office Department in its conduct. We have a Post Office Committee that is thoroughly familiar with matters of this kind, and that, I think, has now before it the Post Office appropriation bill which is to be passed at this session of Congress. That bill will go into effect just as soon as this bill will go into effect, and, if this change ought to be made, it can be taken care of in that committee, by a committee that is thoroughly familiar with the matter and which can give it all the consideration that is desired.

So I feel constrained to make a point of order against it.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator withhold the point of order?

Mr. JONES. I will withhold the point of order if the Senator from Utah desires.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps it would be just as well at this time for me to explain in as few words as possible what changes from the House bill the Senate amendment makes.

In the past the clerks in the office of the Postmaster General, the First Assistant, the Second Assistant, the Third Assistant, and the Fourth Assistant have been appropriated for separately. Under the Senate amendment all the clerks appropriated for in the Post Office Department come under the head of the Postmaster General; or, in other words, the Postmaster General in the future will assign clerks to the offices of the First Assistant, the Second Assistant, the Third Assistant, and the Fourth Assistant Postmasters General in numbers as he thinks proper, or as the exigencies require. In giving the Postmaster General this power there is no question but that he can get more efficient work and better results and at the same time save money to the Government.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator state that, in making those reductions and increases, the Postmaster General must now either reduce or increase at the rate of $200?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not discussing that question right now, but I will say that under the present law that is the only way he can make them.

Mr. CURTIS. In classes.

Mr. SMOOT. In classes—fourth class, third class, second class, and first class. A fourth-class clerk gets $1,800, a third-class clerk gets $1,600, a second-class clerk gets $1,400, and a first-class clerk gets $1,200.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether the Senator understands my position or not. I make no question about anything in the amendment except that one paragraph.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator to complain only of the one paragraph in the amendment.

Mr. President, the effect of the amendment will be a saving under the current law of $23,280 and a reduction of 31 in the number of employees in the department. That result comes about, Mr. President, by the recognition that has been given to efficient workers by the Postmaster General in the past. Whenever better work has been demonstrated on the part of an employee he has been given a promotion and paid a higher salary. For the last three years there has been a steady decline in the number of employees in the department here at Washington, and every year there has been a decline in the amount appropriated to run the Post Office Department, notwithstanding the increased amount of business that has come to the department by the increase of business in the country.

As to the necessity of the paragraph referred to by the Senator from Washington, I wish to say that the Postmaster General under existing law in making promotions can only make a promotion by granting an increase of salary of $200 in a clerkship of the fourth, third, second, or first class. The proposed provision allows him in case of a demotion to make it with a reduction of salary of the clerk demoted of $100, and in case of a promotion he can increase the salary $100 instead of $200.

I would have no objection to that provision; in fact, I think it a splendid provision to enact into law. Then, wherever an efficient clerk is found and is worthy of an advance of $100 he can receive it without having to wait for a chance to obtain an increase of $200. In case of a demotion it can be $100 instead of $200.

I have here a diagram showing the steady decline of the appropriations made for the Post Office Department in Washington. I have nothing to say in relation to the work of the Post Office Department outside of what we are now appropriating for.

This shows, beginning with July, 1915, a steady decline in not only the number of employees but in the amount of appropriations, notwithstanding, as I said before, the amount of increased work that has come to the department.

Mr. President, I recognize that the paragraph objected to by the Senator from Washington is general legislation upon an appropriation bill and subject to a point of order. The Senator expressed the opinion that the subject could be attended to by the Post Office Appropriation Committee. I do not know whether the Post Office Committee would consider the question or whether it should be considered by that committee, as it affects only the clerks of the Post Office Department here in Washington, and the salary of those clerks is provided for in the legislative appropriation bill. I recognize of course the Post Office Committee could handle the question, but I believe that the Appropriations Committee in handling the legislative appropriation bill is the proper one to legislate upon this subject.

If the Senator from Washington desires that that paragraph shall be stricken from the bill by way of an amendment, I will say now to the Senator rather than to have a point of order made against the amendment entirely I will agree, as far as I can agree as a member of the committee, to strike out from the bill the paragraph on page 117, beginning with line 6 down to and including line 18, but I do hope the Senator will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the Senator from Washington has made a point of order against that part of the amendment.

Mr. JONES. To one paragraph; but it is all one amendment. Then the chairman of the committee can reoffer the other as a separate proposition, and doubtless it will be adopted.

Mr. BRYAN. The point of order of the Senator from Washington has not been withdrawn?

Mr. JONES. No; it has not been withdrawn.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me supplement what the Senator from Utah has said and see if the Senator from Washington will not withdraw his point of order. In the first place, it is doubtful if the point of order is good; but passing that by for the present here is the situation in the post office in Washington: A clerk may be half the time placed on work assigned to a clerk of class 3 and is thereby entitled to receive $1,600 per annum. The other half of the time may be spent on work assigned to a clerk of class 2 at $1,400 per annum. The Postmaster General under the present law has to leave him at $1,400 or advance him to $1,600. This plan only allows him, considering the work balanced through the year as a whole, to fix the salary at $1,500 when it ought to be on an average that amount. It is represented to us that that would mean a saving of a great deal of money to the Government. I can very easily see how the present system would prevent a man entitled to increase of pay from receiving it. Under the plan outlined and under the illustrations given that particular clerk ought to be paid $1,500 a year; but the Postmaster General must keep him underpaid at $1,400 or advance him to the $1,600 rate. It means a great deal to the department.

Furthermore, I will say to the Senator from Washington that the Postmaster General more conspicuously than any other head of a department in Washington has been endeavoring to economize and to so adjust the treatment of the employees of that department as to keep them satisfied, to pay them larger salaries than they have been receiving when they deserved an increase, so that when the new post-office building was opened up here it was done without an increase of the clerical force in Washington. With a big building opened up, with the cooperation of the Post Office Department with the Bureau of Efficiency, they so worked out the matter that it did not cost any more money.

Now, the Postmaster General feels that when men are loyal to him in that way he ought to be allowed to treat them with more consideration than he can do because of limitation of the increase to $200 or nothing. I do not see what possible harm it can do. If I understand the Senator from Washington, that is the only objection he has to the whole amendment.

Mr. JONES. It is the objection I have to that paragraph.

Mr. BRYAN. If we do not do that, we then go back to the text of the House bill, and the saving which is proposed to be made here will be lost. I am sure the Senator from Washington does not desire to bring that about.

The Postmaster General can to-day promote or demote. The only difference is he would have to do it in steps of $200, and here he would be allowed to do it in steps of $100. The whole amendment is in the interest of efficiency in the department; it is in the interest of proper pay for the work done. I am sure if the Senator from Washington had had time to consider it he would not be making the point of order against it. Not only the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations considered this matter, but it was referred by that subcommittee to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and myself to thoroughly consider it, and we did so. We examined the House hearings, where the matter was gone into at considerable length.

I will say, first, that the House committee was favorable to the plan, but did not have time to adopt it. It was there shown that a saving would be made, but pending the time when the bill was considered in the House committee and when the representatives of the department were before the Senate committee the plan had been worked out, and a further saving had been effected. It is poor encouragement to the Post Office Department, when they have done these things, to have the Senate or the other House refuse to recognize the work they have been doing.

The Senator from Washington says that this legislation should go on the Post Office appropriation bill. So it could; but on this bill—the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill—the salaries of the Postmaster General, his assistants, and his clerical force are taken care of.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. JONES addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRYAN. I first yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not carefully looked into this matter, but it struck me at first blush as being an innovation, and I question its advisability; but, as I say, I have not examined it carefully. If we give this authority to the Postmaster General to readjust salaries, shall we not also have to give it to the heads of all the other departments?

Mr. BRYAN. It would be a most excellent thing to do if we did so.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Florida thinks it would be?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the Postmaster General has that authority now. He can demote or promote any clerk in the department, but it must be done $200 at a step; the clerk must be demoted or promoted at the rate of $200 at a time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Postmaster General that authority by law?

Mr. SMOOT. He has that authority by law.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; he can do that now by law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Have the heads of all of the departments authority to demote and to promote at will?

Mr. SMOOT. They have.

Mr. GALLINGER. Notwithstanding that their employees are civil-service employees?

Mr. SMOOT. They have that authority under the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then the civil service does not count for much.

Mr. BRYAN. This only changes it to steps of $100, instead of making him take steps of $200.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Florida a question in connection with the remark he made a moment ago, that this is the proper bill for such legislation, because it is the bill on which the salaries for the employees of this department are made. I want to ask the Senator if this proposition were introduced as a separate measure would it not go to the Post Office Committee?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. JONES. I refer to this particular paragraph.

Mr. BRYAN. No. The Senator from Washington understands that this is for the purpose of making appropriations.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator if a separate measure were introduced giving the Postmaster General certain authority in the demotion or classification of promotion of clerks, and so on, as a legislative proposition would it not go to the Post Office Committee?

Mr. BRYAN. I think not.

Mr. JONES. I think it would.

Mr. BRYAN. I am sure it would not.

Mr. President, I want to read to the Senator from Washington, from the hearings before the Senate committee, just a paragraph from the testimony of Mr. Denning, the chief clerk of the Post Office Department. A committee was appointed by the Post Office Department upon the question of whether their force was well enough paid in comparison with those engaged in like work in private employment. A committee of three visited New York and Philadelphia. They went into the offices of some of the great companies like the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and others. They were under instruction as to the post-office employees to adjust their pay 20 to 30 per cent higher than the pay being given to men in private employ doing the same character of work. They selected the companies which they visited for the reason that their hours were the same as the hours in which the employees of the Post Office Department were employed. They want now to pay more money—20 to 30 per cent more—and they have drawn up this plan. They have the cooperation of the employees, which is a valuable thing to have; but if they have to hold a man to $1,400, say, when, according to their own records, he ought to be paid $1,500 by reason of half of his time being spent upon $1,600 work, they are hampered by the law. So the Senator may understand that I am correct in that, Mr. Denning, the chief clerk, says:

> We suggested there legislation that will permit us to pay $100 more or $100 less than the grade fixed. It frequently happens that an employee, based on the standard that we have worked out, will be earning $1,500. It is manifest injustice to him to keep him at $1,400 when, comparing his work with that of other clerks, he is earning and ought to receive $1,500. If we promoted him we would have to pay him $1,600. In other words, he would be placed in the position of receiving more than he was earning. It would help us a good deal if we could have this provision which would authorize us to pay $100 more or less than a grade.

So much for the merits of the proposition, Mr. President.

The Senator from Washington and the Chair will observe that in the text of the House bill numerous references are made to the transfers of clerks from the office of one of the Assistant Postmasters General to that of another. These transfers are indicated in parentheses, and there are a great many of them. That does not occur in the Senate committee amendment. The reason why it does not occur is because by this paragraph we make it unnecessary.

Mr. President, I believe that covers the case as laid before the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in connection with what I have already said, I wish to call attention to the fact that the average salaries of employees between the ages of 20 and 45 have been increased from $1,185 in 1914 to $1,248 in 1916, or $63 per capita in two years. The average increase during the last four years of all employees has been $13.50 a year. That average increase has come about, and yet a saving in the amount appropriated for running the Post Office Department here in Washington has occurred. As I stated before, there has been a reduction of hundreds of employees in the Post Office Department in Washington in the last few years brought about by the adoption of business principles by the Postmaster General in dealing with the clerks of that department. I think we ought to encourage the Postmaster General in the work he has done so well, and I would like to see the same work accomplished in all the departments. The Postmaster General has shown us all what can be done by applying business principles in Government work.

Mr. JONES. Let me ask the Senator if the Postmaster General saw fit to demote one of the employees by $100 under this bill, and sitting beside that employee was another employee who really deserved promotion, there is nothing here to require him to promote that employee, is there?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; there is nothing here to require him to do it, but it authorizes him to do it.

Mr. JONES. But there is nothing to require him to use the money that he has saved by demoting one employee to promote another deserving employee?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the object of the provision.

Mr. BRYAN. That is the whole purpose of it.

Mr. JONES. But it does not say so. It says he may do it, but it does not say that he shall do it.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the present law, I will say to the Senator, the Postmaster General has the power to demote any clerk in the department from one grade to a lower grade, and he has the power to promote any clerk from one grade to another, provided he does not exceed the number of clerks in the particular grade appropriated for; in other words, under the present law, if we appropriate for 54 clerks, the Postmaster General can not promote to that particular grade a clerk if the promotion would bring the number above 54, but he could demote, or if there were a vacancy in that grade he could promote from a lower grade into that higher grade under the present law.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. The language of the bill is that "the unused portion of such salary may be used to increase the salary of any clerk in any class by not exceeding $100 above the salary fixed by law for such class." In the event the Postmaster General advanced this one clerk $100, and should give the clerk $5 of it, what becomes of the other $95?

Mr. SMOOT. I take it for granted that the Postmaster General would use the whole amount saved by the demotion.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then it is a discretionary power with the head of the department, instead of fixing it by an act of Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. Under this provision, if the Postmaster General made any increase at all, it would have to be $100, whilst under the present law, if there is any increase made, it must be $200. So if the clerk were given an increase at all, he would get the entire $100 under this provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator from Utah think that that would be the necessary effect of it—that, for instance, $25 of the amount would not be called an increase and the other $75 be carried to the surplus?

Mr. SMOOT. No; because of the fact that the present law provides that any increase in the case of a clerk shall be in steps of $200. So to-day the Postmaster General could not increase a third-class clerk to a fourth-class clerkship and pay him anything but $1,800, while this provision will allow him to increase or decrease the salaries of clerks in steps of a hundred dollars, instead of $200.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Utah when that provision was placed in the statute giving this authority? Is it an old provision?

Mr. SMOOT. It is an old law, and it has been in force ever since the classification of clerks was made, at the time when the salaries were fixed for the four different classes of clerks.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a delightful provision, so far as favoritism is concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. That authority has long been given to the Postmaster General. I think, as the Senator says, that there may be favoritism under the pending provision; but, even at that, it is better than the present law, because favoritism to-day can be shown by granting an increase of $200, whereas under this provision an increase of only $100 might be allowed.

Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington not to make the point of order against the amendment. I know the provision will save the Government of the United States money, and I am certain that it will not be abused any more than the present law is, and not so much.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Utah explain how it is going to save money?

Mr. SMOOT. Two constructions have been put upon this provision of the bill; but the object was wherever there was a demotion there could be a promotion made to the extent of a hundred dollars instead of $200, and therefore there would be a hundred dollars saved on the promotion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not understand the Senator's mathematics. Under the present law when $200 is taken off one man's salary and given to another man there is no saving. Under this bill if $100 is taken off one man's salary and given to another man I do not see that there will be any saving.

Mr. SMOOT. As I have said, there are different constructions of the wording of the provision. If an increase could not be granted without a demotion, then there would be no saving; but suppose there is a death or a vacancy occurring otherwise in the service? At the present time the Postmaster General can not make a promotion except in steps of $200, but under this provision if a vacancy occurs the Postmaster General can make a promotion to the extent of $100 instead of $200. In that case there will be a saving to the Government of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, I am still dense on that point.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what the result will be if this provision shall be adopted by the Senate and become a law.

Mr. GALLINGER. If there is a vacancy it is filled by the Civil Service Commission, of course; that vacancy does not stand permanently.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator this is how it will work: If a vacancy should happen in a clerkship by death or resignation, then the vacancy is filled by the Civil Service Commission; but the Postmaster General is not compelled to call for a clerk to fill the vacancy occasioned by death. He may promote a clerk from one of the other divisions into the division where the vacancy occurs and then ask for a clerk from the Civil Service Commission to fill the clerkship in the division below. That is the way many of the promotions are made in the departments of the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the idea that it will bring about a saving to the Government is still nebulous in my mind.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems rather strange, I will say to the Senator, to think of such a thing; but this is one of the departments that has accomplished that very thing, and it is so rare in the history of the Government service that I think we ought to encourage the head of any department who will undertake it.

Mr. BRYAN. It has been done in this way: The clerical force has been decreased, or it has not been increased. As I said a moment ago, when the new post-office building was occupied no additional expense was incurred, because clerks were transferred from other divisions of the department.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will simply say that, so far as I am concerned, I am not antagonizing the amendment, because I know very little about it, and I take the word of Senators who know more about it than I do; but when it comes to a question of saving I think I might well quote the words, "It would spoil it if you tried to explain it."

Mr. BRYAN. It is claimed that it will save $23,000 or $24,000 per annum. Now, let me suggest this plan to the Senator from Washington: I am sure it is not the intention of the Postmaster General to promote in less than $100 steps. Furthermore, it is his intention to use whatever money is saved by demotions in granting promotions. If the Senator thinks that the Postmaster General would not do that without positive instruction, we can so change this language as to require him to do it. Of course the reason why it was put as it stands in the amendment was in order not to require him to advance a clerk every time another clerk was demoted, and we ought to be careful to get the language in such shape that that situation can not be brought about; but I believe that the Senator's purpose would be accomplished by changing in line 9 the word "may" to the word "shall"; then in line 10, after the word "class," by inserting the words "entitled thereto." Furthermore, in order to meet the objection of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] that not the whole $100 might be used but a mere fraction of it, we might strike out the word "exceeding" and insert the words "less than." It seems to me that would cure any possible objection to the provision.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Florida that I think I shall not insist upon the point of order, if it is understood that those amendments are to be made. I will say that the modification does not entirely meet my objection. I really do not think this provision ought to go in the bill. We have a law approved August 23, 1912, one section of which reads as follows:

SEC. 4. The Civil Service Commission shall, subject to the approval of the President, establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. Such system shall provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted; it shall also provide a rating below which no employee may fall without being demoted; it shall further provide for a rating below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency. All promotions, demotions, or dismissals shall be governed by provisions of the civil-service rules. Copies of all records of efficiency shall be furnished by the departments and independent establishments to the Civil Service Commission for record in accordance with the provisions of this section: Provided, That in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped, or reduced in rank or salary.

Then there follows a provision for punishing violations of the act. The pending provision may not affect that section, but I am not sure as to that.

Mr. BRYAN. I am sure it does not.

Mr. JONES. I am not sure what effect it may have upon it; but, with the suggestions made by the Senator from Florida and in view of his assurance and the assurances of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I withdraw the point of order. Of course, I am just as much interested in economy and efficiency in the service as are other Senators.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand that, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES. I know that they know more about this matter than I do, because they have given it special consideration; but I do think that it is legislation of such importance that it ought to be considered separately. However, because they have investigated it very carefully and are satisfied that it is in the interest of the service and in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Florida, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. I offer to the amendment reported by the committee the amendment which I have already suggested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 117, line 9, after the word "salary," it is proposed to strike out the word "may" and insert "shall"; in line 10, after the word "class," to insert the words "entitled thereto"; and in the same line, after the word "not," to strike out "exceeding" and insert the words "less than," so as to read:

In making readjustments hereunder, the salary of any clerk in any class may be fixed by the Postmaster General at $100 below the salary fixed by law for such class and the unused portion of such salary shall be used to increase the salary of any clerk in any class entitled thereto by not less than $100 above the salary fixed by law for such class.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is at the top of page 143, to strike out:

To investigate and report upon matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, $72,120.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, while I am a member of the committee, I was unable to attend the hearings or the meetings of the committee when this item was considered.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators interested in this matter, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Jones	Poindexter	Swanson
Bryan	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thomas
Chilton	La Follette	Saulsbury	Thompson
Clapp	Lane	Shafroth	Tillman
Cummins	McLean	Sheppard	Vardaman
Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Warren
Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Ga.	Watson
Gallinger	Norris	Smith, S. C.	Williams
Hollis	Overman	Smoot
Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Stone

Mr. CHILTON. I desire again to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have been requested to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] on account of official business.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. LEE of Maryland, Mr. SHIELDS, and Mr. WADSWORTH answered to their names when called.

Mr. BRADY, Mr. JAMES, Mr. OLIVER, and Mr. NEWLANDS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as I stated a few moments ago, while I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations which considered this bill, I was busy working on another committee and was unable to attend the meetings when this question was up. I should like to have the chairman of the subcommittee having charge of this bill inform the Senate why the provision on the top of page 143 was stricken out. It provides as follows:

To investigate and report upon matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, $72,120.

I find from the reports that this bureau is doing a good and wonderful work and covering a great field. It looks into the care of children; dependent, defective, and delinquent classes; examines the laws of the various States relating to mothers' pensions; also the administration of such laws; inquires into infant mortality, which covers many fields; the child-labor question; amendments to the child-labor laws; the administration of child-labor laws. All these questions are of great importance to the people of this country.

It does seem to me that the item stricken from the bill is of great importance to the bureau. I have read the report of the hearings before the House, and it appears that at said hearings Miss Lathrop and others representing this bureau made a showing which would justify not only the House but the Senate in giving to the bureau the $72,120 for the purposes mentioned in the item; and I should like to have the chairman explain why the item was stricken from the bill.

With the information now on hand, so far as I am personally concerned, I am opposed to the committee amendment, and hope it will be rejected, and that the bureau will be given this $72,120 to carry on the splendid work that it has been doing and will continue to do. There should be no lack of funds for carrying on this vitally important work.

I notice also that the general appropriation in line 21 has been reduced from $95,000 to $58,000. The bureau asked, instead of $95,000, for $173,400 to do the work covered by this appropriation. After a hearing in the House we have the bill coming to the Senate carrying $95,000. That was reduced by the committee, and the bill comes to the Senate carrying $58,000.

I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate to have read the report of the hearings before the House; but I want to say that they are very complete, and in my judgment they justify the bureau in asking for these two appropriations. I hope the action of the committee will not be sustained in reducing it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator look on page 143, line 9?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like very much to hear what the Senator is saying, and we can not hear him on this side on account of the noise in the Chamber.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will examine page 143, line 9, he will notice that in the case of the employment of experts and temporary assistants—I do not know how numerous they are—the compensation is reduced from $8 to $6 per day, so that that will somewhat account for the reduction in line 21. I do not know whether it covers it all or not. Like the Senator from Kansas, I was not present when it was considered.

Mr. CURTIS. I did not have time to look over the estimates to see how many they have and how many experts were asked for, and so I can not tell the Senator how great a reduction will be made on account of the change from $8 to $6 a day; but it would seem to me that it would not make a very great reduction.

Mr. GALLINGER. "Experts and temporary assistants," it will be observed, is the language.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN rose.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield the floor.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator from Florida is going ahead, I will not take up the time; but it seems that the committee has placed the amounts just as they were last year. The amount last year for traveling expenses, per diem, and so forth, was $58,000. I doubt if they have calculated at all the reduction that will come from reducing the salaries to $6 a day in getting at that result.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; the House committee did that. The House committee allowed a per diem of $6, and the House raised it to $8. That explains the difference between $58,000 and $95,000. The committee thought $6 enough.

Mr. KENYON. Does that cover the whole difference in that item?

Mr. BRYAN. That is my understanding of it. The Senate committee put it back as the House committee reported it to the House, to have it in conference, after having read, however, the hearings before the House committee. My understanding is that that is what it is due to.

Mr. KENYON. I do not understand how that could be, because the number of experts and temporary assistants to be employed under this section is optional with the bureau head, apparently. There is no stated number that could be employed.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, well, of course; but then they stated before the committees how many people they had. That explains that item, so far as I understand it.

Now, coming to the item stricken out of the bill at the top of page 143—an appropriation of $72,120 for the Children's Bureau to investigate and report upon matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and especially to investigate the questions of infant mortality—the reasons that induced the committee to strike that out, I think, can be best stated by reading from the House hearings the testimony of Mr. Wood, of the Efficiency Bureau. I will not read it all, but here is the situation which exists now. The Bureau of Health is engaged in this same kind of work. The Bureau of Labor is engaged in the same sort of work. For instance, under the heading "Field investigations," in the Bureau of Health, I find the following:

For investigations of diseases of man and conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof, including sanitation, etc., $250,000.

That is in the sundry civil bill of last year. In this very bill, on page 102, we find the following:

For investigation of rural education, industrial education, and school hygiene, including personal services in the District of Columbia, etc., $45,000.

Then there is an appropriation in the Bureau of Education.

Here is what is said by this member of this board that has been directed to investigate duplication of work in these various bureaus and departments:

Mr. GOOD. I have noticed that the Department of Labor published last year Bulletin No. 162, Vocational Education Survey of Richmond, Va. The Bureau of Education is publishing a similar work of that kind. Have you investigated duplication of that kind?

Mr. WOOD. We have examined the publications of the departments for the past year and found many places where, if there was no real duplication there was at least an overlapping of functions. For example, the Bureau of Education and Health Bureau are both pursuing studies of school hygiene, though not in the same districts. Each is doing work that might be done by the other. Similarly, the Children's Bureau and the Health Bureau both publish bulletins on the care of babies.

Mr. GOOD. That necessitates the keeping in two or more separate bureaus the same character of employees that ought to do the work in one bureau?

Mr. WOOD. The trouble seems to be that the authorizations given to the different bureaus cross or overlap. For example, the Children's Bureau is authorized to investigate anything pertaining to children. That includes children's health and education and various other matters. The Health Bureau is authorized to investigate health, whether of children or adults.

I have just shown that they have a quarter of a million dollars for that.

The Bureau of Education is authorized to investigate questions pertaining to education. Again, the Labor Bureau has always concerned itself with health insurance among laboring men. The Bureau of Public Health has recently taken up health insurance as a health measure. Both have issued publications on that subject.

Mr. GOOD. You have not gone into that?

Mr. WOOD. We have made a partial list of cases in which different bureaus seem to cover the same field, but we came to the conclusion that it would be better to get every bureau to report to us every job it is working on, to index those jobs so that all relating to health would fall in one place, all relating to children in another, etc., and then to go carefully through the index, make note of cases in which there is duplication or overlapping, and bring them, first, to the attention of the various bureaus, in order to get their statements of the case, and then to the attention of Congress. We hope to do that by the next Congress.

So I beg to assure the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Iowa that it is not due to any opposition on the part of the committee to this work being done that this amendment is proposed; but there is no need to have the work done by four or five bureaus. That is the principal reason, or one of the principal reasons, why the committee recommended one year ago that Congress authorize this efficiency staff to go into these various departments and cut out duplications of work. It is done not only here in the work of the Children's Bureau, but it exists in many places, and we have been trying to cut that out.

With $45,000 appropriated here to the Bureau of Health on this last subject, and a quarter of a million dollars more carried in the sundry civil bill upon a general subject covered by each of the departments, and the Department of Labor, under which this bureau is, having an appropriation to do the very identical work, it did seem that it was not necessary to repeat it. Of course, if you let each bureau do the same work, duplication of expenditures, at least, is bound to come, whether duplication of work does or not.

Mr. VARDAMAN and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield first to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the work which was contemplated to be covered by the appropriation which has been stricken out would be the same work which is being done by another department for which an appropriation was made?

Mr. BRYAN. The language I read here explains it. I do not know how better to express it, if the Senator heard it.

Mr. BORAH. I heard the reading; but the difficulty I have in determining the question is whether this appropriation which is asked for by the Children's Bureau covers work which actually would be done by some other department. As much as I am interested in the Children's Bureau, I do not want any duplication there or in any other bureau; but if it is not a duplication, I certainly feel disposed to support the appropriation. Even if it were a duplication, I should rather have the work done by the Children's Bureau, in my judgment, than by the other department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Rather than by the Department of Health?

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, the language is not exactly the same, but I will read it to the Senator. Here is an appropriation in the Bureau of Education:

For investigation of rural education, industrial education, and school hygiene, including personal services—

And so forth. Under that language they make the same sort of an investigation.

Mr. BORAH. Well, do they?

Mr. BRYAN. That is what this bureau tells us.

Mr. BORAH. The head of the Children's Bureau contends that that is incorrect; that it is not the same kind of work; that it is not the same work at all; and some of us are a little at a loss to know whether it is the same work or not, because we have to rely upon the statements of those who are doing it, and they seem to differ. I am disposed to rely upon the statements of Miss Lathrop.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I suppose naturally the Senator would be.

Mr. BORAH. Not because I would make comparisons as to veracity, but because she seems to know whereof she is speaking.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; she does.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that there were exhibited before the committee a document gotten out by the Bureau of Health and one gotten out by the Child Labor Bureau that looked very similar to me. I did not have time, of course, to examine them in detail, but it looked as though they were doing the same kind of work. The headings were the same, and it looked like exactly the same work.

I want to say to the Senator from Idaho that we have instructed the Efficiency Board to inquire into this matter and report on it thoroughly. If other departments are doing the same work that the Children's Bureau is doing we want to strike it out of their appropriation and give the Children's Bureau the right to do it. That is all there is about it. We wanted to know about it, and we did not think we ought to make this appropriation until we got the final report.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Why not let the Children's Bureau go on and do the work it is doing and take it from some other bureau?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the very point.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Why not take it from some other bureau where there is some doubt as to whether this particular work is within the scope of its duties? The character of that work being done by this bureau is of such vital importance that it will not be prudent to take any chances on it.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the very point I am making. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that this other bureau is doing the same kind of work now. Shall we cut them off or give them an additional appropriation to begin this work and let these three departments go on? Then, when we get a report, your committee will say: "This work must be done by the Children's Bureau, and not by these other two."

Mr. VARDAMAN. The question with me is whether it is not better to let this bureau, that is engaged upon this work and have it so well in hand, do it rather than permit some other bureau to undertake it.

Mr. BRYAN. The trouble is that the other bureau was doing it before this one was created.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator let me make a suggestion? Is not a bureau composed of physicians and experts in matters of health better prepared to study children's diseases than the Children's Bureau?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, I think it is vastly more so, unless they organize a corps of physicians in the Children's Bureau.

Mr. VARDAMAN. This bureau investigates not alone the physical conditions of the child, but the moral conditions also. It looks after child life, which embraces every question touching the moral, mental, and physical status of the child.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I supported the bill creating the Children's Bureau, and believe there is a great work for it to do; but we have the Health Bureau, in which there are men skilled in the science of medicine. We are spending money to develop it in the study of all kinds of diseases. To transfer the subject of children's diseases to the Children's Bureau, where they are not equipped with physicians, where they have no students of the problem of health, would seem to take it from where we can hope to have the best work done and to put it where it would not be nearly so well done, unless we duplicate in the Children's Bureau the medical force found in the Health Bureau.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I would like to say, for the information of the Senators, that there seems to be some confusion on this subject. The work of the several bureaus is entirely distinct and separate, and neither one should by right infringe upon the others.

The Health Bureau is organized for the inspection of children attending school, to prevent contagion and epidemics of disease, to trace them to their source and remove the cause of them, to test food supplies, to trace the source of infection in case of typhoid fever, and so forth, and look out for the health and welfare of children and the general public, and in that way keep them healthy and from infecting other people with their diseases. The physician in charge of that has no time to look into the general welfare of children or their home lives further than it is brought to his notice by particular cases, whereas the duty of the Children's Bureau would be to look into the general management of homes, the sanitary conditions existing in them, the nourishment of the child, and the attention which it receives in the way of cleanliness and proper care from its parents.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that is what they are doing.

Mr. LANE. That is what they are doing; and that is a separate and distinct matter from going as a physician and taking your test tubes and tracing the disease and making tests to enable him to diagnose the case.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is for another matter.

Mr. LANE. This is for another matter. I say they are separate and distinct, and there is room for all of them if they do their duty.

Now, the Bureau of Education do in a way look out for the welfare of the child; but what is their immediate duty? To go to the school, to visit it, to see if it is kept in sanitary condition, if the drain pipes are in order, to ascertain conditions there—the conditions of light as they affect the eyesight, the condition of the air, whether it is foul or whether it is pure and fresh, and so on. The effect of foul air upon children is disastrous, and so is bad light; and many children come to school who are defective in some way. The investigators find them to be defective; then they refer them to the Health Bureau to inspect their vision and examine the condition of their nasal passages; and a small operation sometimes makes of a dull child one of the brightest students in the school.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what they are doing now.

Mr. LANE. Their duties are separate and distinct from that of the Child's Bureau, and you will make a mistake if you do away with either of them. You may be appropriating too much money for this bureau. I do not know.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is right.

Mr. LANE. You can not appropriate too much money, however, to keep young, growing children healthy. A child's life has a potential value of $5,000 to the country, and a loss of more than that if it becomes an illy developed and an underaverage citizen of the country, while the difference in cost in the beginning would be but a trifle.

I read an article the other day, in the issue of the Literary Digest of about two weeks ago, relating what a correspondent had seen over in Belgium. He saw 1,200 children in a bread line, where each child received a piece of bread and some broth—not much bread or broth, but just barely enough to keep it alive until the next day when it came for food again. He said he saw several women on guard, and once in a while one would rush in and grab a child and pull it to one side, and the child would cry and scream and kick. He saw another one do that, and he went to one of them and asked, "Why do you pull the child out of that line? It is hungry." She said, "Yes, the child is hungry, but there is not enough bread and broth to give it any to eat. We can not give to a hungry child anything to eat until it shows signs of starvation. They must be losing weight—must be actually starving—before we can feed them. This child will stay out of this row until it shows signs of starvation. When it does so, we will put it back for a minimum of food to save its life, but not enough to keep its appetite satisfied." Just about the time I read that, only a few days ago, three little children came to a friend of mine, to the back door, begging for stale bread. They said, "It does not matter how stale it is, we want it; we are hungry."

Now, here is where your Child Bureau ought to be, and we should busy ourselves to help them to meet that condition in this great Capital City of the Nation. The doctor would never learn of that child; it would die of starvation without being brought to his attention. But here are women making an investigation of those conditions and suggesting to you and me that we have a duty to perform.

I read another article two or three weeks ago which stated that there was a banquet given, in Philadelphia I think, where each guest's meal cost the host $500 a plate; and you saw day before yesterday an item in the morning papers stating that in New York City the "down-and-outers" were selling the blood out of their veins for $25 a head. It was too much to pay for the meal and too little to pay for the blood.

Here is where we can afford to make a change, not to be too liberal, not overgenerous with the people's money, but to be fair, and thus guard the future of the Nation, where your children and mine and our grandchildren and their children will have to live. I would not forget them. I would make my analysis of the last year, and make it as economical as we can in the salaries which they receive, but I would give warm-hearted, generous attention to the needs of little children. "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not."

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon before he takes his seat what the connection is between a banquet costing $500 a plate and the investigation of infant mortality?

Mr. LANE. It has this effect, that there is an inequitable, unjust amount being paid for human blood at the time the market value of a high-priced dinner is $500. The money of the country, for that matter, is not equitably distributed among the people, but the ill-nourished child to-day is a down-and-outer; in 25 years from now he will have to sell his blood.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, I should like to suggest, in response to the question asked by the Senator from Colorado, that if the Treasury of the United States is so depleted that we have to economize, the best thing to do, instead of cutting on questions of this kind, is to tax the fellow who can give the $500 dinner and raise the money.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, I can understand that proposition easily, but still I can not understand the connection between a dinner at $500 a plate and the investigation of infant mortality. As to what the Senator has said in regard to infant mortality and the question of food, surely these things can be ascertained and provided against by the health authorities, whose duty it is to look after such things. The other part of the matter, pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, I can very readily see is entirely within the province of the Children's Bureau.

Mr. LANE. Allow me to say that you do not have the knowledge, perhaps, it being something to which you have not paid much attention, but it harks back to the underfed child, the baby in arms, that lies on its back with its little head sweating on the pillow. That child has a form of disease known as softening of the bones, the scorbutic child, the scurvy child, the one that is the most easily attacked by tuberculosis or any other disease, and which dies in a larger ratio than others better fed. The little child that is illy nursed, or where there are mistaken methods of nursing and of food, needs the Child's Bureau. That is the child which in larger percentage becomes a derelict later along, for the reason that as a baby it never had enough nourishment to put the vitality into it, to make of it a fighting man whom we may need to go out and defend the country or to fight to protect your property or the national honor. He is the man who can not go far, or the woman when she arrives at maturity—the mother—does not bring forth a healthy and fine type of physical citizenship to the country's need. You can not do better than to send some one out to search for these children and turn them over to some beneficent instrument of the Government for advice and care. The doctor has not the time, but let the Child Bureau go from one house to another in the poor districts and pick out the underfed and undernourished children, and then refer them to the Health Bureau for medication and the type of food they need. It does not usually call for medication to bring them around to a proper and normal state of health.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, yesterday I offered an amendment to this bill. We are not going to get through with the measure to-day. I have consulted with several Senators and made several changes in the amendment. So I desire to present it for printing. It is the amendment which I intend to propose relating to employees of the Senate when personal amendments are in order. I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). It is so ordered, without objection.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he desires to go on further with the bill to-night? It can not be finished to-night.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to go on until 6 o'clock, if the Senator pleases.

Mr. CHILTON. We are going to have an executive session, I understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. I asked the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], and he said he did not think we would.

Mr. STONE. I have not inquired of the executive clerk as to the business, but I will say that there is a very small calendar.

Mr. CHILTON. There ought to be an executive session.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to go on for at least half an hour.

Mr. KENYON. If there is to be no executive session, as far as I am concerned, I am ready to go on.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to take 20 or 30 minutes on this matter. I believe it is an exceedingly important provision we are now considering. I am very strongly in favor of all kinds of proper economy. We sometimes differ as to what is proper economy, it is true, but I am not in favor of crippling one of the best bureaus of the Government for the purpose of economy or trying to save any money by curtailing work which may be of benefit to the children of the country.

This bureau was created by an act of Congress of April 9, 1912, and the bureau, in the law creating it, was ordered to report on all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life. It will be observed that this bureau has been in existence for but a comparatively short time. The first two years there were 15 people employed. The appropriation was $35,540 per year. In 1914 the staff was increased to 76 persons and the appropriation was $164,640. I think there has been no change in the staff or the appropriation since that time. Indeed, the bill as amended by the committee would carry that amount of appropriation. I think it is exactly the same.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the same appropriation that we have made heretofore.

Mr. KENYON. In the estimate of appropriations submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury the amount which has been desired for the Child Labor Bureau which is set forth would be substantially the amount allowed by the House, with the exception, I think, of about $20,000, which was considered to be the cost of an exhibition car to go around the country and exhibit the work of the Children's Bureau. The bill came to us from the House in that condition.

I think perhaps, to make it plainer, I ought to say that the committee reporting to the House did not report this amount, but it was put on in the House. The purpose of the provision at the top of page 143 is to increase the statutory roll in the bureau itself. The amount suggested on line 21, before amendment by our committee, was to cover the work of experts in the field and the collection of data, books of reference, newspapers, and matters of that kind. The two are somewhat interwoven, so that the two should be discussed together.

The objection is raised that there is some duplication of work. There may be some slight duplication of work. This work should be carried on by the Children's Bureau; though in talking with Miss Lathrop, who is at the head of the Bureau, she suggests that there is practically no duplication, but that where it has been apparent there might be some duplication there has been a coordination of the work—for instance, in the investigation of the feeble-minded in the State of Delaware, work that is being carried on by the Children's Bureau. Dr. Thomas W. Salmon was designated by the Public Health Bureau to a committee known as the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, and he has written Miss Lathrop concerning that work, which, I think, shows how the departments are coordinating in this work instead of duplicating. I send the letter to the desk and ask the Secretary to read it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill? I want for my own information to know if there were any hearings on the bill touching this question.

Mr. OVERMAN. Miss Lathrop was before us.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has her statement been published?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wanted to know so that I might get it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will have the clerk of the committee furnish the Senator with a copy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter sent to the desk by the Senator from Iowa.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR MENTAL HYGIENE,
New York City, January 13, 1917.

Miss JULIA C. LATHROP,
Children's Bureau, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MISS LATHROP: I have read with much interest the preliminary report on the feeble-minded in Delaware, and also the summary of the report on the feeble-minded in New Castle County, Del. It seems to me that this kind of report sets a standard for other work of a similar nature. I think that the type of cooperation that existed between the Children's Bureau and the United States Public Health Service in these studies is just the kind which should exist elsewhere between agencies which are essentially medical and those which are essentially social.

We are trying to do the same sort of thing in Kentucky at the present time, and have been given an appropriation by the Rockefeller Foundation to supply the State commission on mental defectives, appointed by the last Legislature of Kentucky, with the services of an expert adviser who will not only conduct field work and direct the work of others, but will aid in the formulation of a State policy and plans for institutional development. A number of States are ready to appoint State commissions similar to those which have been appointed in recent years in Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Indiana, Kentucky, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, and Utah. Usually, however, these commissions have no funds and must depend for their investigations upon such agencies as the Children's Bureau, the United States Public Health Service, the eugenics-record office, our committee, and the committee on provision for the feeble-minded. Each of us, I think, can supply a little different kind of service, and I believe it will be possible for our own committee to secure from the Rockefeller Foundation appropriations for the salary and expenses of scientific advisers at a compensation of $500 per month. This we hope to do during the coming year in Alabama, Georgia, Maine, Maryland, and Mississippi. It is extremely difficult to find men of the requisite training, but we have been very successful in our work with the insane in detaching some of the best men in the country for temporary periods.

I would like very much to talk over with you recent developments in work for provision for the feeble-minded. If you are planning to attend our annual meeting in February, would it not be possible for us to devote some time to such a conference?

Do you wish that I should return the copies of the report and summary which you sent me, or shall I keep them?

Sincerely, yours, THOMAS W. SALMON,
Medical Director.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the friends of the Children's Bureau, and I think everyone should be included in that, are not asking that the amounts be raised at all as the bill came from the House, but are asking that those amounts be held as they are. The lady at the head of this bureau is as well qualified, better I believe, than anyone in this country to know what the bureau needs. We rely on other heads of bureaus to tell us what they need in the way of help, and if we can not have confidence in the splendid head of this bureau and accede within reasonable bounds to what she may ask to carry on this great work for the children of the country, then she ought to be removed and some one appointed in whom we can have confidence. But I do not believe in the whole world there could be found a woman with more enthusiastic devotion to the work of the Children's Bureau.

It is pretty hard to answer when you are asked to say just what this Children's Bureau has done; what particular thing it has accomplished; just what particular children it has saved; what particular home it has made happy. That is hard to do in the case of many bills. Here is an amendment introduced to-day by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to the sundry civil bill with relation to schools for naturalization, studying the problems that confront our naturalized citizens. It would be pretty hard to show where any particular benefit might occur, but it is a great work to help in educating the naturalized citizen to understand the genius and spirit of our American institutions. So this work fundamentally upon children's welfare reaches into many lines. You can not put your hands on just the particular things possibly that may be accomplished, but it is creating a sentiment in this country along lines of social progress. This is a bureau that is working along those lines of social and industrial justice which should appeal to all. It is not simply an investigation of the medical question; not at all. It goes into the industrial question, investigating the relationship of poverty and wages to the death of little babies and the development of children; and there is no other bureau in the Government which carries on that kind of an investigation.

In this country last year there were 300,000 babies under 1 year of age, as the statistics show, who died; one out of every eight of the babies born failed to reach 1 year of age. This bureau has investigated this question of infant mortality. That is one of the great features of the work that it has done. They went into Manchester, in the State of New Hampshire——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that they are doing that work now?

Mr. KENYON. They are doing that work now.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of investigating the question of infant mortality?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly; and if the Senator had read the last report of Miss Lathrop he would have seen that she set out instances where they have made these investigations. I am going to read from page 6 of her report as to Manchester. She says:

The mortality rate among the 1,564 live-born babies studied in Manchester was 165 per 1,000 births, which is considerably higher than the estimated rate for the whole country.

Manchester is primarily a textile town, and the textile mills employ 36.3 per cent of all the fathers of babies born in Manchester during the 12 months covered by the study. Of the fathers 13.7 per cent were earning less than $450 per year, 48.5 per cent less than $650, 22.9 per cent $850 or more, 6.4 per cent $1,250 or more.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that is the point I am getting at. I have seen Miss Lathrop's report stating that they have been doing this work for two years. But the question in the mind of the committee was, if they were already doing that work with the funds now provided and doing it very faithfully, whether we should increase this appropriation for the next year when the Children's Bureau is already doing the work and has field agents engaged who are being paid $6 a day. Under these circumstances we did not understand why we should give another lump sum.

Mr. KENYON. Miss Lathrop has been making these mortality investigations through her department, and they are being continued. For instance, investigations which are now going on in the city of Baltimore, according to her report, will require one year to make the survey, and this work is to be extended throughout the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KENYON. I was not through reading the report about Manchester. I will yield to the Senator in a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the Senator complete that.

Mr. KENYON. The report continues:

Of the babies with fathers earning less than $450, about 1 in 4 died before it was 12 months old. The great majority of the babies had fathers in the wage group from $450 to $849, and of these about 1 in 6 died. Of the babies whose fathers earned $850 but less than $1,050, 1 in 8 failed to survive. Where the fathers earned $1,050 or more, 1 baby in 16 died in the first year.

Showing that there was an intimate relationship between the poverty of the parents and the death rate of the babies. I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I more particularly rose to ask that the Senator conclude reading from the report in regard to Manchester. I think the situation set forth as to that city is explainable to some extent. Manchester has large textile industries, one concern employing about 20,000 people, I think. They are of almost all nationalities—French Canadians, Greeks, Poles, and almost every other nationality that could be thought of. A great many of them are ignorant people; they are unskilled people. They go there and get employment and are paid as large wages there as anywhere else, so far as I know. Beyond a doubt the percentage of mortality among the children where the parents are ignorant, uneducated, and uninstructed, is larger than that among the children of parents of the higher classes. So I presume that those statistics are correct, and yet they are explainable, to a degree at least.

I have always supported this bureau, except that I once voted against an appropriation for it because the same work was being done by the Department of Labor, and, as a result, I was very severely criticized and called an enemy to the Children's Bureau; but if Miss Lathrop can in any way lift up those people from the poverty and the ignorance in which they are in Manchester, N. H., or anywhere else, she is doing a magnificent work, and I hope she will be able to continue it; and yet it seems to me that there are insuperable obstacles in her way to accomplish the results that we would all like to see accomplished.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if the amount that is stricken out by the committee of about $100,000 would save the life of one of these babies, I do not think anybody would find any fault with or objection to it. If the work of this bureau even indirectly helps to reduce the death rate of the babies of the country the money appropriated, even be it a much larger sum, is wisely appropriated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask whether Miss Lathrop presents any suggestion as a result of her inquiry that would be beneficial to those children?

Mr. KENYON. That question is interwoven, of course, with the second subject that the bureau goes into, and that is the maternal mortality also, and I might add that the bureau has been sending out bulletins; they have been sending out people to instruct along those lines, and have been carrying on an enormous correspondence with relation to these vital questions. To help carry on that correspondence necessitates some additional clerks, which she asks for here. I do not know how many letters this bureau is writing, but the number is close up to the hundred thousand per annum.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator think it possible for us, through the children's bureau, to undertake the work and instruction of the parents by personal visitation throughout the entire United States, so as to relieve them of their ignorance?

Mr. KENYON. I hardly think it possible to visit each particular case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not rather the proper work of the bureau to gather the information, furnishing it to central points and to people in the States who will utilize it, leaving the final burden of instruction and the actual work upon the States and localities?

Mr. KENYON. And to help create a general public knowledge of conditions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. And a public interest in the remedying of those conditions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; but not detail work.

Mr. KENYON. Not detail work; but I have on my desk extracts from a letter written by a woman in one of the Western States, 65 miles from a railroad, who has known of the work of the Children's Bureau, and the question of advice to mothers——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. Just a moment. She had two children of her own and had adopted two others, and asked to have some one sent out there—it was a very pitiable story—to instruct them and assist them in this work. I do not know that we can go that far; of course, that would open up a tremendous field.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to say to the Senator——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from New Hampshire rose first, and I yield first to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply want to add one word concerning Manchester. I am very glad that Miss Lathrop and her bureau are taking up the work in that city, a city of about 80,000 persons, largely devoted to manufacturing, the textile industry being the leading industry. I want to say for the men who are employing these people, as I suggested a moment ago, many of them poor, uneducated, and ignorant, that the greatest corporation in that city is doing a very magnificent work. For instance, it has established a very large playground upon property owned by the corporation; it has a hospital; it has two textile club buildings constructed by the corporation, one for the women and one for the men; it builds houses, which it rents at a very low rate of interest; it furnishes medical attendance to the operatives free; and it is doing a great deal for these people. Yet, beyond a question, there is an opportunity to do more, and I hope that through the instrumentality of the Children's Bureau great reforms will be achieved in Manchester as well as in all the other manufacturing cities of the country.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I would not want the Senator to understand that that was the only place where the study had been carried on. It has been carried on in Johnstown, Pa., Montclair, N. J., and in other places.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been carried on in Manchester and Johnstown, but I think that those are pretty nearly the only cities. I have been reading the report while I have been sitting at my desk.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa now yield to a motion for an executive session?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Do I understand the Senator has moved to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Very well.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. MYERS. Before the motion is put, I should like to ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business has been laid aside temporarily by unanimous consent.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to have it laid before the Senate so as to make it the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate House bill 408, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 9 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 19, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 18, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for the life, character, and public service of a great man who has been called from life to Life. And we bow in sorrow with a mourning Nation at his going. Admiral Dewey has left behind him a record worthy of emulation and will live in the hearts of his countrymen so long as memory endures. Comfort us and those nearest and dearest to him by the blessed assurance that he has heard the words from the lips of the Master, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." And everlasting praise be Thine in the name of Him who came that we might have life and that we might have it more abundantly. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER of Delaware was granted leave of absence for two days on account of important business.

NIAGARA RIVER.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate joint resolution 186, authorizing the Secretary of War to issue temporary permits for additional diversion of the water from Niagara River, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the conference report.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1315).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue temporary permits for additional diversions of water from the Niagara River" having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 3.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"Any such permittee who without further authority of Congress diverts after the time herein named for the expiration of such permit any part of the additional amount of water, authorized by Congress to be diverted for the first time under this resolution, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year nor less than 30 days, or both in the discretion of the court; and each and every day on which such violation occurs or is committed shall be deemed a separate offense: Provided, That where such violation is charged against the company or corporate body, the offense shall be taken and deemed to be that of any director, officer, agent, or employee of such company or corporate body ordering, directing, or permitting the same."

And the House agree to the same.

H. D. FLOOD,
CYRUS CLINE,
Managers on the part of the House.

MARK A. SMITH,
JOHN K. SHIELDS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. CLINE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the effect of House amendments 2 and 3 from which the House receded?

Mr. CLINE. It is just a change in phraseology and does not change the resolution in any important manner.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the only substantial change was in amendment No. 4?

Mr. CLINE. The only substantial change was in amendment No. 4, which provides a penalty for taking the water after the expiration of the permit.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There was a change in the time limit.

Mr. CLINE. There was a change in the time limit from March 4, 1917, to July 1, 1917.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The agreement is that the time be fixed as of July 1.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. This resolution proposes to give to the existing power plants at Niagara the use of this additional power granted under the terms of the treaty with Canada.

Mr. CLINE. That is right—the use of a temporary permit to July 1.

Mr. AUSTIN. Which means a use of an additional 50,000 horsepower.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Forty-four hundred cubic feet.

Mr. AUSTIN. Which is equivalent to about 50,000 horsepower.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. I will say to the gentleman that the information of the committee is that the power companies can not use the whole forty-four hundred cubic feet, but will use only about thirty-five hundred cubic feet.

Mr. AUSTIN. The purpose of this is to give the American users of power an opportunity to make up for what the Canadian power companies have withdrawn.

Mr. CLINE. The purpose is to give the manufacturers of Niagara Falls power to supply the deficiency that has been created by withdrawal of power by the Canadian companies.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then this power is absolutely necessary?

Mr. CLINE. It is absolutely necessary, and it will not then meet the demands of the manufacturers of Niagara Falls.

Mr. AUSTIN. If this resolution be adopted, then on the 1st day of July, if in the meantime the Congress has not provided permanent legislation, this power will be withdrawn, or these people will suffer a penalty?

Mr. CLINE. I will say to the gentleman that this is the situation: The conferees understood it to be the opinion of the House, or the sense of the House, that at the end of the time that was fixed in the resolution if any water should be taken under the permits herein authorized there should be a penalty fixed for taking the water; at the same time the House wanted to give an opportunity for the manufacturers of Buffalo and Niagara Falls to secure this additional power. I will say to the gentleman that the people representing capital in Niagara Falls and in Buffalo have now invested some $5,000,000 in a steam-power plant, consisting of five units, each unit to furnish 25,000 horsepower. They have already in operation one unit which will furnish the 25,000 horsepower and expect to have another ready by the 4th of March, the third one ready by the 1st of June, and that will supply the deficiency that now exists at Buffalo and Niagara Falls.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, at the end of June, or on the 1st of July, if in the meantime Congress does not enact permanent or general legislation, we are to discontinue the use of this additional power?

Mr. CLINE. At the end of that time the diversion of water created by this temporary permit is to be shut off, and there is sufficient penalty prescribed in this temporary resolution to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. AUSTIN. Why should we shut off this power and let it go to waste, when we can use it and let these people run their manufacturing plants?

Mr. CLINE. I understand that there is a strong probability of getting permanent legislation through to meet these demands that exist up there now.

Mr. AUSTIN. But if you fail to pass your general bill, or permanent law, then this power ceases to be utilized on the 1st of July and goes to waste.

Mr. CLINE. That can be corrected by a resolution to continue the permits now issued under this resolution.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is that the purpose of the committee?

Mr. CLINE. The purpose of the committee, if the condition still exists as exists now and we are unable to pass permanent legislation controlling this matter, is that a resolution may be introduced continuing the permits that will be issued under this joint resolution.

Mr. AUSTIN. The absurdity of the proposition, Mr. Speaker, to me in this matter is this: This power is to continue manufacturers that are going concerns, employing thousands of people, and lighting a number of cities in New York State. Now, if Congress fails or neglects to pass either permanent legislation or a continuing resolution under the operation of this joint resolution this power must be withdrawn and these manufacturing plants and cities that actually need it are to be inflicted with punishment, either that or close down their plants.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; it is not exactly that; they will not have to close their plants. We simply provide that the machinery they now have and plants already constructed instead of taking the amount of water they now take in addition thereto can take 4,400 feet divided between the two concerns there now, and on the 1st day of July, if no further permit is to be issued or authority granted, they will continue to operate just exactly as they are now operating. As the acting chairman of the committee pointed out by that time the Buffalo power plant designed to produce power by coal will have been completed as far as two units are concerned, and there will be available for all these purposes more power than is granted by this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. We withdraw 50,000 horsepower that will be in use on the 1st day of July, if Congress fails or neglects to pass this legislation.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is absolutely so.

Mr. CLINE. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee he is slightly mistaken about that.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. I was going to direct attention to an error the gentleman from Tennessee made in his statement. In the meantime the people of Buffalo will have put themselves in a position to supply 75,000 horsepower which we are depriving them of now by the withdrawal of these temporary permits on the 1st day of July.

Mr. AUSTIN. Why does not the Government continue to furnish this power which is going to waste?

Mr. CLINE. There may not be the necessity at that time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman in favor of drying up Niagara Falls?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; but it has been developed we can use this water without injuring navigation or the scenic beauty.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman now yield for a question in relation to the matter referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CLINE. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I read the report of the Secretary of War of the hearings before the committee, and I would like to inquire whether I have the right information. My understanding was that the Secretary of War stated that it was desirable to grant temporary permits for the use of this water, that there was now being constructed in Buffalo a steam plant which would furnish the same amount of electric power which could be obtained this way, but those plants were not yet quite available for use, but would be by the 1st of June.

Mr. CLINE. That is my understanding of the situation, and I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that there has been withdrawn by the hydroelectric commission of Canada 72,000 horsepower.

Mr. MANN. So if this resolution, or permits under this resolution, are revoked on the 1st of July, the power that is supplied through the extra water obtained under this resolution will then be supplied by these steam plants?

Mr. CLINE. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me ask the gentleman in charge of this bill, how much additional power have they notified the American consumers they are going to withdraw in addition to the amount the gentleman stated?

Mr. CLINE. Fifty thousand horsepower, I understand; but we have no——

Mr. AUSTIN. Making a total withdrawal of 120,000 horsepower; and you propose to substitute that amount with a steam plant that will produce 50,000 horsepower?

Mr. CLINE. No; I did not state they proposed to do that. I stated before that the steam plant proposed to establish five units to develop 25,000 horsepower each. Three of those will be ready, I understand, by June 30, making 75,000, and after all are in operation they will make the full amount withdrawn.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has the gentleman any idea that we will pass a permanent bill at this session of Congress?

Mr. CLINE. We are going to try to pass it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am sure of that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I did not attend the conference on this resolution, and therefore I desire to ask information from one of the conferees. Under the resolution as the conference committee has reported it the permittees could use up to 20,000 cubic feet per second.

Mr. CLINE. That is all, I will say to the gentleman. I have information from the power plant that they are able at present to use more than 3,500 cubic feet per second, and there will be about 900 cubic feet per second they are not proposing to place under the temporary permits.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That would be 19,500 cubic feet per second, would it not, which they would use under this resolution?

Mr. CLINE. Four thousand, four hundred less the 900—3,500 cubic feet.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It would be 20,000 feet less 500—19,500 cubic feet a second. Then 500 feet of the maximum per second——

Mr. CLINE. Then 900 cubic feet.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if I read this conference report correctly, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is wrong in his construction. The amendment to the resolution which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] proposed, and which was adopted the other day, provided for the payment of a certain sum by way of compensation. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois how that was worded? Does the gentleman recall?

Mr. MANN. I think it required compensation at the rate of $100 per cubic foot per annum for each cubic foot used.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Additional?

Mr. MANN. Only the additional, and what was obtained under permit granted under this resolution.

Mr. CLINE. That was after the expiration of the permit?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Which would be equal to $5 or $10 per horsepower.

Mr. MANN. That was intended as a penalty.

Mr. SMITH of New York. We have substituted a jail penalty for that.

Mr. MANN. Now, I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] in reference to the proposition now brought before the House, in the first place, if this resolution is passed at all, it is passed as a matter of temporary relief. As I understand from the Secretary of War, we are waiting the completion of the steam plants up there, and not probably to involve the question of compensation for the use of waterpower. That was not my idea in introducing the amendment. The amendment which I did introduce was to provide a penalty. The House and the Senate—let us be perfectly frank about the matter—I think are perfectly deadlocked on the question of compensation for use of water in the hydroelectric plants. And it was stated to me by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] that the Senate would not agree to the amendment which I had offered and which the House had put in, because they thought it involved their giving up their theory in reference to the question of compensation, and as the amendment which I had offered was for a penalty, I said to the gentleman from Virginia that so far as I was concerned, I believed I would rather have a direct penalty than even the amendment which I had offered.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. May I ask the gentleman a question? The Senate contention is not that the amount named in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois was excessive, but that Congress has no right to require any compensation at all?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know how far they go. Whatever their reasons may be, they are opposed apparently to the question of compensation, and I think the House has a right to exact compensation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from New York has just remarked that the Senate conferees said the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois "squinted" toward compensation. I take it, therefore, they were opposed to even so much as a squint in that direction.

Mr. MANN. I think that is the case.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not fair to the Senate members of the conference committee to say that they oppose compensation being paid to the National Government, but favor payment to the States?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In other words, though the Government of the United States has the right, in its discretion, to grant or not to grant to corporations or individuals privileges of great value, those conferees denied that it has any right to demand even the slightest compensation because that would, by implication, retain in the United Sthtes Government the power to control in the interest of the general public? That is what they declare; and we might as well understand what the issue is.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows very well that he and I are in accord.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly.

Mr. MANN. I think the House is in accord with our proposition.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. So far as I am concerned, the amount of compensation does not especially weigh with me; that is, the amount is not the primary consideration. It does not constitute the issue. But that the Congress has not the right to impose terms and conditions whenever it grants a valuable franchise or privilege the granting or the refusal of which is a matter entirely within its discretion I can not agree. I am opposed to the report of the conference committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on page 1712 of the RECORD the report of the committee reads as follows, and I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to it:

> Any such permittee who without further authority of Congress diverts after the time herein named for the expiration of such permit any part of the additional amount of water authorized by Congress to be diverted for the first time under this resolution shall be guilty of a misdemeanor—

And so forth.

That is a provision for the punishment of any corporation or its officers or any individual who after the 1st of July next shall use any of this additional 4,400 feet permitted to be used by the resolution. But suppose they should continue to use after that date the other 15,600 feet which they have been using without authority for some time. Where is the provision for punishment or the penalty? Where is the squint toward compensation? Where is the provision for the arrest or imprisonment of anybody? The only provision that I interpret as a provision for arrest and punishment, fine or imprisonment, relates exclusively to the additional 4,400 cubic feet. Now, as every gentleman here knows, it is an ordinary rule of statutory construction that the mention of one thing in a statute is the exclusion of the other. This resolution mentions only the proposed additional 4,400 feet here for the first time authorized to be used to make up the maximum of 20,000 cubic feet per second permitted by the treaty with Great Britain to be diverted on the American side of the Falls; and, therefore, no mention being made of the 15,600 feet, these companies may after that date use the 15,600 feet without any threat over them of penalty or arrest. Is not that so?

Mr. CLINE. We are only dealing with the amount that the power company is actually authorized to take.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But suppose that these companies continue to use the 15,600 cubic feet. Is there any limit of time fixed respecting that use?

Mr. CLINE. There is not any limit of time fixed, because the Secretary of War has been instructed by the Attorney General in a letter to him to the effect that the Secretary under the terms of the Burton Act, although it has expired, expressed the intention of Congress to permit the use of 15,600 cubic feet. We are not legislating on that point at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Secretary of War came before our committee and admitted that he had no authority to issue a permit.

Mr. CLINE. Yes; he admitted that he had no authority to issue a permit for an additional amount. But the previous Secretary of War had issued a permit for the use of the additional 4,400 cubic feet, and after that the present Secretary of War had renewed the permit, but upon examination concluded that he had no authority to issue the additional permit and came to Congress to have authority given to him to issue it under those circumstances.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But what authority have they to use these 15,600 cubic feet?

Mr. CLINE. They have authority to do that under the Burton Act, which has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under what lawful authority are these people using the 15,600 cubic feet? Not under an act which by its own terms expired years ago.

Mr. CLINE. As I said before, the Attorney General in a letter to Mr. Taft under his administration expressed the opinion that the President had the right to control the issue of 15,600 cubic feet of water as it had been controlled under the Burton Act until the legislation of Congress changed the rule.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the Burton Act by its own terms expired on a definite date. Then it was renewed and again expired. The Secretary of War admitted that he had no authority to issue permits for the additional 4,400 feet; but he had the same authority to issue permits for the additional amount that he has or had to issue permits to use the 15,600 feet. His only authority came from the Burton Act.

Mr. CLINE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, evidently the complaint of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is that this resolution does not provide for a penalty after the 1st of July affecting the use of all the water power at Niagara Falls. Fifteen or twenty years ago two or three power companies were located on the American side, and according to the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs those power companies represented an expenditure of $60,000,000. At that time Congress made no claim to control or fix a royalty for the use of power. Everybody believed at that time, and the Supreme Court of the United States had decided up to that time, even up to the 11th day of December, 1916, that the States had the right to control this matter.

Accordingly these power companies in good faith invested their $60,000,000, and have operated under a charter or contract from the State of New York. They exercised that right or privilege without question until Congress stepped in with the Burton Act and a treaty with Canada.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] suggests the idea that this resolution is lacking in a penalty if all of this power is not withdrawn on the 1st of July, if Congress in the meantime fails to do its plain duty. In other words, because the two branches of Congress are deadlocked on this proposition, or on this legislation, it would appear to be his contention that it is fair and just and right for this House to step in and by a joint resolution absolutely stop the wheels of every industry at Niagara, affecting a city built largely as the result of these power companies, with a population of 50,000, with 20,000 wageworkers, and in two additional near-by cities, which have grown up and developed their manufacturing interests as the result of this power, we are to put a penalty upon them and close their plants. Then we must shut off the light in the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls and other cities and leave them absolutely in total darkness, and withdraw from the inhabitants of those cities the pleasure and comfort of having their homes lighted. Why, Mr. Chairman? Why, because we have failed, on account of a deadlock between the two Houses of Congress, to enact needed legislation. It is absurd, ridiculous, and would be a reflection upon the intelligence of this House to entertain such a monstrous proposition for a minute. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, the main difference in this conference report and the resolution that we passed the other day, as I understand it, is that the permit is extended from the 4th of March to the 1st of July, and also a penalty is added for the excessive use of water beyond that time.

Mr. CLINE. The main difference is that we have extended the life of the permit from the 4th of March to the 30th day of June, and have fixed a more stringent penalty than was enacted in the Mann amendment.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Now, I want to ask what, if anything, have they paid to the Federal Government for this power?

Mr. CLINE. They have never paid anything, and do not expect to pay anything until permanent legislation goes through this House.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Now, why should they be permitted to use this water power absolutely free and at no cost to themselves and with no profit to the Government, and yet any other enterprises on navigable streams throughout the country that happen to have their plants established by a dam have had to pay a good stiff price for the water?

Mr. CLINE. Well, Mr. Speaker, that involves a very complicated situation that I am satisfied the gentleman understood if he gave some thought to it and some examination of the subject matter, and better than he appears to now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman give me three or four minutes?

Mr. CLINE. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I have tried to give this subject some study, but I can not see the difference. I can not see why, simply because one company happens to be at Niagara Falls, it should get this power free, whereas others elsewhere do not get it free, and the gentleman has not explained it, and I do not think that he or anyone else can. I think it an outrage.

Mr. CLINE. The corporations using power in navigable rivers throughout the country are using power generated where the Federal Government has made investments in locks and dams, and authority is given the Federal Government to make charges to remunerate it for the expenses incurred. That situation does not exist at Niagara Falls.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE], if he will be so kind as to give me his attention, that I share with him the exact views that he has just advanced. But I am sure that he will agree with me that this is no time for us to make a practical application of them. If conservation is good for the West, as I think it is, it is also good for Niagara Falls and the East. However, we are in an exigency at this time. There are at Niagara Falls a great many industries that are fundamental to industries elsewhere throughout the United States. All the chemical industry of the United States is at this hour dependent upon water power at Niagara Falls; for instance, in the manufacture of dyes and things of that kind.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit me to make my statement? We are in this exigency: We are trying in another bill to pass general legislation that will cover the exact point the gentleman has raised, namely, that there shall be some charge paid to the Federal Government by the permittees who are using the water power at Niagara Falls. We, however, in this present resolution are not permitting the construction of any new plants or any enlargement of the plants already existing at Niagara Falls. We are simply permitting the present users of water there to use this additional amount to compensate for the loss that has been sustained by the withdrawal on the part of Canada of a large amount of water power. I think the gentleman will agree with me that we can well afford and must give aid to the industries of this country by permitting this additional water to be withdrawn, and then settle the permanent legislation as soon as we can get to it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman will permit, I am very well aware that the purview of this resolution does not take in that; but I would like, for my own satisfaction, to hear some explanation of the justice of it, if there is any justice in it, which I do not think there is.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. In reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that there exists no authority for the use of the 15,000 cubic feet that are now being used, I beg to direct his attention to this state of facts, that water power is now being used under permits heretofore issued. My recollection is that that authority, or the law under which it is exercised, contains no provision relative to revocation. Of course, there remains in the grantor of the permit the power, when the time specified therein has expired, to alter, amend, or repeal in any way; but until Congress acts they are justified in continuing to allow the water to be used and to utilize the plants they have there constructed without breaking any law and without any additional permit. I, however, trust that we will all be able to legislate permanently on this subject this winter in order that there may be a separate fundamental law governing the use of water power at Niagara Falls.

That is all I care to say.

Mr. NORTON. Can the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] tell me about what the water-power companies of Niagara Falls charge for the use of a horsepower for an entire year?

Mr. CLINE. I will say to the gentleman that the amount varies with the different companies.

Mr. NORTON. Is it not about $20 a year?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Oh, it is less than that; an average of about $12.

Mr. NORTON. About $12 a year?

Mr. CLINE. About $12 a year.

Mr. NORTON. About how many horsepower are being generated there now, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. CLINE. I think about 200,000 horsepower.

Mr. NORTON. If this power is sold at about $12 per horsepower per year, and it costs $20 per horsepower per year to generate power by steam, the difference between the cost of horsepower produced by steam and the cost of horsepower generated by water power goes as profit to the hydroelectric companies, does it not?

Mr. CLINE. The gentleman is assuming a situation that does not exist, of course.

Mr. NORTON. There may not be as great a difference as that between the cost of power generated by steam and the cost of power produced by the waterfall; but the difference goes entirely to the electric companies, does it not?

Mr. CLINE. I do not know whether the difference goes to the electric companies or to the users of that power; but I will say to the gentleman that we can not undertake to thrash that proposition out here on this resolution. There is a bill pending before this House involving all these questions that we hope to get through at a very early date and meet these propositions and let them be determined by the House.

Mr. NORTON. At the present time there is no law that permits the Government to charge the electric companies anything for the use of this power?

Mr. CLINE. I understand that the Public Service Commission of the State of New York have laid very heavy taxes upon these power-generating companies in the way of franchise taxes, and so forth, which virtually equal the difference between the power generated by steam and that generated by electricity.

Mr. NORTON. Does either the Federal Government or the State government now have the right to control the price charged for the hydroelectric power generated at Niagara Falls?

Mr. CLINE. I will say to the gentleman that that is a mooted question that has been discussed for the last six years in the Senate, and no determination upon it has been reached.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman inquired whether one or the other can do it. The State of New York is doing it now. We claim we have some authority, but we have not yet exercised it. The State of New York is actually doing it through its public-service corporation.

Mr. NORTON. It seems to me this case now before the House simply emphasizes a condition that exists in the Nation that should make every Member of the Congress hang his head in shame. I have for a number of years given some thought and study to these conditions, and it seems to me there is no good or justifiable reason why the Congress should not long before this have enacted a law authorizing the Federal Government to charge these power companies for the use of this water power, and giving to the Federal Government control and regulation of the rates to be charged by these hydroelectric companies for the power sold by them.

Mr. CLINE. I will say to the gentleman that there is a bill now before the House which provides for something of that character. It provides that the Federal Government shall levy taxes for the use of the water.

Mr. NORTON. I understand there is such a bill before the House, and that this subject has been considered in one way and another for the last 20 years, but nothing has been done. I want to say that I believe that it is about time that something should be done to protect the interest of all the people of the country, and that the committee having the bill referred to in charge should see that it is taken up and considered in the House.

Mr. CLINE. I will say that there has been no consideration for 20 years, but the subject matter has been inquired into by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is a three-angled proposition, and everybody interested has been heard, and we have reported out a very comprehensive bill. I will further say that the bill would have come up in the House yesterday, if the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Mr. FLOOD, had not been ill and confined to his room.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There is a sharp conflict between the claims of the State of New York and the claims of this Government.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CLINE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SUSAN O. M'CONNELL.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 439 (H. Rept. No. 1316).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Susan O. McConnell, widow of James I. McConnell, late a messenger on the soldiers' roll of the House, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such messenger and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the funeral expenses of said James I. McConnell.

Mr. LLOYD. That is the usual resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LAMAR TRIBBLE.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 433 (H. Rept. No. 1317.)

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Lamar Tribble, clerk to S. J. TRIBBLE, deceased, late a Representative in the Sixty-fourth Congress from the eighth district of Georgia, at the time of his death, December 4, 1916, the sum of $125, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk to a Member of Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following further privileged report from the Committee on Accounts:

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 399 (H. Rept. No. 1318).

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and is hereby, authorized to have made an index of the hearings had before said committee on the subject of Army appropriation bill, the costs and expenses thereof, not exceeding $300, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers audited by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution gives the Military Committee authority to index the hearings before the committee on the Army appropriation bill. I yield five minutes to the chairman of the committee, Mr. DENT.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, this Congress at the last session authorized the Military Committee to expend the sum of $300 for the purpose of indexing the hearings on the national-defense act. This appropriation of $300 is asked for now because the hearings on the appropriation bill at this session of Congress are a continuation in effect of the hearings under the national-defense act. The sum of $300 to index the hearings under the national-defense act would partly be thrown away, to say the least of it, unless these hearings are also indexed. Mr. Speaker, Congress passed the national-defense act on the 3d day of June, 1916, under which we undertook to federalize the National Guard. On the 18th day of June, following the passage of that act, the President called the National Guard into the Federal service, sending them to the Mexican border.

Since we have begun the hearings on the Army appropriation bill necessarily questions have been propounded to different heads of the Military Establishment as to the actual operations of that act of June 3. So that the Committee on Military Affairs has been engaged in hearing of the actual operation of the theories which were put into legislation on the 3d day of last June. Therefore we are not asking anything unusual for indexing an appropriation bill because it is merely a continuation of the hearings under the national-defense act for which this Congress has already made this appropriation of $300. These hearings, Mr. Speaker, are being called for all over the country. I have already requests from different sources, from Senators, Members of the House, from people in public life everywhere, to put them on the list for the purpose of getting these hearings. In other words, they want to know exactly how this act that we passed last June was put into practical operation.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, some years ago I believe it became almost the practice of this House to provide certain clerical and other assistants for committees, and then when any of the employees did anything, to pay them extra for their work, on the theory that you employed a man to receive a salary and not to work; and then if he worked, to be paid extra for that. We abolished that custom and I hope we are not going to return to it.

Now, last year Mr. HAY introduced his national-defense bill, and had long hearings upon it. The national-defense act was not reported to the House, I think, until considerably later than this time in the session. The hearings were very long, and the House provided that he might employ some one to make an accurate index of the hearings. I think that was justified. There was an unexampled case. The Committee on Military Affairs not only had to make up its annual appropriation bill, but it had these long hearings upon the Hay bill.

That is taken as a precedent for the resolution now before us. But the resolution now before us simply provides for the indexing of the hearings upon the annual appropriation bill. It is now only the middle of January; this committee did not commence its hearings, I think, before the middle of December. They have two clerks. What are those clerks for? A clerk, if he is good for anything at all, can index the hearings, and if he is not capable you can get some one in the Library of Congress to index them for less than $100.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to state to the gentleman that the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, consisting of about 6,000 pages——

Mr. MANN. I shall come to that in a moment, but I desire to present this in a consecutive form. The Committee on Military Affairs has a clerk at $2,500 a year and an assistant clerk at $1,500 a year. The Committee on Naval Affairs has a clerk at $2,400 a year and an assistant clerk at $1,500 a year. The hearings upon the annual appropriation bill in the Committee on Naval Affairs are four times as long as are the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs on their annual appropriation bill. If we provide for an indexer to index these hearings, to be paid to some special pet, then we must provide for the hearings to be indexed by a pet in the other committee.

The Committee on Agriculture has a much more varied lot of subjects before it than has the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a good deal harder to index the agricultural hearings than the hearings of the Committee on Military Affairs. The same is true of the Committee on Indian Affairs and of a number of the other appropriating committees. The Committee on Appropriations has, I believe, five subcommittees. They have hearings which amount to five or six or seven thousand printed pages, but the clerks in that committee index their own hearings. I presided for some time over a committee that had a great deal more to do in the way of public hearings than the Committee on Military Affairs ever had. My clerk did not receive any higher salary than the clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs, yet our hearings were indexed. Take it from me, if you are going to start paying extra to have any work done by the clerks of the Committee on Military Affairs in the way of indexing the hearings, you will have to do the same thing for every other appropriating committee and every other committee that has a large number of hearings. If the clerks of the Committee on Military Affairs do not know enough—and I do not believe that is true—to index the hearings, what the Committee on Military Affairs needs are new clerks and not more money. It is no great matter to make an index. When you have a page proof of hearings, it is a very simple matter to make an index. If we paid at this rate in the Library of Congress, the indexing there would cost us a hundred thousand dollars a year. It is unnecessary, it is a bad precedent, and, while I regret very much to oppose the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] who makes this request, still I think if he had been chairman of his committee for a longer time he would not have made the request. He found a precedent last year and probably thought that that was the precedent for the Committee on Military Affairs. The case then was unexampled, but it ought not to be repeated now. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. How would the gentleman suggest curing the present difficulty? Here we have had hearings all this season before the Committee on Military Affairs, and they have not been available. They are not indexed now. I have them merely in proof form in a way they can not well be handled. Something has to be done or those hearings are not going to be of any use to the Members of the House.

Mr. MANN. It is the duty of the Committee on Military Affairs to index them.

Mr. GARDNER. I know it is their duty. I do not blame Mr. Baker, the assistant clerk of the committee, but some one has neglected his duty. How are you going to remedy it without this money?

Mr. MANN. When you hire a man to do something and he does not do it, the way to remedy it is not to hire somebody else to do it, because the other fellow will not. [Applause.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, these six large volumes which I have had placed upon the table contain the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations during the last session of Congress. They represent about the average amount of testimony taken at each session by that committee. There are more than 5,000 printed pages of testimony. The hearings are indexed and the indexing is a part of the regular work of that committee. If the clerks of that committee could not index the hearings and have them ready for the committee when the bills are ready for consideration, they would not be fit for their work and they would not be employed there. We have frequently started a hearing at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of a day and had the hearings indexed and printed upon the table of the committee room for the consideration of emergency deficiency bills the following morning. If that were not possible, the committee could not do its work. The Committee on Appropriations has six regular appropriation bills, and frequently two or three additional deficiency appropriation bills, in a session of Congress. That committee has four clerks. The Committee on Military Affairs has two clerks and two appropriation bills. The vicious practice existed for many years of doing what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said was done at both ends of the Capitol—appointing men to positions and then giving them extra compensation whenever they did anything. It took a long time to break down the practice in both places. It is ended now and it ought not to be begun again. I can not find any excuse for expending $300 for indexing the hearings before this committee. Indexing is the simplest thing in the work of committee clerks. The testimony comes back all subheaded by the official stenographers, and all that is necessary to do is to have some one take the manuscript and keep the headings and arrange them alphabetically, and then when the page proof of the hearings come from the printer put the paging after the headings. It requires no very great skill. It requires some time, but employees of Congress are expected to devote at least some time to the duties of the positions which they fill. If there be any justification for asking for extra compensation for clerks, it is for the clerks to the Committee on Appropriations. For the 3 weeks before the Christmas holidays and for 10 of the days up to this time in this session they have worked until 11 o'clock every night in the week, and they have worked on every Sunday during that period; and when I say every Sunday, I mean on an average until about 9 o'clock at night. They do it without complaint and without asking for any extra money, and I commend their example to other clerks and employees about this Capitol. [Applause.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. DENT] has been perfectly fair and frank with the House. He has asked for just $300, the amount necessary to do this work. If he had asked for $300,000, the opponents of small appropriations would, in all probability, have favored the resolution, but when a Member comes into this House and asks for the small amount of $300 he does not get the attention of gentlemen who think in terms of millions. [Applause.] When the amount of $300 was asked for for this work, the same amount allowed by the last Congress, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] come forward and commenced to make a fuss. Their interest and excitement in and over this little item asked by the Committee on Military Affairs reminds me of the performance of a big white rooster that I knew in my childhood. He would pass unnoticed whole ears of corn and go up into the woods and scratch around until he found a little worm, and then he would cluck and cluck until every chicken in the settlement came running to him, and just as they arrived he swallowed the worm. [Laughter and applause.] Talk about economy. You have cost the country more than the $300 here asked in the time that you have consumed in opposing this resolution. [Applause.] This is an important piece of work. It was done before by authority of the House and it ought to be done again. This index work ought to be done. The Committee on Military Affairs wants it done. It will be very beneficial to all of us who have to consult the hundreds of items in the months that are to come, and I hope that these gentlemen who are straining at a gnat and swallowing an elephant will permit this item of $300 to go through. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Military Affairs had a change of chairmen at the beginning of this session of Congress and there was also a change in the clerical force. The hearings before that committee this session will be very voluminous. As the chairman of the committee stated, they have had hearings on the efficiency and effect of the national-defense act, in which questions the whole country is interested. We have gone into every little detail affecting military appropriations. I have been on that committee some 12 years. I do not recall that ever heretofore has so much time been taken up by the committee in bringing out, for the information of not only the committee, but the membership of this House and the people of the country at large, all the little details appertaining to the legislation that has been enacted within the last year on military matters. I should be averse to coming before this House and asking for such an appropriation under ordinary circumstances. But this is not an ordinary circumstance.

The hearings before the Committee on Appropriations are entirely different from those before the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Military Affairs appropriates millions of dollars in lump sums for a great many items contained in a single paragraph of the bill. The details of those items cover many pages of printed matter. They all ought to be properly indexed, at least this year, because these hearings will be scanned year after year in the future as to what the Army officers charged with the duty of putting the new legislation into effect said regarding the national-defense law, its strength, and its weakness. The amount asked is not large for this work. It has to be done carefully. The committee is unanimous in the request that it ought to be done. I feel, if properly done, it will be in the interest of every Member of the House who wants to look over the hearings held before that committee at this session of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, as a member of this committee, that every man who knows anything about the voluminous hearings of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House of Representatives knows it is necessary to have a system of indexing the hearings in order for each Member of the House to know something about the evidence and items in that great long bill. The question that confronts the mind of each Member is, Why does not the clerk of the committee do this? As the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has just explained to you, it is different from any other committee of this House. The clerk of that committee is a busy man, and while I stand as a man of economy and for economy, as every man here can vouch, this sum of $300 that is asked for this purpose will be one of the best investments that this House could make. If you only could know the hundreds and thousands of items all through the appropriation bill before the Committee on Military Affairs, you would say perhaps fifty times as much as $300 would be necessary. The members of that committee are hardly able to keep up with these items, and there are so many new items of expenditure asked each session by each branch of the service which comes before that committee, until it is necessary from the time these hearings are printed until the bill comes up on the floor, so that every man who wants to inform himself on this matter needs these hearings properly indexed in order that he may turn to it while the bill is under consideration on the floor of the House for that index to be of any use to him. I think it will be a matter of vital importance to every Member, and I submit to you, gentlemen, that the Committee on Military Affairs is entitled to this little item. We are entitled to the best help we can get in order to present this information to the House in a sensible, quick form, so that every man can turn to it and see what he is considering. The way it is now our clerk can not do it, he does not do it, and it has not been done. The passage of this resolution for the sum of $300 to put this work before the House is certainly an important matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has been stated here that the committee has two clerks Now, the gentleman states those clerks can not do it. I would like to ask as a matter of information why they can not?

Mr. QUIN. Because the one clerk and assistant clerk to that committee are kept busy. Now, this committee from the first day this Congress opened until now has been having hearings with the exception of the holiday recess. We just came from that committee on a call of our chairman to vote for this little item. We had before us the superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point. He has been before us for three days. We had to leave that officer, who was giving us detailed information, and come here and vote on this question. That is the reason why the clerks are working more than those of any other committee of this House and have no time to index the items, the subjects, and the evidence.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for this resolution because we have got to have that index, but I can not too strongly condemn the neglect of duty on the part of somebody connected with that committee. The Naval Affairs Committee and most of the committees of this House, as soon as their hearings are held, have the manuscript corrected and printed so that the Members who are following the legislation can use them. I have sent up to the Committee on Military Affairs and have been told that I could not have the hearings until they were all ready to be printed; that they would be ready in plenty of time for use. Finally, I wrote to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], and asked if I could not have some of those hearings transcribed at my own expense. I said I was willing to have Gen. Crozier's evidence and Gen. McCain's evidence transcribed at my own expense. He very kindly said that he would let me have the proofs of the hearings when they came back. I have had those proofs. I have inconvenienced the committee the last two or three days, I dare say, by retaining the proofs while I tried to read them. They were most difficult to use without an index. In their present shape it is almost impossible to use the hearings of the Committee on Military Affairs. I am not blaming Mr. Baker, the assistant clerk of that committee. He is an excellent man. But the duties of somebody have been neglected. The committee has not printed the hearings as they went along, and now they have such a mass of stuff that something has got to be done in order to straighten it out. The hearings this year are of exceptional value, as has been said. If they are not indexed by this House, I, for my own use, shall be obliged to have a rough index made for my personal use. At the present moment the situation is such that if the hearings are not indexed, and indexed now, they will be useless to this House.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take any time answering any charge of neglect on the part of any member of the committee or any employee of the committee. If anybody has been guilty of neglect, it is my fault, and I will take the blame. I am pursuing this policy because I am following that of my distinguished predecessor, the Hon. James Hay, of Virginia. He pursued this policy, as I understand, in the hearings on the national-defense act. In reply to the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] that these hearings have not been printed as fast as we had the different officers of the Army before us, I have to say that the reason for it is that I expected to get this little sum of $300 to index the hearings. And they could not be indexed until they were completed.

Mr. GARDNER. I leave it to the gentleman whether the other committees of this House, as well as your own committee, last year did not print the hearings as they were held?

Mr. DENT. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, no. The national-defense act was printed as the hearings were held. On the appropriation bill they were not, because that was not what the public was interested in last year. This year the evidence taken on the appropriation bill is of the same sort as the hearings you held on the national-defense act last year.

Mr. DENT. My recollection is that they were not printed until we completed the hearings. I may be mistaken in my recollection.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is quite correct. The hearings were printed originally, but not indexed. The hearings were indexed when they were assembled.

Mr. DENT. I thought we pursued the same policy.

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman say the hearings were printed piecemeal this year?

Mr. DENT. Yes, sir. They were printed just as fast as I could get them from the Printing Office.

Mr. GARDNER. I have repeatedly tried to get them. But all that you have sent me is merely the proofs.

Mr. DENT. That is what I mean, the proofs. Of course, not the final print.

Mr. GARDNER. You have not gotten out the pamphlet after each hearing, the way it is done in the Committee on Naval Affairs and the way it was done last year. And as to the proofs, they were not available to me until I wrote a personal letter to the gentleman.

Mr. DENT. That is true, and I am sorry the gentleman had not called on me earlier.

Mr. GARDNER. I supposed Mr. Baker, your clerk, knew the situation. I sent my secretary up there and I telephoned, and I was informed by other people, too, that they were not printed.

Mr. DENT. I am sorry the gentleman was treated in that way, and I regret I did not know about it until he communicated with me himself.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. DENT. I would like one minute more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to make this statement. As has been said, this is a continuation and completion of the hearings of last year under the national-defense act. You paid $300 last year when we were theorizing, and we are now only asking for the same sum when we are examining the practical effects. These hearings were indexed by an employee of the Quartermaster General's Department, employed by Mr. Hay. I intend to employ the same man to do the work again so as to get it completed in satisfactory form.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this House fully realizes the troubles of the Committee on Accounts or not. Your troubles become our troubles, and we have to bear the responsibility. Most Members here who have brought matters before the Accounts Committee are aware of the fact that that committee assumes its own responsibility as a rule and objects to any kind of expenditure out of the contingent fund of this House that ought not to be made.

I fully concur in all that has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] with reference to the practice which we are now beginning. I am decidedly opposed to it and have so stated to the chairman of this committee, and the Committee on Accounts are in accord that we ought not to establish this precedent. And I want it distinctly understood that in presenting this resolution we are not doing it with the understanding that it shall be a precedent, but with the distinct understanding that it shall not be a precedent. It is an unfortunate situation and it is unfortunate for the chairman and unfortunate for the House. The former chairman of this committee, Mr. Hay, resigned the last of September. Mr. DENT, splendid man that he is, and the excellent chairman that he is proving to be, was appointed the 1st of October to assume the duties of this important position. It became necessary for him to select a new clerk, and the truth is that we have now a new chairman of that committee and a new clerk of that committee, and it is necessary, in order to protect the House, to secure for him the additional help that is necessary to prepare this index.

Mr. NORTON. Were those hearings held while the other clerks were in charge of the committee or with the present clerks in charge?

Mr. LLOYD. The present clerks in charge.

Mr. NORTON. What have the present clerks to do in their committee more than the clerks in any other committee who index their work?

Mr. LLOYD. I have intimated, by indorsing the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it is the duty of these clerks to prepare this index. And I am trying to impress upon you that they claim they have not the time. At least, they were not preparing the index. The House of Representatives must have an index, and apparently the only way we can secure the index is to make this little allowance for it.

Now, gentlemen, you understand the position of the Committee on Accounts. It is unfriendly to resolutions of this kind. It wants to give notice to the House that, so far as it controls the matter, this shall never serve as a precedent. And I want to say further that last year, when the resolution was offered by Mr. Hay and presented to this House, we notified Mr. Hay and those who came to the committee asking for the passage of the resolution that it should not be considered as a precedent. But, unfortunately, this present chairman of that committee did not hear that statement. We are giving notice to everybody that this is under no circumstances to be considered a precedent.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Apparently the precedent was established a year ago.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And this will further confirm that precedent, if it is adopted. But may I make an inquiry? If the clerks of the committee are not preparing the index because they say they have not the time, what is to prevent them from saying the same thing next year and the following year, and what is to prevent the clerks of every other committee in the House from saying it? Why not discharge the clerks and get somebody else?

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Baker is given notice for the future that it is of no use for the Committee on Military Affairs or any other committee to come before the House and ask for an indexer to do the duty that ought to be performed by the committee clerks.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose another committee comes in with exactly the same state of facts. Are you going to draw the line on that committee? What will the chairman of the Committee on Accounts do on exactly the same state of facts that we have here? What will you do?

Mr. LLOYD. I can not speak for the next chairman of the committee, but I can speak for the chairman of the committee up to the 4th day of March, and I can say that no other chairman of a committee in this House can present such a resolution as this, because I can assure him that the Committee on Accounts will not allow such a resolution to be reported favorably.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Would it not relieve the situation for this House to vote down the resolution?

Mr. LLOYD. It would not relieve the committee. It would not give them what they need.

Mr. FESS. But it would relieve the Committee on Accounts if the House were to vote down this resolution?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. Does not the gentleman think that, considering the large expenditures which the bill carries, the House ought to have that information in the hearings indexed?

Mr. LLOYD. There is no question but that it should be indexed. Other committees furnish indexes. This committee at this time does not furnish the index, and it is necessary for the House, in order to secure the index, to make some kind of proper provision.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. There is somebody living who can furnish this index?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not have him as the clerk of the committee to furnish it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, the hearings on the Army bill have been virtually completed—have been completed, in fact, as I am informed by a member of the committee. What is to prevent the clerk or assistant clerk from taking a few nights and doing the work he is called upon to do?

Mr. LLOYD. I can not answer that question. That can only be answered by the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LLOYD. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 113, noes 65.

So the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LLOYD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MANN. I want to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is all over, so far as that resolution is concerned.

Mr. NORTON. I was on my feet trying to get recognition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but the Chair announced that, and recognized the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] to make a motion and to lay that motion on the table. The Chair can not see every gentleman in this House at once, and gentlemen must exercise their lungs. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. NORTON. No; I will withdraw the point, but I think I have some right to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize anybody that he sees is trying to get recognition.

ADMIRAL GEORGE DEWEY.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. DALE] represents the district in which Admiral Dewey was born. I ask unanimous consent that he may address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. DALE] may address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, the passing of the chief of heroic figures in this Nation and the ranking naval officer of the world is announced by the President of the United States in a message to the Congress.

Admiral George Dewey was a native of the State of Vermont and was appointed to the Naval Academy from what is now the second congressional district of that State.

From his home, under the shadow of the dome of the State capitol, he went a youth from the mountains out upon the seas. After 40 years from the steps of that capitol he beheld the largest throng of people ever assembled within the State as they welcomed him home with the acclaim of the glory of his achievement. That was a long period of time between those two dates. Even so, it illustrates the primal element in the character of the man, that by the restriction of his energy and the confinement of his study to the one purpose of his life through all these years he became thoroughly equipped for the victorious response to the great requirement of his country.

The records of history may be searched without finding a like illustration of the man meeting the event so completely ready.

These are the perfected qualities of the soul of the man:

Discipline—to obey the superior command that sent him away from that which in equity seemed to be his opportunity.

Courage—to convey his fleet over the waters that might at any moment engulf it as Habana Harbor did the Maine.

Skill—to maneuver and operate to the annihilation of the Spanish squadron, and with the loss of not one United States marine.

Poise—to maintain the rights of international law amidst the provocations of the German fleet and to keep the welfare of his country above his own ambition when the full flush of victory was upon him. [Applause.]

To the Navy and naval affairs he devoted his whole life and during the later years he gave the inestimable benefit of his experience to many sessions of Congress down to the present. With no attempt to become conspicuous in other positions, he passed from his achievements followed by the homage of the whole people of his country to the glory that awaits him over the unknown sea. [Applause.]

The deeds of his heroic life are history, and of it the Nation is justly proud. The spirit of such a life lives on—an inspiration forever.

It is a glorious reflection that this Nation has given such an influence to all the world, and beyond that stands the superlative fact that Vermont gave him to the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the remarks of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. DALE] I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, this morning I received from a prominent citizen and banker of Cincinnati, Ohio, the following telegram:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 17, 1917.

Hon. ALFRED G. ALLEN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Two events of the first importance to the American Navy have happened within the last 24 hours. The death of Admiral Dewey, whose memory the American people desire to honor, and the acquisition by the United States of the Danish West Indies, the naming of which is now before Congress. I suggest that Congress could do no more grateful act than to name the islands after our great and lamented naval hero, the Dewey Islands.

ALEXANDER A. LANDESCO.

That telegram suggested to me the following joint resolution, which I prepared and introduced this morning, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 344) to change the name of the Danish West Indies to the Dewey Islands.

Resolved, etc., That on and after the date of the physical occupation of the Danish West Indies by the Government of the United States, the name of these islands shall be changed and they shall thereafter be designated and known as the Dewey Islands, in honor of George Dewey, late Admiral of the United States Navy, whose services to his country shall thus for all posterity be commemorated and gratefully acknowledged.

Mr. Speaker, I have had this resolution referred to the appropriate committee, with the request that it be given early and favorable consideration, for I know of nothing more appropriate than the naming of these islands after the great hero of Manila Bay.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), such officers of the Navy as may be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, and the Chief of Staff of the Army to attend the exercises in the rotunda of the Capitol.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 198) providing for the confirmation of the agreements between the States of South Dakota, Montana, and Idaho and the United States relating to the selection of lieu or indemnity lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

PICKETING THE WHITE HOUSE.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker and gentleman of the House, I desire to address the House at this time concerning the conduct of certain persons who think they are working for the cause of woman's suffrage by annoying the President of the United States by placing pickets about the White House. [Applause.]

In the first place, the President has nothing to do with the amending of the Constitution of the United States, other than as a private citizen. The Constitution is amended by two-thirds of the Members of each branch of Congress voting to submit such a resolution to the States for ratification, and the President could not even veto such a resolution and does not have to approve it. I desire to say that I favor woman's suffrage by States and by Federal amendment, but as a friend of woman's suffrage I desire to condemn this conduct on the part of these advocates. Such conduct is unbecoming, and instead of advancing the cause, actually retards the cause. And while I differ from the President politically, I desire at this time to place my disapproval upon such conduct. It is an insult to the high office of President of the United States, even if it could do any good.

I trust these enthusiasts will discontinue this practice and thus show that they are entitled to the suffrage. The President submits to it because they are women, for if men did those things they would be placed in jail. This conduct is not upheld by a majority of the woman's suffrage party in the United States, and especially by those of Ohio. I trust these misguided women will see the error of their way and see that such proceedings are stopped. [Applause.]

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Under the rule heretofore adopted, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 18994) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of certain public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for certain public buildings; to abolish the Office of Supervising Architect of the Treasury and to create and organize in the Treasury Department a bureau of public buildings and define its duties, powers, and jurisdiction; to create and establish the office of commissioner of public buildings; to fix the salary and prescribe the duties and powers of the said commissioner of public buildings; to create a board of estimates and prescribe its duties and powers; to provide for the standardization of certain classes of public buildings, and for other purposes, with Mr. CLINE in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Flint, Mich., $100,000.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KELLEY: Page 5, line 16, after the figures "$100,000," at the end of the line, add the following:

"The Treasury Department is hereby authorized and directed to prepare the necessary plans and specifications immediately after the approval of this act, and proceed with the work herein authorized at the earliest date practicable."

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk I desire to say that the authorization carried in the bill is for building an addition to the post office at Flint, Mich. If my amendment is adopted by the House, it will direct the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare the necessary plans and specifications, and proceed to construct the building at the earliest practicable date. I want to say to the House that I would not offer this amendment if I did not believe that the situation and the needs at Flint, Mich., are unusual. In the first place, in the last few years the city of Flint has come to be one of the great automobile centers of the Nation. The great Buick plant is located there. The Chevrolet, Dort, and Patterson plants are there. The town has increased its population in the last 10 or 12 years from 13,000 to upwards of 80,000.

Not only that, but there are in process of construction and almost completed additions to those great factories which will give employment to 10,000 more men, who, when they are employed there, will bring the population of Flint up to 125,000.

The post-office building at Flint was authorized in 1903, at a cost of $80,000. It was intended to accommodate 22 employees. There are 60 employees in the post office there now. The nine rural carriers and the parcel-post business have been transferred to the basement, which was not intended to be used at any time for office purposes. It has no proper ventilation and no daylight. The basement was intended by the architect only for the boilers and for storage purposes, as the department notified me in a letter only yesterday.

I want to call particular attention further to the conditions at Flint, as to the growth of the town. In 1903 there were 13,000 people; in 1910, 38,000 people; in 1916, 80,000 people, and when the factory additions that are now almost completed are ready they will employ 10,000 more men, which will bring an additional population of 40,000 or 50,000 people.

In 1903 there were 2,445 school children in Flint. In 1910 there were 6,185. In 1916 there were 12,737. In other words, there are as many school children now in the city of Flint as there were inhabitants in the town when the present post office was provided for.

Last year the city voted $600,000 for additional school buildings for the city. So far as the business of the town is concerned, in 1904 there were $4,000,000 invested in industries in the city. In 1916 there were invested $55,620,000. In 1904 there were 2,494 persons employed in the factories, and in 1916 there were 20,000. The pay roll for 1904 in the city of Flint was $1,267,000. In 1916 it was $18,540,000.

The output of the factories in 1904 was $6,177,000. In 1916 it was $111,240,000.

The bank clearings of Flint for 1915 were $16,000,000; for 1916 they were $51,446,000.

The post-office receipts when the present building was authorized in 1903 were $40,000. In 1910 they were $97,000, and in 1916 for the calendar year they were $170,000.

These facts, it seems to me, puts the city of Flint in a class by itself, and it ought not to be compelled to wait three or four years before the improvement contemplated is this bill can be started. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I agree with what the gentleman from Michigan has said about the city of Flint, but I can not see any earthly necessity for the amendment. The object of the legislation which we are incorporating in the bill is to expedite the construction of all these buildings. This amendment only gives certain directions to the Treasury Department to speed it up as far as Flint is concerned. I am perfectly willing to do that, but it will be done if this legislation is adopted. Flint will be relieved at an early day.

Mr. KELLEY. I think the chairman of the committee recognizes the fact that the needs of this particular situation are very great.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No question about that.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand the department is three or four years behind, and it seems as though this ought to be considered an emergency case and that it is ahead of some other cities not quite so pressing.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state that there are a number of cases in this bill as urgent as the case of Flint.

Mr. KELLEY. I was told at the department the other day that there was no situation in the United States so urgent as the city of Flint.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think Binghamton, N. Y., would be as urgent. I want to say to the gentleman that it is the purpose of this legislation to hurry all of these matters along, and if this amendment should be adopted, then every Member on the floor would want the same kind of an amendment attached to his item, and you would load the bill down with directions. I would have no objection at all to a general direction in the bill, but I can not see what good it would do, urging the Bureau of Public Buildings to expedite all of these matters. That is the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I ask if the general legislation to which the gentleman refers will result, in his opinion, in actual building of some of these buildings so urgently needed?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think it will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And result in the building of them within a reasonable time, say, two years.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think so. I want to say, as I said in my opening speech, that the committee is perfectly willing to accept any amendment that will accelerate it. The only effort of the committee is to get the buildings economically and expeditiously constructed, and if Members can help us I want them to do so.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I wish to say that I visited Flint, Mich., not so very long ago, and I can testify to the conditions set out by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Nobody disputes that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And I was about to say that there are other places in as serious a situation. I can refer Members of the House to another city that is in an even worse condition, and I would like to see them both relieved.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield? Suppose it is absolutely impossible to transact the business in a building that is not large enough to transact the business of the mails, let alone the working of them, and in which it is impossible to secure other quarters, then would the gentleman think that we ought to do the business in the street?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think, and I do not think my colleague would insist on it, that we should select items out of the bill and direct officials of the Treasury to prefer those to other items. We ought to leave all that to the bureau of public buildings which we propose to establish.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would not a great emergency make a difference?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am perfectly willing that there should be a general provision in the bill directing the bureau of public buildings to take up the most urgent cases first. I think that ought to be done, but I do not think we ought to attach a provision like this to different items, and if the amendment should prevail that undoubtedly would be the result.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, after line 16, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"To provide for the purchase of additional land and for the erection thereon of an addition to the post-office building at Boulder, Colo., $72,000: Provided, That not to exceed $7,000 of this amount shall be used for the acquisition of additional land for the enlargement of the present site."

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I am not one of the Members of this body who become frightened when bills of this character, designated as pork-barrel bills, come up for consideration in the House. I believe it is a patriotic duty which we owe to the various communities of the country to provide for adequate mail facilities, and therefore I am in sympathy with this bill and will gladly support it. The amendment which I have offered is for an addition to the post-office building at Boulder, Colo. Boulder, Colo., is the home of the University of Colorado and it is a fast-growing town. The university has a student body of 2,200. Within a few miles of that city there are from 20 to 30 mining camps, which have sprung up since the present building was constructed. This building was constructed in 1910, at a cost of $59,951.85. The city has absolutely outgrown the building and the facilities there for handling the mail are very incomplete, indeed, so much so that the commercial organization there requested that the two Senators from Colorado and myself visit their city for the purpose of having first-hand information as to conditions. This we did in the month of November, and we found all of the claims they had presented were fully justified in what we saw. The outer vestibules to the building were completely occupied with desks for city carriers and other postal business. When the building was constructed there was no provision in the law for a parcel post, and that has added tremendously to the business there. I introduced a bill early in this session asking for $50,000, $40,000 for the addition to the building and $10,000 for the purchase of an additional site. Referring this to the Treasury Department, they recommended that it will require $65,000 to construct an adequate addition to the present capacity of the post office to properly handle the mail there. They suggested that $65,000 be appropriated and $10,000 for a site.

I have in my possession, furnished by the commercial organization there, an option upon the land adjacent to the building, the only land available. It was intended to be built upon by the owner this summer. The organization induced him to desist, and they secured an option upon it for sufficient time to determine whether the Government would take hold of it. They pay a monthly rental on this of $25, to expire when the Government refuses to purchase the land or when it is purchased by the Government. The postmaster there in a letter shows that the postal receipts since 1910 have increased about 50 per cent, and that the city has increased 50 per cent in population. Taking these matters into consideration, it is my hope that the chairman will allow this amendment to prevail.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I want to support the amendment offered by my colleague. I feel that I would hardly be doing my full duty to one of the most beautiful and best little cities in the West if I did not indorse what my colleague has said concerning the necessities of the city of Boulder. It is not in my district, but for six years I had the honor to represent the State of Colorado at large, including, of course, that splendid city. The city of Boulder is entitled to very much better post-office accommodations than it has at present. It is the site of our State university, one of the great universities of this country. We have many hundreds of young people from all over the United States who go to that university, and there ought to be a suitable Federal building there, one commensurate with the importance of an important city and a great seat of learning. There are many thousands of people come there every summer to attend the Colorado-Texas Chautauqua; and there are many thousands of visitors there every year. The post-office building which they have there now is really wholly inadequate. It is no ornament, as it should be to that kind of a city. The building ought, by all means, to be enlarged at least sufficient to do the business of the city. In reality the city should have a new building three times the size of the present one. Colorado is proud of our university city, and the country is proud of our State university, and our Government ought justly to have a suitable public building there. I do feel that there could be no appropriation that would be more meritorious, more needed, or better expended than this one offered by my colleague Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I hope the committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word on behalf of the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. TIMBERLAKE], and incidentally about the bill. I represent the city of Denver, which has a building which cost millions of dollars, contributed to by the people of the United States, and voted through the generosity of their Representatives in this body. I am glad to announce in this presence that I do not consider this a pork-barrel bill but a patriotic and deserving bill. I come from a district which will get no part of the money appropriated, but I am glad to say that I am going to cast my vote for the bill. I am glad to note in the bill that in all the other districts in Colorado a building has been provided. I know they are deserved and ought to be constructed. The city of Denver is within 28 miles of the city of Boulder—and I state it in that way in compliment to my colleague, for I ought to say that the city of Boulder is 28 miles from Denver. However, we know that it is a great city, a great university is there. The city needs more postal facilities and ought to have the amendment asked by the gentleman. The people in Denver are the kind who do not believe because a subsidized press all over the country is giving utterance to the views of the Navy League and the munition factories that therefore no public buildings should be constructed, but they believe that some of the money contributed by the people should be returned to them in the shape of public buildings. They believe that their Representative in Congress ought to vote for this bill. They are not so lost to the sense of appreciation as to fail to recall that through the generosity of the representatives of the people in the past the city of Denver has now a magnificent structure, nor do they believe that since Denver has no present needs in the premises that the people in other portions of the country who desire only small and modest buildings should be denied simply because a venal press, inspired through the business office, practically advocates that all the revenue wrung from the people shall go to enrich the Shipbuilding Trust, armor plate and munitions factories combination, and none to the comfort and welfare of themselves. In behalf of a city that is appreciative enough to look upon the Government's bounty to it as well deserved, and would not have its Representative denounce as "pork" the reasonable requirements of other communities in this great country, I sincerely hope that this bill will pass and that it may be improved by the adoption of the amendment offered by my colleague, Mr. TIMBERLAKE. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, there is no question but that the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] is entirely worthy and meritorious, but there are thousands of just as meritorious projects which could not be incorporated in the bill. There must be a limit placed somewhere. I want to say that it is not the fault of my friend from Colorado that the item is not in the bill. It would have been in the bill, I think, beyond question, if the matter had been called to his attention in time, and he could have submitted it to the committee so that it could have been investigated, but the gentleman from Colorado did introduce bills for other places, one of which is included in this bill, and this matter was called to his attention only a few days ago. If anybody is to blame, it is the people of the city of Boulder, or those in charge, who did not call his attention to this condition of affairs. Mr. Chairman, if this item goes in, there are various others, which will mount into millions, which will probably be incorporated, which would result in the bill being killed by its own weight. We feel that we have gone as far as we ought to go in public-building construction at this session of Congress. While I agree with the gentleman absolutely as to the merits of the proposition, I sincerely trust that this amendment will not prevail, because it means loading down this bill to a point where it will never pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, after line 16, insert the following as a new paragraph:
"To provide for the purchase of a site for an addition to the post-office building at Boulder, Colo., $7,000."

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this second amendment for this reason. As stated in presenting the other amendment the citizens of Boulder have at an expense to themselves secured an option of the only available site they will ever have for an addition to their present post-office building. The price asked for this property was $10,000——

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I will.

Mr. COX. How long does that option run?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Six months. And for this option they pay $25 a month——

Mr. COX. What is the date of the option?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The date of the option? I now disremember.

Mr. COX. Approximately?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Some time in December, 1916.

Mr. COX. The option is for $7,000?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. And they agreed to keep the option alive for six months?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes, sir; and for which they pay $25 a month rental. I sincerely hope that the committee will allow this amendment, that this site can be purchased now, while it is available, and can be procured at a reasonable cost, for the Government must of necessity and very soon provide more adequate mail facilities for the city of Boulder when this time does come. If this amendment is approved, proper grounds are ready to receive the additional facilities. If not, it may not be available when required.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. TIMBERLAKE) there were—ayes 29, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Houlton, Me., $50,000: Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of this amount shall be used for the acquisition of additional land for the enlargement of the present site.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, after line 2, insert the following:
"For the repair and improvement of the old post-office building at Houston, Tex., for the purpose of its use for post-office and other governmental purposes, $40,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Kenosha, Wis., $75,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in view of the comment made about Wisconsin items, I want to occupy a few minutes to show the character of this particular provision for Kenosha, Wis. Kenosha is one of the most thoroughly enterprising, up-to-date, and thriving of cities. In 1890 its population was 6,532, in 1900 it was 11,008, in 1910 it was 21,371, and in 1916 it is conservatively estimated, on the basis of the school census, to be from 32,000 to 34,000. The post-office receipts at Kenosha in 1890, calendar year ending December 31, were only $8,781. In 1900 they were $19,327, in 1910 they were $63,855, and for the year ending December 31, 1915—the year before I introduced my bill—the receipts were $95,619. In that year the post office at Kenosha turned over $48,082.94 to the United States Treasury, net revenue over and above all expenditures for the office itself.

According to the Federal census report of manufactures, the value of the products manufactured in Kenosha in 1914 was $28,341,000.

True, the building was constructed not many years ago, but the business of the office has increased with such great rapidity that the present quarters are grossly inadequate. They have had to put in a mezzanine floor and the mezzanine floor obscures the light, and is in other ways far from being a good thing. The clerks have to use the vestibule for the purposes of the parcel post, something for which, of course, it was not constructed. The necessities of the public business require either the renting of additional quarters or the erection of an addition to the building. The Government of the United States owns an ample site there and ought promptly to build an addition that is most urgently needed and will be of very great service. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MONTAGUE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue temporary permits for additional diversions of water from the Niagara River.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Lowell, Mass., $250,000: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of this amount is to be used for the acquisition of additional land adjoining the present site: Provided further, That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem such course more advantageous to the best interests of the United States, he is further authorized to sell, in such manner and upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the United States, the present post-office building and the site thereof in said city; to convey said land and building by the usual quitclaim deed to the purchaser thereof; to contract for the acquisition, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of a suitable site; and to contract for the erection and completion on such new site of a suitable and commodious building, including fireproof vaults, heating, hoisting, and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, for the use of the United States post office and other Government offices. The proceeds of the sale of the present post-office building and the site thereof may, together with a sum not exceeding $250,000, be applied to the cost of acquiring such new site and of erecting and completing such new building thereon.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to engage the attention of the chairman of the committee. There is provided in the bill, I believe, three items where provision is made for the disposition of present post-office sites. In all of those sections a different method of disposal by the Secretary of the Treasury is provided. For instance, in this case it is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to use such methods as he deems best in case it is decided that the present post-office site and building should be sold. On page 20, there is an item providing for a post office at Greenville, S. C., and provision is made for directing him to sell at public sale for cash to the highest bidder. Then, there is another provision on page 35 relating to the post office at Faribault, Minn. There the provision is that he may be authorized to sell at a proper price. I thought it was best for the interest of administration to have one method of disposal for these various sites, and I believe it is not to the best interest of the Government to have a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to sell those sites at public sale, because the gentleman is certainly acquainted with the fact that the time might not be opportune to sell at public sale, and the bidder might get the property below its actual value. Now, I have prepared an amendment. I am not rising to be critical or hypercritical, but merely for the purpose of trying to perfect this language, and I want to inquire whether the gentleman would have objection to it or similar language in these three cases where the Secretary of the Treasury may be called upon to sell the present post-office building and site. It is the policy which has been followed in other instances where we have disposed of public sites; for instance, just recently in the House we authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the marine hospital station at Cleveland, and it carried a similar provision.

I am not rising in criticism of the committee, but merely to try to perfect the language, if possible, by inserting, after the word "sale," the following: "at public or private sale, but at not less than the value as determined by an appraisal thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That would be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. STAFFORD. That, I contend, would safeguard the interests of the public and would also be a relief to the Secretary of the Treasury if in case of a public sale the price was not adequate.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That will be perfectly satisfactory to the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then strike out the words "in such manner."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That will be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 15, strike out the words "in such manner," after the word "sale," and insert "at public or private sale at not less than the value first determined by an appraisal thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection at all to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman in regard to the practical difficulty of determining how much of an authorization he has for this Lowell (Mass.) building before he sells the old building. Is it the purpose to go on using the old building until the new building is completed?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That has been the policy, and that is the policy we want to pursue.

Mr. TILSON. If so, how can you tell how much you are going to sell your old building for before you have erected your new building, so that you can sell your old building?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. You can not.

Mr. TILSON. Have you not left yourself in an almost impossible situation?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I think not. The Government will use the old building until the new one is completed. Then it is to be sold.

Mr. TILSON. The amount of the authorization for the new building is dependent upon the amount for which you can sell the old building. You can not dispose of the old building until after you have erected the new building, and you do not know what your authorization for the new building will be until you have sold the old one, thus going around in a circle. I call the gentleman's attention to it, because a similar difficulty arose in the case of the new post-office building in my own town.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. To what is the gentleman directing his attention?

Mr. TILSON. Lowell, Mass. It says:

The proceeds of the sale of the present post-office building and the site thereof may, together with a sum not exceeding $250,000, be applied to the cost of acquiring such new site and of erecting and completing such new building thereon.

In other words, the amount which you could expend on the new building would depend upon the amount for which you sold the old.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The sale is made with the understanding that the Government is to use the property until the new building is completed.

Mr. TILSON. Then you would sell the building for future delivery, as it were?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. With the Government's right as user until the new building is completed.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office, customhouse, and courthouse at Minneapolis, Minn., $100,000.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Minnesota: Page 7, line 11, after the words "United States," strike out "post office, customhouse, and courthouse" and in lieu thereof insert "Federal office building and customhouse."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Albertville, Ala., $25,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

This bill contains about 406 items. It carries authorizations for the expenditure of $38,000,000. It is commonly called the "pork bill," and we really ought to take no offense at this, when we consider items such as the one under consideration at present, and more than 100 more like it, are included in this bill. Albertville, Ala., according to the figures of the committee that considered and reported this bill, had a population in 1910 of 1,544, and the post-office receipts for 1915 were $5,633.04. Mr. Chairman, we certainly should not take offense because many items in this bill are dominated as "pork."

What is "pork" in appropriation bills? It is a term that might ordinarily be difficult to define or to apply as a standard in every individual item. Fortunately for us, so far as this bill is concerned, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has set a standard to govern Congress. It lays down a rule that separates the good items from the bad, the meritorious projects from "pork."

In the last paragraph of this bill the committee, I take it, lays down what it feels is the correct rule for making authorizations and appropriations for public buildings. That paragraph provides that no city, town, or village within the United States shall be considered by any committee as being suitable for erecting therein a Government building, and no Government building shall be erected therein, unless for three consecutive years the postal receipts shall aggregate more than $10,000 per year. This standard is far from being perfect, but it is a step in the right direction. It should, however, guide us in our deliberations so far as the items in this bill are concerned. The vice of the provision is that it is only intended to guide future Congresses and not to guide us as to items in this bill.

Here is a village where, for the year 1915, the postal receipts were only $5,500. The gentleman from Florida, and also the gentleman from Alabama, in whose district this place is located, both criticized the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] because he has referred to this bill as a sectional bill. They ought to have said nothing about that. They should have let that charge go unanswered, because when you examine this bill that is the only conclusion that any disinterested man can arrive at. Let us see whether it is a sectional bill or not if measured by the rule that the committee that reported it said was a correct rule, and that is that a city, town, or village to receive an authorization for a public building must have $10,000 of receipts for three executive years. This town has but $5,500 receipts, and by the rule of the committee is "pork."

Let us apply this rule to the bill. In Alabama we have 10 Members of Congress. There are 10 items in this bill for Alabama; only 2 of them come within the provisions of the last paragraph of this bill. In only two of the places in Alabama are the receipts more than $10,000 per year.

Take Arkansas, with seven Members of Congress, it has eight items in the bill. In only three of the eight places are the annual receipts of the post office more than $10,000 per year. Take Florida, with four Congressmen, and seven items; in only five of the seven places are the receipts more than $10,000 per year.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. No; I can not yield just now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman repeat the last remark about Florida?

Mr. GOOD. In Florida there are seven items. In five of them the receipts are more than $10,000 per year and in two the receipts are less than $10,000 per year.

Take Georgia, with 12 Members in the House, with 19 items in the bill; in only 2 of them are the receipts more than $10,000.

By your action in the last paragraph of the bill you say that 17 of them are not legitimate items and ought to be excluded; that in the future such projects will be excluded. We ought not to lay down here a proposition for future Congresses that this Congress is not willing to stand by.

Take the State of Kentucky, with 11 Members of Congress. Fourteen items for Kentucky are in this bill. In only two of them are the receipts of the post office more than $10,000 a year. Twelve of the fourteen Kentucky items, by the rule of the committee, ought to have been excluded from this bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a Representative from Kentucky now?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman notice in this provision that this $10,000 limit fixed in the last clause of the bill shall apply only where there are no Federal activities except those of the post office?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and the proviso is that it shall not apply to items in this present bill, but shall apply to the actions of Congresses hereafter.

Mr. LANGLEY. It applies to places where there are no other activities besides post-office work.

Mr. GOOD. Yes. Take Louisiana, with eight Members of the House. There are eight items for Louisiana in this bill in addition to one special item. In four of those places they have less than $10,000 receipts and four of them do meet the requirements of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to ask the gentleman if he will not be fair enough to name these towns instead of simply saying "four" or "three"?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I will name the towns if I have the time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is good.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. I will name the towns that I reach in a moment, and in extending my remarks I will name every town, and I will give receipts and population as shown by the committee's statistics.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to have the names now.

Mr. GOOD. Take the State of Mississippi, with eight Members of Congress. There are seven items in this bill from Mississippi. In only one are the receipts more than $10,000, and in six of them, according to your own estimate, the authorization is pure "pork."

Take North Carolina, with 10 Members of Congress, with 16 items in this bill. In only 4 of the 16 are the receipts of the Post Office Department more than $10,000 a year, and in 12 of the 16 places the receipts fall much below $10,000 per year.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like the gentleman to name these towns.

Mr. GOOD. I am coming to Tennessee. That is a very good one, where it is 100 per cent pure; but it is pure "pork," because there is not an item in Tennessee that comes within the provisions you have laid down to govern future Congresses.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then the gentleman can not name them except in one State?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I can name them all. If the gentleman thinks I am not correct in this I will give it in every State he wants.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I know the gentleman is correct in some of his statements, but not in others.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] may have 15 minutes in which to give the information that he has been asked for.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GOOD. I can not name them unless you give me at least 15 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will agree not to refer to these towns by number, but will name each specific town, I shall not object to his having the additional time.

Mr. GOOD. I will name them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Take the State of Mississippi. In Mississippi there are, as I said, eight Members of Congress and seven items in this bill, and in only one place are the receipts more than $10,000, and that is in Jackson, where the receipts are $114,-

150.25. But in Columbia the receipts, according to the statement furnished me by the committee, are $8,505.15. In Pascagoula the amount is $6,179.94. At Lexington it is $8,421.84. In Indianola it is $7,661.88. In Winona it is $8,584.35, and in Okolona it is $6,160.70. Are those the correct figures?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They are absolutely not.

Mr. GOOD. I am reading from a statement that was given to me by the clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It is entitled "A statement of bills referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, showing all items included in the public-building bill, House of Representatives, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, revised and corrected to July 25, 1916, inclusive." [Laughter.] This publication was given to me by the committee less than 10 days ago.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Showing the receipts for 1915?

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely showing the receipts for 1915.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; and what are the receipts for 1916?

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman say that he has a publication of this kind of a later date?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have not; but I have the receipts. I have the receipts from the Auditor for the Post Office Department.

Mr. GOOD. And it was on that compilation that this committee based the bill, reported to the House long before the receipts for 1915 were available—reported on December 16, 1916, and toward the close of the fiscal year.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Just to remind the gentleman of what he just read. That provision here provides that for three successive years the figures must be $10,000; and in any case, if those figures are correct, they would be correct for only one year.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; that is true. Take the case of North Carolina. There are 10 Members of this House from that State. There are 16 items in the bill for that State. In 12 of the places the receipts, according to this publication, are less than $10,000 a year, and in only 4 of the places are the receipts more than $10,000 a year. Does the chairman of the committee deny that statement?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will deny it directly. I am going to let you have all the rope you want.

Mr. GOOD. At Louisburg the receipts are $8,128.64; at Wadesboro, $8,254.70; at Sanford, $9,568.04; Rockingham, $9,095.60; Mount Airy, $11,692.02; Lumberton, $12,433.98; Dunn, $9,252.97; Albemarle, $8,759.99; Lenoir, $9,827.27; Morganton, $10,211.35; Wilson, $24,560.94; Williamston, $6,043.18; Mount Olive, $5,679.28; Clinton, $6,254.73; Marion, $8,315.52; and Edenton, $8,861.03.

South Carolina has seven Members of this House. It has 12 items in this bill. In 9 of those places the receipts, according to this statement, were less than $10,000, and in only 3 of the 12 places were the receipts more than $10,000.

The items in South Carolina referred to were as follows:

Aiken, $13,818.85; Rock Hill, $23,975.34; York, $8,596.98; Dillon, $7,733.63; Conway, $6,030.89; Hartsville, $9,884.33; Greenwood, $23,297.36; Manning, $5,435.28; Summerville, $7,796.61; Easley, $5,342.35; Greer, $6,643.48; Bamberg, $5,762.12.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that at all of those places the gentleman has named there are no other Federal activities save those of a postal character?

Mr. GOOD. I did not say that. I do not believe there is much other Federal activities at any of them.

Mr. LANGLEY. That makes a difference.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know that this publication gives all that information. In a few instances it does, but there are very few instances where other activities are mentioned. Everyone who knows anything about it knows that the other Government activities conducted in the post offices of these small villages are negligible. In most of them there is but little postal activity.

Mr. SAUNDERS. As I understand, the rule which the gentleman has cited does not apply, save to those cases where the sole activities are of a postal character.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is the point I made a moment ago.

Mr. GOOD. Tennessee has 10 Members of the House and nine items in this bill. In every one of the nine places the receipts for the year 1915 were less than $10,000—100 per cent pure "pork," according to the rule contained in the last legislative paragraph of this bill. These are the places: Lewisburg, $9,430.44; Rogersville, $7,679.56; Rockwood, $6,242.98; La Follette, $5,065.98; Lenoir City, $6,460.46; McMinnville, $8,724.74; Huntington, $4,427.28; Dickson, $7,451.91; Brownsville, $8,111.42.

There is not a single town in Tennessee provided for in this bill where the receipts are more than $10,000 a year.

Take Texas, which has 18 Members of this House and 20 items in the bill. In 14 of those items the receipts are more than $10,000, and in 6 of the items they are less than $10,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A pretty good record.

Mr. GOOD. Texas is away above the record of the other Southern States, but nothing to brag about. Do you say this is not sectional? I have given you 11 Southern States carrying 130 projects. In only 42 of those projects are the receipts more than $10,000 a year, and in 88 places they are under $10,000 a year. Measured by the rule contained in the last paragraph for detecting "pork," 42 of the 130 places for Southern States are meritorious, and 88 are pure "pork." Excluding Texas, in 10 Southern States there are 110 projects in the bill of which 26 are meritorious and 84 are pure "pork."

I have also examined this same publication as to 24 of the Northern States. I have taken California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, and Washington. I find that in those States you have provided in this bill for 200 projects. In all of those places except nine are the receipts more than $10,000 a year. Out of 200 projects there were 191 with receipts over $10,000 a year, and in only 9 places were the receipts less than $10,000 per year. I will give them by States if you want them. California has 11 Members in the House. It has 14 items in this bill. In only one, and that is the bill introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] are the receipts less than $10,000 a year. Colorado has 4 Members of Congress and 3 items in the bill. All of them have receipts of more than $10,000 a year.

Connecticut has 5 Members of this House and 3 items in the bill. Every one of the places has receipts greater than $10,000 a year. Delaware has 1 item, and its receipts are over $10,000 a year. Idaho has 2, and the receipts in both places exceed $10,000 a year. Illinois has 27 Members of the House and 18 items in this bill. In only three of them are the receipts below $10,000 a year. In one of these places the bill was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], who, standing on the floor of this House a few days ago, asked Congress to deny to the Federal employees a living wage, but by his bill he would put pork in his own district by building a public building in a town where the receipts are only $7,854.96 per year.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GOOD. Just a very brief question.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does the gentleman charge, then, that this bill is sectional?

Mr. GOOD. I do, measured by the committee's rule.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Or partisan, or both?

Mr. GOOD. I am dealing particularly with the sectional feature of it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman tell me what are the aggregate appropriations in the North and in the South?

Mr. GOOD. I have not made that computation.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Why not?

Mr. GOOD. I have not had the time.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Oh, I see.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think it would be a good idea if the gentleman would do that.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, is that the idea? Will you take a meritorious project, like Chicago, Ill., that handles more mail than several of your Southern States, and say that a meritorious project like that should be denied unless the bill also carries items for every congressional district in the United States? That illustrates the evil of this kind of legislation. That is what makes the public call this kind of legislation "pork." Some Members apparently feel that they must have "pork" for their districts in order to return to Congress, irrespective of the good of the service.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I suppose in wanting to come back our fellows are different from you.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. No; I can not yield now. When I have finished this statement, then I will yield.

Indiana has 13 Members of the House and 9 items in this bill. There is not a single place provided for in that State where the receipts are under $10,000 a year. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] says he is going to answer; and when he answers let his answer for Hazard, Ky.——

Mr. LANGLEY. I will.

Mr. GOOD. Where the report is to the effect that Hazard has 537 people and receipts of $4,447, and yet Hazard, Ky., is getting $40,000 by this bill out of an empty Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I shall object if the gentleman will not answer questions.

Mr. GOOD. Well, gentlemen, there are plenty of other items in this bill.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I object; the gentleman is ranting over these items without any foundation.

Mr. MANN. "The galled jade winces."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CARAWAY. I object. If the gentleman wants to make statements of that kind let him make them on the floor.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, there will be no more extensions this session.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not care.

Mr. MANN. Neither do I.

Mr. NOLAN. The regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California demands the regular order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida was recognized.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield just a minute?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. May I have unanimous consent to extend my remarks to those items in the various cities that I have read, especially the 11 Southern States, giving the amount that was in dispute. I do not want to be placed in the attitude of misrepresenting them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the items referred to.

Mr. GOOD. And to finish the list of the Southern States.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman include in his statement the figures from the Post Office Department for the last fiscal year, 1916, instead of 1915, which he read to the House?

Mr. GOOD. I will include only the figures furnished me less than 10 days ago by the committee that reported the bill as the figures on which this bill was framed, because it was formulated before the complete report of the figures for 1916 were available.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman include the figures of 1916 if they are furnished him?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, the gentleman can print those himself.

Mr. LANGLEY. Let the gentleman from Iowa ask again to extend his remarks, and I express the hope that my friend from Arkansas will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa if when he went to the committee room he was informed by the clerk that these were the figures, or did he ask specifically for the figures, or a copy of the printed record.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the objection that I made to the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. In reply to the gentleman from Florida I will say that I do not remember exactly what I asked the clerk, but the clerk gave me this book, which was very kind of him. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Iowa has 11 Members in this House; 13 projects for Iowa are named in this bill, and in only one place are the receipts less than $10,000 per year.

Kansas has 8 Members of the House; 11 Kansas items are provided for in this bill, and in but two of the places named are the receipts less than $10,000 per year.

Maine has 4 Members in this House; 4 items for Maine are in this bill, and in each of the 4 places provided for Maine the receipts are more than $10,000 per year.

Massachusetts has 16 Members in this House; 14 Massachusetts items are provided for in this bill, and in every one of those places the postal receipts are more than $10,000 per year.

Michigan has 13 Members in the House; 10 Michigan items are provided for in the bill, and in only one of those places are the receipts less than $10,000 per year.

Minnesota has 10 Members in the House; 7 items are provided for in the bill, and the postal receipts in each of those places are more than $10,000 a year.

Montana has 2 Members in the House; 4 Montana items are authorized in the bill, and in all of those places the receipts are more than $10,000 a year.

Nebraska has 6 Members in the House; there are 6 Nebraska items in the bill, and in only one of those places are the receipts less than $10,000 a year.

New Hampshire has 2 Members of the House; there are 2 items in the bill for New Hampshire, and the receipts in each of those places are more than $10,000 a year.

New Jersey has 12 Members in the House, and 7 items provided for in this bill, and in all of those 7 places the receipts are more than $10,000 a year.

New York has 43 Members in the House; there are 21 New York items in this bill, and in every place provided for New York the receipts are more than $10,000 per year.

North Dakota has 3 Members in the House, and 2 items in this bill. In both of those places the receipts are more than $10,000 a year.

Ohio has 22 Members in the House, and 14 items in the bill, and in each of those places the receipts are in excess of $10,000 per year.

Oregon has 3 Members in the House, and 4 items in the bill, and in the 4 places the receipts are in excess of $10,000 a year.

Pennsylvania has 36 Members in the House, and 25 items in the bill, and in all of those places the postal receipts are in excess of $10,000 a year.

South Dakota has 3 Members in the House, and 3 items in the bill, and in each of those places the receipts are in excess of $10,000 a year.

Washington has 5 Members in the House; there are 3 Washington items in this bill, and in each of the Washington places the receipts are more than $10,000 per year.

Measured therefore by the same rule, and taking the same postal receipts for the same years, we have 10 Southern States, excluding Texas, carrying 110 items in the bill, and in 84 of those places the receipts are less than $10,000 a year, and in only 26 of those places are the receipts more than $10,000 a year; while in 24 Northern States the bill authorizes 200 projects, 191 of which are, according to the committee's rule, meritorious, and 9 should be rejected. In other words, out of 110 southern cities provided for in this bill 26 are meritorious projects and 84 are pure "pork," according to the committee's rule; while out of 200 northern cities 191 are meritorious projects and only 9 are pure "pork." And yet the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], the chairman of the committee that reports this bill, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], also a member of the committee reporting this bill, complain because the gentleman from Wisconsin has characterized this bill as a sectional one.

The rule of the committee for measuring "pork," provided for on page 62 of the bill, is as follows:

> That from and after the passage of this act no city or town in the United States where there are no Federal activities other than the post office shall be considered, either for the purchase of a site or for the construction of a Federal building, by the commission of public buildings or the bureau of public buildings or by any committee of Congress, unless it shall appear that the postal receipts for such city or town have amounted to at least $10,000 annually for three successive years: Provided, That nothing herein shall apply to cities or towns where sites for public buildings have been acquired or authorized.

In answer to practically the only criticism of this analysis, that I have not taken into account the other activities of the Government in these towns and villages which obtained an authorization in this bill, where the receipts are less than $10,000 per annum, I desire to call attention to the fact that in Alabama not in a single one of the eight places mentioned in the bill where the receipts are under $10,000 is there any other activity mentioned in this report from which I have read.

In Arkansas no Government activity is mentioned in the three villages referred to where the receipts are under $10,000.

Likewise in Florida none of the towns with receipts under $10,000 are referred to as having any other Federal activities.

So, too, in Tennessee, in none of the nine towns mentioned in the bill is any other Federal activity referred to.

North Carolina mentions 2 of the 12 as having other Federal activities.

In South Carolina one of the eight places complained of is named as having other Federal activities, and in Mississippi one of the six is described as having other Government activities. It will be observed, therefore, that there is absolutely no merit in this contention. It appears that these villages have not only small postal receipts but also no other Federal activities.

In accordance with the promise to extend in the RECORD the complete data furnished me by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I submit the following: Detailed statement with regard to the States to which I have referred is taken literally from the "Statement of bills referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, showing all items included in the public-building bill, House of Representatives, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, revised and corrected to July 25, 1916." The statement does not show the bills introduced upon which no action was taken by the committee reporting the bill. Otherwise it is taken literally from said statement and shows everything shown by the original statement regarding the towns and villages included in the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I am not at all surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], not at all. He is just about as near correct in his statement just made as he is in almost anything else that I have heard him discuss. That is the reason I wanted him to name the items. He took up Alabama, for instance. Here are the towns:

Athens, building and site, $10,710.64. It goes beyond the requirements of the law. Sheffield has only a site, and yet its receipts are $10,096.65.

Union Springs, where a site had already been procured, provided for by a former Congress, and I stated in my speech that these questions were fully considered by the committee, and the committee finally determined that as long as the Government owned the land and Government money was invested in the property, that we had just as well provide a modest building for these places, and in the future, carrying out the great reform with respect to the work which this legislation does, we would see to it that no more sites were granted in places of that size, and therefore the building was granted. I want to say for Union Springs that the last quarter's postal receipts show that it will go beyond the $10,000 limit the present fiscal year.

Take Sylacauga, a place in exactly the same situation as Union Springs. The postal receipts were $7,698.67. The site is already bought. We did not feel that the Government money ought to lie there idle when a modest building could be placed there without great expense to the Government to carry on the public business.

Greenville, where we place a building on the site already obtained, has postal receipts of $10,848.94, beyond the limit required by law.

Albertville, another of the places, and Attalla, which my colleague, Mr. BURNETT, will refer to, because they are in his district. These are two places where sites had already been provided and the Government money invested, and it was a question whether your committee would let it lie idle or put a modest building upon the site and let the Government use it, and we decided to erect a building.

Ozark, where we only provide a site, the postal receipts are $6,872.32.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to get through these figures first. The gentleman next takes my own State of Florida. We put in a site for Arcadia, a town that has receipts of $15,358.14. We put in a site for West Palm Beach, a town that has postal receipts of $28,441.79. We put a building at Lake City, in my own district, where a site had already been bought by the Government and where the receipts amount to $11,735.51—over the limit.

We provided for a site at Perry, where the receipts are $7,218.79, more than a thousand dollars over the law fixed by the Senate in the 1913 bill and concurred in by the House.

We provide for Clearwater in the district of my colleague, Mr. SPARKMAN, who is retiring from Congress. Arcadia is in his district, and we gave him a modest site there. We gave him a building and site at Clearwater, where the postal receipts are $10,727.51. Is there a man upon this floor who would say that we did wrong in giving to the district of this distinguished gentleman, who for 22 years has been on the floor, a modest building at Clearwater and a site at Arcadia, when both came within the law?

The next place is Kissimmee, the home town of my colleague, Mr. SEARS.

A site had already been purchased, and we provided a building for Kissimmee, where the receipts are $11,295.70—more than a thousand over the limit. At Monticello we allowed a site, where the receipts are $6,003.12—beyond the limit of the law. Not in one item, in so far as Florida is concerned, can the gentleman put his finger on a place where we have not tracked the law absolutely—not one.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I pause for the gentleman to do it.

Mr. GOOD. The last provision of your law provides that the receipts must be for three calendar years.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Hereafter. Can not the gentleman read? Does he not know that that provision is intended to apply to future bills and not to this one?

Mr. GOOD. I understand that.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We are operating under the law of 1913.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For a question.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman say that the figures that he is now giving us are the ones upon which the committee in reporting this bill based its action?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I said in my original argument that in the framing of this bill we took the items, and when the fiscal receipts of 1915 had shown such growth as to indicate beyond the peradventure of a doubt that they would go beyond it, we acted upon that, and we are justified by subsequent facts, because they have gone beyond it in practically every instance.

Mr. GOOD. The report which the committee gave me and from which I read was printed July 25, 1916.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GOOD. Before one-half, or just about the close of one-half, of the fiscal year, and therefore the figures for 1915 were the figures that the committee had.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have just told the gentleman what we acted upon, but if he can not understand it, I shall try to state it again. I said we took the figures for 1915, the fiscal year. We got the figures for the last quarter and looked into the growth of the town, and in cases where they were very near the line marked out in the 1913 law and gave every promise of going over it, in some instances we allowed sites or buildings, and we have been justified in that because the figures demonstrate that we were right.

Mr. GOOD. Then the whole bill is built on speculation and the report of 1915?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And as my colleague on the committee, Judge RUCKER, says, in most cases we had the fiscal receipts for the past quarter and for the calendar year. The gentleman takes up Georgia. At Sandersville, we allowed a building where a site had already been obtained and paid for; the receipts were $8,618.05. At Cairo, where the receipts were nearly $8,000, we allowed a site. At Pelham, where the receipts were over $7,000, we allowed a site. At Blakely, where they were nearly $7,000, we allowed a site. At Covington, where they were more than $7,000, we allowed a site. At Monroe, where they were $8,000, we allowed a site. At Commerce, where there were over $7,000, we allowed a site. At Winder, where there were more than $8,000, we allowed a site. At Decatur, where there were more than $7,000, we allowed a site. At East Point, where there were over $11,000, we allowed a site. At Rossville, where a site had already been obtained, we allowed a building; the receipts were much over $8,000.

I wish the gentleman from Iowa would listen to these figures, if he wants to be fair. I want him to hear them. He has attacked a whole section of the country. He has attacked 11 States. He charges this bill with being sectional, when the fact is that about $25,000,000 of the money authorized in it goes to the Northern States, and only about $6,000,000 to this much bemeaned Southern section. That is the truth, and he can not get away from it. It makes no difference what may be the extent of the gentleman's venom, the facts and figures are against him. I continue with Georgia: Hawkinsville, where we simply fixed a site, had nearly $9,000 in receipts. Baxley, where a site was provided, there are receipts of over $6,000. Cuthbert had nearly $8,000, and only a site was provided. At Ashburn, where the receipts are over $6,600, only a site. At Thomaston, over $6,000, just a site. At Jackson, over $7,000, a site was provided. At Fort Valley, with $11,000, only a site.

Mr. Chairman, that is the record of Georgia in this bill, and the gentleman animadverts upon it and charges us with distributing pork. The gentleman says there is but one item in Mississippi that goes beyond the $10,000, but he was not fair enough to state that at some of these places there were other activities besides the post office. He was not fair enough to state that other activities were to be housed, but he dismissed the proposition with the statement that only one of them went over $10,000. What did the committee do? At Columbia, with receipts of over $8,500, we provided a site. At Pascagoula, where there is a post office and customhouse, with nearly $7,000 of receipts, we provided a site. At Lexington, with over $8,500, we provided a site. At Indianola, with over $8,000, we provided a site. At Winona, with over $8,800, we provided a site. At Okolona, with over $6,700, we provided a site. Wherein have we offended against the law? Will the gentleman name one place?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For what purpose?

Mr. GOOD. For a question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman mean to say that I did not correctly state what was stated on page 29 of this report with regard to Pascagoula? That report shows only a post office, and if there is a customhouse there the committee itself is derelict in failing to inform the House as to the conditions. I took what was in the report.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am not responsible for what the printer may do or what mistakes may be made in getting up a printed document. The report was in the office, and if the gentleman had wanted to know the truth he could have gotten it; but he did not do it.

Mr. GOOD rose.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman think he is treating the House fairly; does the gentleman think he is treating anybody fairly; I will ask the gentleman, does he think that he is treating himself fairly when he states a part of the truth and does not state the rest of it?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that every word I said on the floor of this House is the truth as propounded by his committee.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. As far as the gentleman went, but the gentleman did not state it all.

Mr. GOOD. I would have gone further but for the objection from the gentleman from Arkansas for me to proceed with regard to all of these items.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman knows that if he had it would have demolished his case; that is the reason.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. When the gentleman stands up here in the face of the fact that the Northern States are getting $25,000,000 in this bill and the South is only getting $6,000,000, and charges it with being a sectional bill in the interest of the South the gentleman's reasoning qualities are at fault or else he did not want the House and country to know the real facts. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman state what caused the committee to write the last paragraph on page 62, that hereafter buildings used for the Post Office Department alone should only be authorized and sites acquired for them if the postal receipts for three consecutive years amounted to more than $10,000?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman think that is a good rule to be guided by?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do.

Mr. GOOD. Then why were not you guided by it in the formation of this bill? That is what I am complaining of.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Because the Government had already bought the land and we did not believe it should lie vacant.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman does not mean to say that.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do.

Mr. GOOD. The bill here authorizes more than 100 sites where they have not bought the land. It authorizes the sites, and in most of them the receipts are under $10,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Because that is the law we are acting under now.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, if it is a good position day after to-morrow, is it not good now?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And was put in the bill by a Republican Senate and signed by a Republican President. [Applause.] The gentleman did not protest when it went in, because in the last bill, if I mistake not, the gentleman from Iowa had some pork.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In just a moment—yes; just for a question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I desire to ask, if the gentleman constructed this bill along partisan lines, how did it happen my amiable friend from the second Tennessee district [Mr. AUSTIN] got 25 per cent of the projects going to the State?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If it was constructed along those lines——

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman mean to say that in the last appropriation bill an item was included for my district where the receipts of the post office were under $10,000?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, no; I did not.

Mr. GOOD. Of course not.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But I did mean to say the gentleman had a finger in the last pie, and the gentleman did not kick about it. The gentleman did not ask for it to be stricken out.

Mr. BURNETT. And he did not kick about the last bill, either.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No. Now, in regard to North Carolina. Lewisburg, a site, $8,500 receipts. Wadesboro, $9,500 receipts, received simply a little increase for site of $5,000. Stanford, with $10,600 receipts, only got a site. Rockingham, with $9,900 receipts, got a site or an increase for site of $5,000. The site had already been provided in another bill. Mount Airy, with $12,700 receipts, got a building, as a site was already provided. Lumberton, N. C., with $13,954 receipts, got a building, with a site already provided. Dunn, with $10,033.89 over the limit, got a building and a site. Albemarle, with more than $9,700 receipts, got a site. Lenoir, with $10,865 receipts, got a building, as a site was already provided. Morganton, with $11,361, got a building and a site. Wilson, with $27,000 of receipts, with a Federal court convening there, the building was arranged for before the court was established, making necessary an increased appropriation in order to provide quarters for the court. Williamston, with $6,023.18 receipts, got a site. Mount Olive, with $6,381 of receipts, got a building, as a site had already been bought. Clinton, with about $7,000 receipts, got a site. Marion, with over $8,000 receipts, nearly $9,000, got a site. Edenton, with over $9,000 receipts, got a building, as a site was already provided. Then my friend comes to South Carolina. Aiken got an extension of an old building. Rock Hill, simply an increase there to take care of the court. That is quite a little city in our section of the country. York, with $9,718 receipts, got a site. Dillon, with nearly $8,000 receipts, with a site already bought, had a building provided for it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not understand the gentleman. When he says "Got a site," does he mean that it was already provided for by previous legislation?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I mean got a site in this bill.

Conway, with over $6,000, was given a site; Hartsville, with over $11,000, was given a site; Greenwood was given simply an increase there to take care of the court; Manning, with over $5,800, was given a site; Summerville, with $8,500, was given a site; Easley, with over $6,000, was given a site; Greer, with over $7,000, was given a site; and Bamberg, with over $6,000, was given a site. And that is all there is to South Carolina's pork.

Now, take Tennessee. Lewisburg, with nearly $9,000, gets a site; Rogersville, with over $6,000, was given a site; Rockwood, with over $7,000, gets a site; La Follette, with over $6,000, gets a site; Lenoir City, with nearly $7,000, gets a site; McMinnville, with over $9,000, and the other two, with over $6,000, were each given a site. In Huntingdon, with nearly $5,000, a site has already been bought there, and it gets a building in this bill. Brownsville, with over $9,000, gets a site; and Dickson, with nearly $8,000, gets a site.

Texas is the next one.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PAGE of North Carolina). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In Texas, Coleman, with $11,000 of receipts, gets a building on a site already provided; Plainview, with over $19,000, gets a building and site; Crockett, with over $9,000, gets a building on a site already bought; Jacksonville, with over $12,000, gets a site; Lockhart, with over $11,000, gets a site.

I shall not mention Fort Worth and Dallas, because I do not suppose that even these gentlemen who are yelling sectionalism will attack those places.

Mexia, with $10,132, gets a site; Georgetown, with over $12,000, gets a building on a site already provided; Kingsville, with over $13,000, gets a building and a site.

Sweetwater, with receipts of over $18,000, gets a building on a site already bought; Huntsville, with $12,000 of receipts, gets a building on a site already provided; Paris, Tex., where the post office and courthouse have been burned, is given $170,000 for the construction of a new building; San Benito, where there is a customhouse and post office, and where the receipts are over $8,000, gets a site; Lufkin, where the receipts are over $13,000, gets a building and a site; Seguin, where the receipts are over $12,000, gets a building and a site; Alvin, with receipts of over $8,000, gets a building on a site already acquired; Henderson, where the receipts are over $7,000, gets a site.

There is the status as to these Southern States which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] attacks.

Mr. GOOD. I observe the gentleman said nothing about Tennessee.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I did. Every item in that State I went over. And Missouri is just as good as these that I have gone over, and the other States. I want to say to the gentleman once and for all that he will find that the day has passed on the floor of the American Congress for a man to make a reputation by undertaking to raise the sordid cry of sectionalism. [Applause.] I want to say to him that every Republican upon this committee except two joined in the making of this report. Every Democrat except two joined in the making of this report. There was absolutely nothing partisan or sectional in it. And the gentleman, I fear, underrates the intelligence of his constituency when he believes that he can court favor with the good people of Iowa by coming upon this floor and making an attack like this without a single justification for it. I want to say to him that on my committee among my clerks is a young man who gave him this printed document, who is from the State of Iowa. He did come from a good State. There is no sectionalism in the committee or in any of its acts. And this bill shows that if there is any the gentleman's part of the country got the best of it.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I will suggest that the gentleman close his remarks by paraphrasing those lines from Spartacus, the gladiator:

Hear ye yon lion roaring in his den?
'Tis three days since he tasted meat.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think the roaring, instead of being from the lion, comes from another animal. [Laughter.] I think the gentleman imagines he is a lion.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. He roars like one, but God knows he is not one.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I think the gentleman from Florida could well quote another passage from Spartacus, when he said he had met all forms of both animal and beast. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out the last two words, and asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. FITZGERALD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18994, the public-buildings bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SPEAKER FOR TO-DAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOM,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1917.

I hereby designate Hon. JOHN. J. FITZGERALD to serve as Speaker on Thursday, January 18, 1917.

CHAMP CLARK, Speaker.

LATE ADMIRAL GEORGE DEWEY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 68.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in recognition of the long and distinguished service rendered the Nation by Admiral George Dewey appropriate funeral services be held in the rotunda of the Capitol on Saturday, January 20, 1917, at 11 o'clock antemeridian, and that the two Houses of Congress attend said services.

That as a further mark of respect his remains be removed from the Capitol to Arlington Cemetery for burial in charge of the Navy Department, attended by the Sergeants at Arms and the committees of the two Houses.

That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), such officers of the Navy as may be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, and the Chief of Staff of the Army to attend the exercises in the rotunda of the Capitol.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of another resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 457.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives appoint a committee of 25 Members, to join the committee to be appointed by the Senate, to attend the funeral services of Admiral George Dewey at Arlington, Va.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this resolution, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith on the part of the committee of the House be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the public-buildings bill, with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will resume its sitting. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] is recognized.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. CLARK of Florida], who has just taken his seat, defended the items in the bill for the various other Southern States that have been attacked by the gentleman from Iowa and others, but he did not refer to the Kentucky items that they have also attacked. I assume that, so far as the items in my district are concerned, he left it for me to defend them, and I thank him for doing so, because I am proud of the privilege which is thus afforded me, and I ask the attention and indulgence of Members while I do this briefly. But first I wish to make a few general observations.

Mr. Chairman, this House and the country have been stirred recently as they have not been for years by the charge, publicly made and widely and promiscuously circulated, that Members of the legislative and executive branches of the Government have been engaged in prostituting their official duties to private ends, and many gentlemen in this body, who have been and are still trying to serve their constituents honestly and faithfully—some having spent the best portion of their lives in such service—have been startled by the readiness with which a large element of our population gives credence to these charges. Gentlemen, do you know why such is the situation? Of course, a good deal of the responsibility for it is justly chargeable to that class of newspapers and magazines of the country that flippantly and without regard for truth charge men in the public service with conspiring together to loot the Treasury for their respective districts, and to frame and pass "pork" bills with that end in view and without regard to the merits of the propositions involved. The course which these newspapers and magazines have taken, and the reckless misstatements of fact in which they have indulged is reprehensible enough, the Lord knows. But at the same time I think that much of the responsibility for the situation to which I have referred is justly chargeable to certain Members of Congress themselves——

A MEMBER. That is right!

Mr. LANGLEY (continuing). Who, assuming "a holier than thou" attitude, having joined in these unjust criticisms and reckless misstatements of fact, and through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and otherwise have helped to lay the foundation for this public distrust of the people's servants at Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I admire a game fighter. I have no quarrel with, but genuine admiration for, anyone who, confining himself to the truth, argues in decent, logical, and manly fashion against the wisdom of proposed legislation or against the merits of a proposition involving the expenditure of the people's money. But when these newspapers and magazines and these Members of Congress, without regard to the facts, and apparently without endeavoring to know the facts, indulge in such misstatements and seek to make them the basis of criticism involving the sincerity and even the integrity of sworn public officials, I have not sufficient command of the English language to fitly express my contempt for such conduct. [Applause.] I was somewhat surprised and disappointed at my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who is usually so fair and logical, and for whom I have always entertained the greatest respect, when, in his address in this Chamber last Tuesday, he intimated that we were seeking to pass this bill, although we knew it ought not to be passed, merely in order to promote our own political ends, and in order to enable us to go home to our constituents and say, "Here is what I got for you," and also for contending that we of the committee included in this bill the general legislation which it carries—the expediency, wisdom, and necessity of which are generally conceded—not so much because we wanted such legislation enacted but because we hoped it would help us carry through the iniquities of the bill. This was not his exact language, it is true, but it was the inference inevitably to be drawn from what he said.

Mr. Chairman, not long ago there was another omnibus bill pending in this House—the fish hatchery bill—and it will be remembered that the gentleman from Wisconsin severely criticised that bill and vigorously called attention to the fact that it carried nothing for his State. I might have charged that he was opposing that bill because it did not carry any "pork" for Wisconsin, but I did not do that. I gave him credit for opposing it on higher grounds. Gentlemen, what else can we expect than to call forth "Tom Lawsons" from every hamlet in the land if we continue this spectacle for the edification of the public of constantly impugning each other's motives and whining and growling about "pork" and "loot" and "graft," instead of rising to the higher plane of dignified and manly argument? Mr. Chairman, I have been criticized lately in the public press in various sections of the country for seeking to get recognition for my district, and the charge has been repeatedly made that the items included in the bill at my instance are without merit; that I know this to be the case; and that the efforts I am making are solely to further my own political fortunes. These things have been reiterated by Members here in this body. Conscious of the injustice which these publications and these charges have done me and the district which I have the honor to represent, I do not propose to remain silent any longer, especially in view of what has been said on this floor to-day, and I am going to answer these charges now and without waiting until the items are reached in the reading of the bill. I see the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is present, and I am glad he is, because I want to pay my respects to him for a moment or two. [Laughter.]

There appeared recently in the Journal of the American Institute of Architects an article written by one Charles Harris Whitaker, its editor. He says that it was written avowedly for the purpose of showing that "the whole system of appropriating money for public buildings betrays the shameless manner in which public funds are squandered in order that political patronage may be distributed."

In this article specific reference is made to me, and, among other things, it is stated that at my instance an item was inserted in the bill for $40,000 for a public building in Hazard, Ky., a town of 537 persons, and $35,000 for a building in Pikeville, a town of 1,280 inhabitants. An advance summary of this article appeared in the Washington Evening Star, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], without any inquiry as to the accuracy of the figures or the truth of the article in general, inserted it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and it appeared in a conspicuous place in the RECORD, so that wider publicity was thereby given to it. [Laughter.] Such procedure may be in accordance with the gentleman's conception of his duty to his fellow Members, but it is not my conception of my duty to them. The gentleman from Indiana ought to have verified some of the figures and allegations before having them printed in the RECORD. He should have given me an opportunity to tell him what the facts were before publishing me in such a false light. It would not have taken him 30 seconds to have ascertained that he was quoting antiquated figures and that the city of Hazard has over 4,000 population now instead of 537, which the article that he gave prestige and credence to by putting it in the RECORD asserts. It would not have taken him any longer to have ascertained from me that the city of Pikeville has a population of over 3,000 instead of the number stated in the article, and that each of these cities is located, respectively, in the center of two of the greatest coal fields in the world, where marvelous developments are in progress. He could have easily ascertained that this article is an infamous libel, pure and simple, so far at least as these two cities and their Representative in this body are concerned. It is true that their population was shown by the census of 1910 to be what the article says, but that census was taken seven years ago, and a great deal has happened in that section of Kentucky since then. The trouble about the article is—and the same is true of numerous other articles published in various papers and magazines, and of statements made on this floor as well—that they seek to mislead by the assertion that this is the present population. During the decade from 1900 to 1910 the unparalleled development which has recently occurred in this section had scarcely started, and yet the population of the county in which Hazard is located increased 39 per cent during that time, and the population of the county in which Pikeville is situated increased 36 per cent during the same period, while the general average for the whole country was only 21 per cent.

During this same period what was going on in the district which the gentleman from Indiana represents? The census shows that during that period his district not only did not gain in population but actually lost 2,217. A gentleman who has lived, moved, and had his being in such environment can not, of course, fully understand how a town can become a city in seven years. [Applause.]

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for one question?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman does not mean to imply that the loss of population was due to the Representative here, and that the gain was due to the other Representative? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. No; I do not mean to imply that, but I do want to say to my friend from Missouri that there are scores of people from the third Indiana district who have moved to the mountains of Kentucky, many of them into the tenth congressional district, and are now prosperous citizens there; and it has been reported that nearly all of the A No. 1 congressional timber has moved over into Kentucky, which may account for the ease with which the gentleman is able to succeed himself in this body. [Laughter and applause.]

They ought not be blamed for migrating from such a decadent district, represented by a parsimonious Congressman, who is always looking toward the setting sun. [Laughter and applause.] I am reminded in this connection, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] who is making such fierce onslaughts upon this bill, and who a few moments ago challenged me to defend Hazard, represents in part a State which, according to my recollection, lost 4 per cent of its population during the decade to which I have referred. Of course, gentlemen like my friend from Indiana and my friend from Iowa, who for all these years have been breathing the atmosphere of retrogression, can not understand the marvelous and wonderful progress that is going on in the mountains of Kentucky. [Laughter.] They can not conceive of how a village of 537 souls can in such a short space of time increase in population as Hazard and Pikeville have.

They can not conceive of the fact, which I assert to be the fact, that there is one place in my district where the census enumerator in 1910 had to ride a mule over a mountain trail to get the names of the inhabitants that is now the site of a city of 3,000 or 4,000 people, with electric lights, water works, paved streets, an artificial lake of 70,000,000 gallons of water, a club house that cost $50,000, a power plant that cost more than three times that much, furnishing light, heat, and power for miles and miles around. I refer to that splendid, progressive city of Jenkins, in Letcher County, for which I expect to get a public building a little later on. They can not understand how in such a short time there can be such development, nor that where a jolt wagon could then scarcely go, there are to-day splendidly graded roads, with up-to-date automobiles dashing back and forth and crossing the summit of the Cumberland Mountains as readily as a Ford can climb Capitol Hill. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. I hope the committee will grant me 10 minutes more. I was to have had 20 minutes in the general debate yesterday, but was unavoidably absent when the bill came up unexpectedly and general debate upon it was exhausted before my return, so that I lost that opportunity to address the committee.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I ask unanimous consent that 10 minutes additional be granted the gentleman.

Mr. POWERS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to say this to my friend from Indiana and my friend from Iowa and others of that class [laughter], that if I thought I was getting too much salary I would not take it all. If I thought that the mileage allowance was excessive and part of it graft, I would not accept the excessive and graft part, and I certainly would not scramble to get at the head of the line at the cashier's desk when the time came for receiving the mileage. [Laughter.] I have no patience with gentlemen who will talk about "pork" and "loot" and "graft" and then take their share of it.

Gentlemen, I could say much more than I have said about the rapid growth of Hazard and Pikeville, and the unparalleled progress of that section of Kentucky generally if I had the time and you the patience to listen. Why, Mr. Chairman, there have been expended in recent years in the upper valley of the Big Sandy and Kentucky Rivers over fifty millions of dollars in railroad construction and over twenty millions in the development of the coal fields; and yet these industries in these sections are still in their infancy. I have a statement here from the mayor of Hazard and resolutions passed by the Commercial Club of Hazard, and several other letters and documents which I shall insert in the RECORD under the leave granted me, and which not only show that its present population is between 4,000 and 5,000, but that it is likely to be doubled at the present rate of increase by the time this proposed building shall have been erected. Its population has increased over a thousand a year for the past three years. Extensive preparations have been made for additional street improvements. It has recently erected a $50,000 school building and a $60,000 courthouse. It has over 800 school children within the common-school age, and an average attendance of over 600. It also has a splendid institution of learning, the Baptist Institute, with an average daily attendance of over 200. There are 19 school teachers employed in Hazard who are paid annual salaries aggregating about $12,000. A number of power plants have been erected in that immediate vicinity for coal operations and other purposes, and preparations are being made for additional plants, some of which are to be the finest in the country. There are three large coal operations at Hazard, and 16 altogether within a radius of a few miles of it, representing a total investment of two and one-half million dollars. The output of coal has increased from 100,000 tons in 1915 to over 500,000 tons in 1916, and as the Lexington Herald, one of Kentucky's leading papers, said editorially a few days ago, the surface has hardly yet been scratched. It is one of the finest coal fields in the world. The postmaster of Hazard, who, by the way, is a good Democrat, informs me that between 8,000 and 9,000 people, which includes the mining population outside the city limits, get their mail at the window of his office, and that in the aggregate in the neighborhood of from 20,000 to 25,000 people are supplied with mail through that office, and yet the gentleman from Indiana, and his coconspirator, "Charley Whitaker," and these great daily papers and magazines of the country, would have you believe that Hazard is only a crossroads village of 537 souls.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. My time is short, but I will yield.

Mr. GOOD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that 25,000 people in that neighborhood of Kentucky were supplied through this office at Hazard?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; the mail goes to that office, to be sent from there——

Mr. GOOD. Why, my dear sir, last year, according to the official report, the receipts were only $5,320.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am talking about the star routes that converge there, and the employees at that office have to handle that mail in transit. There are eight post offices, most of them located at mining-operation plants, within a radius of 5 miles of Hazard. All of these are supplied through the Hazard office. Not only that, but a large portion of the service in the adjacent counties of Leslie and Knott are supplied through that office, so that I am safely within the facts when I say that fully 20,000 people are served directly and indirectly through the Hazard office. Not only is all this true, gentlemen, but a bulletin recently issued by the Geological Survey shows that in near-by territory, in the same river valley—the Kentucky—one of the greatest petroleum oil fields in the world is being rapidly developed, and hundreds of barrels of oil are to-day gushing out of some of the wells recently drilled, and millions of capital are being invested for the further development of the field. Great as has been the progress of Hazard, the glory of her future has hardly yet begun to shine. Only the glimmer of her sun of prosperity is beginning to show over the eastern hills. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman include in his remarks Proctor Knott's speech on Duluth?

Mr. LANGLEY. Hazard will surpass Duluth even, if you will only give us a little time and help us along with a Federal building. [Applause.]

Reference has been made to the fact that money could be saved by continuing the present plan of renting a building there for the post office. Let me tell you what sort of a building we have the post office in now. It is a frame building, wholly unsuited and unequipped for the purpose. It is such a character of building that it is impossible to get fire insurance upon it, and it is a disgrace to the Government to transact the business in such quarters, as the documents I shall print in the RECORD will show.

But, Mr. Chairman, the proper and decent dispatch of the post-office work there is not the only purpose for which we need a Federal building at Hazard. I have here a letter from the Director of the Bureau of Mines showing the imperative need of a mine rescue station there.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. I must decline to yield. My time is getting short.

Mr. CRAMTON. Just a question.

Mr. LANGLEY. I understand; but it all takes time. We need a mine rescue station there. The Director of the Bureau of Mines appeared before our committee and made a statement of the imperative necessity for a mine rescue station there and room in the Federal building for that purpose. There are nearly 4,000 miners employed in that immediate vicinity, and there will soon be many more thousands, and the topography of the country is such that they can not be cared for by mine rescue provisions that they now have and are to have in the adjacent coal fields; so that, as the Director of the Bureau of Mines says, we must have a mine rescue station there in order to properly provide for the protection of the lives and health of the miners. And that alone would justify the appropriation that we are asking for in this bill.

There are other Government activities there that I could refer to, but I will not take the time now.

I feel that I have said enough to show unmistakably that the criticism of Hazard that has been so freely and recklessly indulged in is wholly without foundation, and that I have convinced this great body that instead of being a "pork" advocate I am simply asking justice to a great people and a thriving city; and I hope that when we come to the Hazard item those who have been opposing it will not have the courage to vote against it, so that it will receive your unanimous approval.

Mr. Chairman, one would think, after reading all that has been said about me in this connection in the press of the country, that the tenth congressional district is literally covered with "pork" filched from the people's Treasury; and yet it is a fact that there is not a single Federal public building in the tenth district, as now constituted, and not a single public work of any kind in it, except a water gauge which the Weather Bureau a good many years ago put upon one of the piers of the county bridge at Pikeville which cost about $100 and which measures the tide in the Big Sandy River, especially when it is on a rampage. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURRAY. How are you fixed for water and other drinks down there?

Mr. LANGLEY. We have plenty of water, but we are getting a little shy and a little dry, too, in other lines, due partly to the heavy demand from Oklahoma. [Laughter.]

With due deference to the intelligence and information of gentlemen of the House, I am satisfied that most of them are not accurately advised as to the wonderful and unparalleled progress that is going on in that section of Kentucky, and that is why I have trespassed thus far upon your courtesy and kindness in discussing these things, and why I shall ask you to bear with me for a few moments longer while I call attention to the other section of the district, the Big Sandy Valley, in which Pikeville is situated. The Big Sandy River, which empties into the Ohio at Catlettsburg, traverses one of the richest and most beautiful sections of country in the South for a distance of nearly 200 miles. Government experts have estimated that in this valley alone there are 10,000,000,000 tons of coal, enough to supply the world for a hundred years. This valley is traversed by two great railroads, the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Norfolk & Western, and it is understood that in the near future the Baltimore & Ohio will extend its lines through the valley. As a result one can easily foresee the great future which awaits us there when our resources are fully developed. Pikeville is practically in the center of this great valley. There is not a single Federal public building in this entire valley. The Government has provided a site for one at Pikeville, and this bill authorizes the appropriation of $35,000 to erect the building.

The city has grown from a comparatively small town of a few years ago until it has now between 3,000 and 4,000 population, with some of the finest and best buildings in all that section of the country. In addition to the common and high schools, it has a college, with several hundred pupils enrolled. It has recently erected a high-school building costing about $50,000. All the streets are paved with brick, and the city recently spent many thousands of dollars on this improvement alone. It has two national banks and many industries that I will not stop to name. In fact, it has all of the modern improvements and facilities of an up-to-date, progressive city. In addition to the need of post-office accommodations, room is also required for the United States commissioner, who is located there, and for the deputy United States marshal; also for a deputy collector, soon to be located there. It is also expected that in the near future provision will be made for the holding of a term of the Federal court there, as a very large percentage of the business of the court in the eastern Kentucky district comes from that section; and the building is to be so constructed as to admit of an addition to it for this purpose when the occasion arises.

I wish, gentlemen, that I had the time to picture to you all of the greatness of this section of our country, of its people, and of its matchless resources, so that you could understand as I understand what an unspeakable injustice has been done us by these articles and other criticisms to which I have referred.

I have noticed another editorial this week in the New York Times, which is so fond, apparently, of maligning the people of the mountains of Kentucky. This time they seek to evade the question of veracity which the people of Hazard raised against it when they conclusively showed that it had misstated the facts, and this time refer facetiously to the "exceptional marksmanship" of the Kentucky mountaineers.

I presume the editor of the Times is not familiar with the history of the people of the Kentucky mountains, and how they have always responded to their country's call. Of course, he does not know that Hazard and Perry County were named in memory of the great mountaineers of Kentucky who were with Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry when he attained the immortal place which he holds in American history. Of course, the editor of the Times is not familiar with the fact that when the life of this Nation was imperiled the patriotic mountaineers of Kentucky poured forth by the thousands to defend the flag, one county alone furnishing more Union soldiers than there were legal voters in the county, showing that even our mountain boys went to the front, just as they would do again if a foreign foe should ever attack us, and I guess they would receive a hearty welcome by the New York Times and others of that great metropolis if the attack should happen to be at that point.

We have grown sick and tired of this wholesale misrepresentation of our people in the great daily press of the country, which, ignorant of the truth and apparently not desirous of obtaining it, fill their columns with infamous libels of the mountain people whenever they are short of news, and which practice, I presume, when this leak investigation is over and the European war is ended, will be renewed.

I am proud of this opportunity of saying in this great presence that the mountains of Kentucky are inhabited by a people who are as God-fearing and as law-abiding as are found in any other sections of the Republic, and the standard of morality, Christianity, and education are just as high. More than a century and a quarter ago there came across the Cumberland Mountains from North Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia the descendants of the Huguenots, the Scotch, the Irish, the English, and the Teutons, bringing with them the Christian beliefs and high conceptions of the duties of citizenship inherited from their ancestors, and settling in the wilds of the mountains of Kentucky, they helped to drive out the wild beasts and savages, and paved the way for the wonderful development which is now going on in that section.

Our people of the mountains of Kentucky have not only been practically ignored by our own State government, but by the Federal Government as well, and yet they have borne patiently, unselfishly, and patriotically their share of the burdens of Government. They have even contributed uncomplainingly their part of the millions that have been expended in the erection of great monumental buildings in our large cities, like New York, Boston, Chicago, and San Francisco, in which are located some of the great papers which have been misrepresenting and maligning them. I hope that what I have said here to-day about the people and the resources of the Kentucky mountains will contribute a little bit of information to the editors and news gatherers of these papers which will aid them in being a little more considerate and accurate in the future. If I accomplish that, I shall feel that I have rendered them a far greater service than merely securing an appropriation for a public building, however much it may be needed. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I wish to say that other gentlemen can think as they like and take whatever action may suit them and satisfy their conscience and the obligation of their oath, but my idea of representative government is that each representative should stand for his own people and section first, being ready, of course, to meet others in a spirit of reasonable and honorable compromise, and thus in the end accomplish the greatest good for the greatest number, which is the most that the instrumentalities of government can do. Speaking for myself, I want to say in conclusion that so long as I am a member of this body I propose to stand for the people of my district against the balance of the world.

Just as I stand for our own country as against any other country in the world, so I stand for the people of the mountains of Kentucky as against any other section of the country, because they sent me here as their representative, and I conceive it to be my highest duty to put their interests first. If I should ever find myself unable to do that, I shall hand back to them the commission they have given me, so that they can choose some one who will. [Applause.]

Under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and in support of the statements I have made above, I include as a part of my remarks the following letter from the mayor of Hazard; resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club of Hazard; a letter from the Director of the Bureau of Mines; an editorial and article from the Lexington Herald; two editorials from the Hazard Herald; a letter from D. J. Richards, a citizen of Hazard; a letter from Buford C. Tynes, addressed to the editor of the New York World, in answer to an article appearing in that paper regarding Hazard:

ONE TOWN DESERVES ITS "PORK."

To the EDITOR OF THE WORLD:

I have no disposition to take issue with you on the principle involved in an editorial appearing in your columns of December 20 under the caption "Public-buildings pork," for with that principle I am in hearty accord. But it is surprising to find that a paper of your standing should assume to cite specific instances of abuse in this connection without some foundation in fact therefor. As scores of New Yorkers who have capital invested in that section already know, five years ago Hazard, the county seat of Perry County, established in the wake of the Battle of Lake Erie, was a village of some 500 inhabitants, situate on the Kentucky River in the heart of the mountains of Kentucky, some 45 miles from the nearest railroad point. In 1912 the Lexington & Eastern extension of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad was projected on to Hazard and beyond into the greatest bituminous coal region of the United States perhaps. Hazard has now grown into a town of some 4,000 inhabitants, and is destined to be the commercial and industrial center of this vast coal region. The Hazard community proper, within a radius of 2 miles from the courthouse, has a population of some 7,500 inhabitants. It is the shipping point as also the mail-distributing point for the adjoining counties of Leslie and Knott.

At the present time the United States post office is housed in a dilapidated metal-side building, but lately devoted to a warehouse for a feed business, which is badly lighted and poorly ventilated, and which is in every respect wholly inadequate for the business done therein. Real estate values in Hazard are so prohibitive that the Government has been thus far unwilling to pay the prices asked for more commodious and appropriate quarters.

There is also located at Hazard a referee in bankruptcy for the district, composed of five of the wealthiest coal counties in the State, and also the deputy United States marshal and deputy United States collector for the districts in which Perry County is placed. Taking into consideration all these things, therefore, and the fact that Hazard's future is assured, it occurs to me that it would be truly an economy for the Government to own its own building.

The wholesome benefits that would accrue to a long-neglected citizenship in this mountainous section, oft outlandishly scandalized in blood-and-thunder articles appearing periodically in the Sunday editions of metropolitan yellow journals, and inoffensively romanticized by John Fox, jr., and Charles Neville Buck, would be out of all proportion to the amount expended by the Federal Government.

Is it possible that the World is as much in error as to the conditions obtaining in the other villages named in its editorial? May we offer the suggestion that the World bring the next edition of its almanac up to date in respect to Hazard, at least? With the other towns we are not concerned.

BUFORD C. TYNES.

NEW YORK, December 22.

HAZARD, KY., December 22, 1916.

The efforts of Hon. WILLIAM E. COX, Congressman from Indiana, in his fight against the public-buildings bill, who uses the editor of the Journal of the American Institute of Architects, comments, as an argument against certain appropriations mentions the town of Hazard, Ky., in Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY'S district, as a small, insignificant town of 537 persons, and also mentions other places in eastern Kentucky, giving what were facts in 1910, but lacking a good deal of truth when we consider facts as they are in this good year 1916.

The town of Hazard, instead of being a small town in the sixth class, is now in the fourth class. It is the center of the coal fields of eastern Kentucky, and has a population of 4,000. The last school census gives, in the Hazard district, some 825 boys and girls between the ages of 6 and 20. Within a radius of 5 miles there are 16 coal operations, all independent, with capital invested in plants of over $2,000,000, employing at this time from 3,000 to 4,000 men. This being the county seat, the business to a certain extent is done here. As work progresses rooms will be turned, and in reasonable time the capacity be doubled, which means increased population. This being the center of the coal field on the L. & E. extension of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, there is need at this time for the establishment of a mine rescue station, and the public building upper part is to be used as such, the lower part for post office. The building now occupied is such that no insurance can be had on it, and there is an actual need of a suitable place and building for the great increase in the post office department. If there is not any need of a building here, then it is not needed anywhere. Collier's Weekly had an article on the same line as the utterances of the Congressman from Indiana, made during the campaign just ended. The Hazard Herald, published here, replied, and sent a marked copy to the publishers, but no mention was made correcting the previous statement. If men who are so everlastingly opposed to seeing beyond the boundaries of their own district would come in person to investigate, or wake up to the fact that many changes can take place in seven years, there would be less buncomb, especially in Congress, and more real men's work done in that part of the world known as the Halls of Congress.

D. J. RICHARDS.

HAZARD PUBLIC BUILDING.

The great city newspapers are having much to say these days about the proposed public building for Hazard, and constantly refer to Hazard as a city of 537 souls. The New York Times is one. That great newspaper has the reputation of being exceptionally careful about accuracy as to facts in its news columns. The same should be true with the New York Sun, World, and other great newspapers. Try at least to avoid doing injustice to other communities without the slightest investigation. The circumstances are such as to strongly suggest ill purpose on the part of these newspapers.

When the editor found the 1910 census, crediting Hazard with "537 souls," the fact of a $40,000 public building being proposed should have suggested inquiry to an analytic editorial mind. Strange that it did not. There is always room for progress, and Hazard has developed for the past five years with a steady, rapid stride that has caused the rest of the State of Kentucky to look on with marveling admiration. The very fine quality of the coal here has caused some of the finest operations in the country to be located here, and more are immediately in prospect. The main object of the public building is a mine rescue station for the benefit of the thousands of miners in this section. The great city dailies will certainly not gainsay that great important humanitarian object.

The large city newspapers, whom we feel sure have thoughtlessly done injustice to our situation here, should make ample correction in their columns to properly inform their readers, and we feel confident that they will not hesitate to do so. Properly the Hazard Commercial Club should take the matter up direct with them to that end.

HAZARD GROSSLY MISREPRESENTED BY A NUMBER OF METROPOLITAN NEWSPAPERS.

In the annual appropriation bill for public buildings introduced in the present session of Congress is a provision for the appropriation of $40,000 for a Government building for Hazard. This provision in this bill is due to the efforts of our Congressman, JOHN W. LANGLEY. It looks like the bill will pass—not, however, without some modifications. It provides for a good many other public buildings in various parts of the United States, mainly in cities where no public building has heretofore been erected.

It is but natural, therefore, that many of the larger cities of the country, already provided for with expensive Government buildings, oftentimes costing millions of dollars, should resent the building of a post office or other public building in the smaller cities.

But just now Hazard is getting rather more of her share of opposition from the heretofore more favored communities. Thus it is that we have newspapers like the New York Times, the New York World, New York Evening Sun, San Francisco Chronicle, Collier's Weekly, and many others, knocking this community for even presuming to want a post-office building. Some of them are knocking our Congressman as well. All this is done under the idea that the bill making this appropriation is called "pork barrel," and other epithets of like meaning and import. In every instance Hazard is referred to as a town of 537 population.

In this these newspapers and all of them who have handled this subject in that way show their utter ignorance of the true situation. Of course, it is absolutely unknown to them, perhaps unbelievable on their part, that this city has a voting population—a legal voting population, if they please—of more than twice the number given as the population thereof. Perhaps also it is unknown to them that in and around Hazard there is a population largely in excess of 5,000, tributary to this post office, and that long before any building under this or any other measure can be constructed there will be a population in this city of from two to three times that number. Of course, it is unknown also to these newspapers in the large cities that there are some 15 or 20 large coal mines within a radius of 4 miles of this city, all in continuous operation and all shipping a large tonnage of coal from this point, and that the development of the coal industry in this section has just begun. All this brings Government business not only through the post office but in hundreds of other ways. And why should not the Government of the United States furnish suitable buildings—suitable office buildings for its employees? Other large business does this.

The New York Sun suggests that this and 37 other similar appropriations should be cut in half and that this would enable the Government to build a submarine named "U(nselfish) 38." We quote here an editorial from this paper:

AN INLAND SUBMARINE.

"The porkiest bill ever put before Congress is now pending. A good many of the rural Congressmen are not only bent upon bringing home the bacon but are resolved to rejoice their constituents with the finest strips of fat. A streak o' fat for the hill town, a streak o' lean for the city, seems to be the prescription most favored. A fine sample of the fat is to go to the town of Hazard, Ky., if Representative JOHN WESLEY LANGLEY can compass it. Pork knows no party. Mr. LANGLEY is a Republican.

"The population of Hazard is 537. Yearly post-office receipts are under $5,000. Rental of the present post-office quarters is $250 a year. The public-building bill would appropriate $40,000 for a Government building which would require $3,500 a year for maintenance.

"We have never been able to comprehend the passion for resplendent post offices. If the money were for schools or for the support of teachers a certain lavishness with it would be understandable. But the school district pays for the school house and pays the teacher—we wonder how much she gets in Hazard—whereas the 2-cent stamps of the city dwellers pay for the marble corridors of Government buildings in Hazards from Maine to California.

"Now, it is possible that the people of Hazard do not quite realize that this country needs guns and battleships. They are not on the seacoast. With good reason they feel tolerably secure. But a number of settlements whose wealth would make possible their Government building have not the same comfortable sense of safety. Isn't any reasonable compromise possible? Perhaps for $20,000 Hazard could have a thoroughly adequate Government building, serviceable, substantial, and dignified if not showy. The other $20,000 might go to buy a piece of artillery or some smokeless powder. In the same public-building bill which favors Hazard there are plump sums to erect buildings or buy sites in 16 North Carolina and 21 Missouri villages. If all these and Hazard were to halve the money designed for them they could pay for a submarine, which might be christened the U(nselfish) 38."

We have not space to answer it in full, but we venture to remark that New York City has had millions appropriated to it to every cent which has been appropriated to the entire tenth congressional district of Kentucky since the Civil War, to say nothing of the millions that went to that city before that time. No; we do not specially need submarines or want them. Certainly not half so badly as New York will need our coal if once we should have war.

And, speaking of marble corridors in Hazards from Maine to California, it might not be improper to inquire just who paid for the marble post-office building that cost millions in the city of New York. And did not the people of Hazard help pay for that building as they have helped pay for all the other buildings?

True we pay our teachers, and we paid for our $50,000 school building as well, and we have a school in Hazard which would compare favorably with the public schools of New York, and it has a larger daily attendance than the total population given to Hazard by these papers.

(Hazard employs 19 teachers and pays them $11,795 annually.)

Just here we might say that we have taken the time to investigate the records of the Hazard post office, and this is approximately the amount of business we find in the post office which these newspapers, which are supposed to give correct information to their readers, say serves 537 souls. The number of people served directly—and this means through the windows of the Hazard post office—is estimated by the Hazard postmaster from his records at 8,000.

In addition to this the Hazard post office serves, through its routes, every post office in Leslie County, with the exception of two or three in the extreme lower part of that county, and the number of people served in that county by the Hazard post office is conservatively estimated at 8,000; then, again, the Hazard post office serves more than half the population of Knott County, and this number is conservatively estimated at 5,000. Thus we see, from the actual records of the United States Post Office Department, the Hazard post office serves more than 20,000 people. Yet the New York Sun, in its gigantic misrepresentation or in its monumental ignorance, lets out an awful howl about "pork." We know only from reading such reports what "pork" means; we have never had any experience in the matter in these Kentucky mountains; we have been forced to do the best we could without Government aid in a financial way, but we do wish that these newspapers which have been attacking Hazard so malevolently and viciously would stop to investigate the truth before they publish such libels and spread them broadcast throughout the country.

We believe that if the New York Sun and World and those other papers would investigate the conditions of the Hazard post office they would not only repudiate the obnoxious articles referred to herein, but would openly advocate the appropriation by Congress of the $40,000 proposed in the public-buildings bill. We need just such a building, and everyone who knows the conditions here knows that we need the building. It is up to us to stand by our Congressman, JOHN W. LANGLEY, and to arm him with facts and figures which will show the other Members of Congress that he is justified in his efforts in our behalf. We can do it and we must do it.

[From the Lexington Herald, Jan. 11, 1917.]

HAZARD INVITES NEWSPAPERS THAT CHARGE "PORK" IN $40,000 POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION TO SEND REPRESENTATIVES TO INSPECT HUSTLING PERRY COUNTY CAPITAL.

Metropolitan newspapers which have had editorials, based on incorrect data, derogating the $40,000 appropriation for a post-office building for Hazard, Perry County, are asked to send their special representatives to Hazard for the purpose of learning the real facts about the city in resolutions adopted by the Hazard Commercial Club. President J. B. Hoge, of the club, is authorized to send copies of the resolution to the New York Sun, New York Times, New York World, Colliers' Weekly, Washington Star, San Francisco Chronicle, and "other large journals known to have printed these mistaken, incorrect articles about Hazard."

Hazard recently, through Congressman JOHN W. LANGLEY, asked for an appropriation of $40,000 for the post-office building. The bill will come up before the House Saturday for final vote. The newspapers, basing their claims on a Hazard population of 537, where in reality it is more than 4,000 the commercial club says, ask that the appropriation be held up, alleging "pork."

The Hazard Herald, in defense of the city's claims, recently pointed out the newspapers' errata in news stories, and in an editorial gave also a digest of the coal activities about Hazard.

Resolutions adopted by the Hazard Commercial Club follow:

"Whereas several large city newspapers have been publishing articles derogating an appropriation by Congress for a public building at Hazard, referring to us as a town of '537 souls'; and

"Whereas Hazard now has a population of over 4,000 people (which is increasing rapidly, with a near-by country and mining population of about 4,000 more people, who patronize the Hazard post office direct, besides which there are within a radius of 4 miles of Hazard eight recently established post offices serving locally that many different coal operations, including over 7,000 people; and

"Whereas there are within the same radius, already under way, 10 coal operations—some of them among the finest plants in the country—with still others in early contemplation, and all together employing thousands of men; and one of the chief objects of the proposed public building being to house a mine rescue station for their protection, as well as protection of the thousands of men in the mines now operating on the head of the Kentucky River, and other mines which will soon be started in this rapidly developing field of exceptionally good coal; and

"Whereas in the reference of these great newspapers in providing for the public defense, they forget that in case of attack on New York City by an enemy they would be eagerly calling for the defense of their fortifications these hardy Kentucky mountain men, famed in every war of our country for their daring, their cunning, and their exceptional marksmanship—these men whose patriotism would naturally be fired brighter by having a building in our midst over which Old Glory waves encouragingly every day of the year. Men from the county and county seat whose names memorialize the hero of the famous battle of Lake Erie—Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry—named for him by Kentucky mountain men who were with him in his daring battle and glorious victory and loved him as a kindred spirit: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Hazard Commercial Club, That we trust Hazard, Perry County, may soon say, with Commodore Hazard Perry, 'We have met the enemy, and they are ours.' That the big cities may realize the justice of the smaller cities having a material token of our Federal Government, of which the entire community may be proud, as well as the large cities, which are all so bountifully provided along that line. That the hardiest body of fighting men for the defense come from the less urban communities. But especially that these great city newspapers shall at once set their readers aright as to the city of Hazard, where much—very, very much—has taken place since the census of 1910. That common justice and fairness demands that this be done, and that we urge the sending of their own special representatives here to see for themselves what has happened to and about the city of '537 souls,' to learn that events push on regardless of a census, and that we need the public building.

"Resolved further, That the president is hereby directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the New York Sun, New York Times, New York World, Collier's Weekly, Washington Star, San Francisco Chronicle, and other large journals known to have printed these mistaken, incorrect articles about Hazard, and also to our Senators and Congressmen, thanking them in advance for their kindness and good will to the thrifty 'baby city' of our Commonwealth, and on behalf of the miners in their hazardous occupation of getting out the 'black diamonds,' who certainly deserve as much consideration as the cities, for the benefit of which they take their risks underground to get the coal.

The Hazard Herald of January 4 has the following editorial on the post-office situation:

HAZARD PUBLIC BUILDING.

"The great city newspapers are having much to say these days about the proposed public building for Hazard, and constantly refer to Hazard as a city of 537 souls. The New York Times is one. That great newspaper has the reputation of being exceptionally careful about accuracy as to facts in its news columns. The same should be true with the New York Sun, World, and other great newspapers. Try at least to avoid doing injustice to other communities, without the slightest investigation. The circumstances are such as to strongly suggest ill purpose on the part of these newspapers.

"When the editor found the 1910 census, crediting Hazard with '537 souls,' the fact of a $40,000 public building being proposed should have suggested inquiry to an analytic editorial mind. Strange that it did not. There is always room for progress, and Hazard has developed for the past five years with a steady, rapid stride that has caused the rest of the State of Kentucky to look on with marveling admiration. The very fine quality of the coal here has caused some of the finest operations in the country to be located here, and more are immediately in prospect. The main object of the public building is a mine-rescue station for the benefit of the thousands of miners in this section. The great city dailies will certainly not gainsay that great, important, humanitarian object.

"The large city newspapers, whom we feel sure have thoughtlessly done injustice to our situation here, should make ample correction in their columns to properly inform their readers, and we feel confident that they will not hesitate to do so. Properly, the Hazard Commercial Club should take the matter up direct with them to that end."

The Hazard case, as presented by the Hazard Herald of January 4, follows:

"In the annual appropriation bill for public buildings introduced in the present session of Congress is a provision for the appropriation of $40,000 for a Government building for Hazard. This provision in this bill is due to the efforts of our Congressman, JOHN W. LANGLEY. It looks like the bill will pass—not, however, without some modifications. It provides for a good many other public buildings in various parts of the United States, mainly in cities where no public building has heretofore been erected.

"It is but natural, therefore, that many of the larger cities of the country already provided for with expensive Government buildings, oftentimes costing millions of dollars, should resent the building of a post office or other public building in the smaller cities.

"But just now Hazard is getting rather more than her share of opposition from the heretofore more favored communities. Thus it is that we have newspapers like the New York Times, the New York World, New York Evening Sun, San Francisco Chronicle, Colliers' Weekly, and many others, knocking this community for even presuming to want a post-office building. Some of them are knocking our Congressman as well. All this is done under the idea that the bill making this appropriation is called "pork barrel" and other epithets of like meaning and import. In every instance Hazard is referred to as a town of 537 population.

"In this these newspapers, and all of them who have handled this subject in that way, show their utter ignorance of the true situation. Of course, it is absolutely unknown to them, perhaps unbelievable on their part, that this city has a voting population—a legal voting population, if they please—of more than twice the number given as the population thereof. Perhaps, also, it is unknown to them that in and around Hazard there is a population largely in excess of 5,000 tributary to this post office, and that long before any building under this or any other measure can be constructed there will be a population in this city of from two to three times that number. Of course, it is unknown also to these newspapers in the large cities that there are some 15 or 20 large coal mines within a radius of 4 miles of this city, all in continuous operation and all shipping a large tonnage of coal from this point, and that the development of the coal industry in this section has just begun. All this brings Government business, not only through the post office but in hundreds of other ways. And why should not the Government of the United States furnish suitable buildings—suitable office buildings—for its employees? Other large business does this.

"The New York Sun suggests that this and 37 other similar appropriations should be cut in half, and that this would enable the Government to build a submarine named 'U(nselfish) 38.' We quote here an editorial from this paper:

"AN INLAND SUBMARINE.

"'The porkiest bill ever put before Congress is now pending. A good many of the rural Congressmen are not only bent upon bringing home the bacon, but are resolved to rejoice their constituents with the finest strips of fat. A streak o' fat for the hill town, a streak o' lean for the city, seems to be the prescription most favored. A fine sample of the fat is to go to the town of Hazard, Ky. if Representative JOHN WESLEY LANGLEY can compass it. Pork knows no party. Mr. LANGLEY is a Republican.

"'The population of Hazard is 537. Yearly post-office receipts are under $5,000. Rental of the present post-office quarters is $250 a year. The public-buildings bill would appropriate $40,000 for a Government building, which would require $3,500 a year for maintenance.

"'We have never been able to comprehend the passion for resplendent post offices. If the money were for schools or for the support of teachers a certain lavishness with it would be understandable. But the school district pays for the schoolhouse and pays the teacher—we wonder how much she gets in Hazard; whereas the 2-cent stamps of the city dwellers pay for the marble corridors of Government buildings in Hazards from Maine to California.

"'Now, it is possible that the people of Hazard do not quite realize that this country needs guns and battleships. They are not on the seacoast. With good reason they feel tolerably secure. But a number of settlements whose wealth would make possible their Government building have not the same comfortable sense of safety. Isn't any reasonable compromise possible? Perhaps for $20,000 Hazard could have a thoroughly adequate Government building, serviceable, substantial, and dignified, if not showy. The other $20,000 might go to buy a piece of artillery or some smokeless powder. In the same public-buildings bill which favors Hazard there are plump sums to erect buildings or buy sites in 16 North Carolina and 21 Missouri villages. If all these and Hazard were to halve the money designed for them they could pay for a submarine, which might be christened the U(nselfish) 38.'

"We have not space to answer it in full; but we venture to remark that New York City has had millions appropriated to it to every cent which has been appropriated to the entire tenth congressional district of Kentucky since the Civil War, to say nothing of the millions that went to that city before that time. No, we do not specially need submarines, or want them. Certainly, not half so badly as New York will need our coal if once we should have war.

"And, speaking of marble corridors in Hazards from Maine to California, it might not be improper to inquire just who paid for the marble post-office building that cost millions in the city of New York. And did not the people of Hazard help pay for that building, as they have helped pay for all the other buildings?

"True, we pay our teachers; and we paid for our $50,000 school building as well; and we have a school in Hazard which would compare favorably with the public schools of New York, and it has a larger daily attendance than the total population given to Hazard by these papers.

"(Hazard employs 19 teachers and pays them $11,795 annually.)

"Just here we might say that we have taken the time to investigate the records of the Hazard post office, and this is approximately the amount of business we find in the post office which these newspapers—which are supposed to give correct information to their readers—say serves 537 souls: The number of people served directly—and this means through the windows of the Hazard post office—is estimated by the Hazard postmaster, from his records, at 8,000. In addition to this the Hazard post office serves, through its routes, every post office in Leslie County, with the exception of two or three in the extreme lower part of that county, and the number of people served in that county by the Hazard post office is conservatively estimated at 8,000; then, again, the Hazard post office serves more than half the population of Knott County, and this number is conservatively estimated at 5,000. Thus we see, from the actual records of the United States Post Office Department, the Hazard post office serves more than 20,000 people. Yet the New York Sun, in its gigantic misrepresentation, or in its monumental ignorance, lets out an awful howl about "pork." We know only from reading such reports what "pork" means; we have never had any experience in the matter in these Kentucky mountains; we have been forced to do the best we could without Government aid in a financial way; but we do wish that these newspapers which have been attacking Hazard so malevolently and viciously would stop to investigate the truth before they publish such libels and spread them broadcast throughout the country.

"We believe that if the New York Sun and World, and those other papers, would investigate the conditions of the Hazard post office they would not only repudiate the obnoxious articles referred to herein, but would openly advocate the appropriation by Congress of the $40,000 proposed in the public-buildings bill. We need just such a building and everyone who knows the conditions here knows that we need the building. It is up to us to stand by our Congressman, JOHN W. LANGLEY, and to arm him with facts and figures which will show the other Members of Congress that he is justified in his efforts in our behalf. We can do it, and we must do it."

"Coal Notes," from the Hazard Herald, showing the activities in that section follow:

"The Hazard coal field in January, 1915, was producing on an average 60 cars of coal a day, or 3,600 tons. The field is now averaging 160 cars a day, or over 9,600 tons. As a matter of fact on some days the output runs up to much more than this. But for the shortage of cars during the last three months the field would have averaged considerable more. This output is from 14 mines. Of these the Blue Grass is averaging 17 cars a day; the East Tennessee, Kentucky Jewel, Ashless, Himyar, are averaging 15 cars a day; Columbus No. 4 puts out an average of 10 cars; the Hazard Coal Co. and the Daniel Boone average 12 cars; Diamond Block is averaging now about 6 cars; the Four Seams Colleries Co. puts out 3 cars a day. These last two companies are just getting well under way, and their output will increase rapidly from now on.

"These 10 mines are in and around Hazard, and this output is all handled through the Hazard freight office. The four companies on First Creek ship out through Typo, but they are of course part of the Hazard field proper. On First Creek the Harvey Coal Co. is turning out 12 cars a day; Kentucky Block, 7; First Creek Coal Co., 7; and Blue Diamond, 12. Each car of coal shipped out of this field will weigh on an average 60 tons. The output of the First Creek companies will gradually increase as the entries are lengthened and the car service improves. They are all new operations, but they are under the management of some of the best coal men in the eastern Kentucky field, and all have very neat and modern plants and efficient employees. The Harvey Coal Co. plant is in the head of the creek, has a good location, enabling it to extend its tipple across the hollow and work over a greater area at one time. Before the middle of the summer there will be at least three more companies working on this creek.

"The Kenmont Coal Co. has its plant on Buckeye Creek completed and is now ready to begin mining coal, but is being delayed a little pending the completion of the Kentucky River Power Co.'s large central plant. The power company is furnishing power now up to the full capacity of its old plant, but expects to have at least one unit of its new plant in operation within a few days, thus lessening the strain on the old plant. The output from the Kenmont mine will not be handled through the Hazard railroad office. The new mine of the Columbus Coal Mining Co., on Walkers Branch, mine No. 3, will not be ready to ship coal for a few weeks, owing to the fact that it must wait for the completion of the railroad to bring in heavy steel for the tipple and other heavy equipment. The company has some 4,000 tons of coal stacked outside, which it will load as soon as the railroad gets up in the hollow and ship mine run. All the company's tracks are down, power lines are up, motors are on the ground working, and 18 entries and air courses are being driven as rapidly as men can press the work on both sides of the hollow in the No. 4 coal. This company ought to be shipping from 15 to 20 cars a day within three months after they begin operations. The station on Walkers Branch will be known as Alais, named in honor of the president of the Columbus Coal Mining Co., of Chicago.

"A good percentage of the present output of the Hazard field was contracted for last year, so that local operators are not all profiting as much as they should by reason of the present high prices prevailing all over the country. For instance, a good deal of block coal is now going out under old contracts at from $1.10 to $1.50, while occasionally a car is sold at the present-day price, at $3 to $4 per ton. All new orders that can be filled come at good prices now, slack in some instances bringing $2.50 and $3. Local operators, being unable to fill orders for slack, have been buying all the slack from the small wagon mines around town, and paying a good price for it loaded on cars at the railroad station."

HAZARD COMMERCIAL CLUB.

Whereas Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY, Representative in Congress from the tenth Kentucky district, has secured approval of an appropriation for a public building at Hazard; and

Whereas we feel that no city in the country more urgently needs such a building than does Hazard, and none more properly merits such recognition and aid on the part of Congress, under the circumstances: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Hazard Commercial Club, That the sincere thanks of the entire citizenship of Hazard are hereby extended to Representative LANGLEY and others who have aided him in securing the authorization, together with the urgent request and hope that the appropriation may certainly be made.

[Editorial, the Lexington Herald, Jan. 11, 1917.]

JUSTICE FOR HAZARD.

There are published in other columns of this issue resolutions adopted by the Hazard Commercial Club in response to articles in numerous papers deprecating or opposing an appropriation of $40,000 for the erection of a public building in Hazard. There are also published articles from the Hazard Herald showing what has been the growth of Hazard since the taking of the census upon which those papers base their opposition.

Few Kentuckians even realize how rapid has been the development of the coal fields of eastern Kentucky, of which Hazard is the center. It is not surprising, therefore, that papers published in other States should have no adequate conception of that growth, which has transformed Hazard from a village of 537 inhabitants, as given by the census, to a growing, bustling, hustling, populous town of 4,000 inhabitants, the center of a region that is developing more rapidly than any section in the South. When it is understood that the growth and development of the coal fields of eastern Kentucky has but begun, that the surface has but been scratched, it can easily be realized that within a comparatively short time Hazard and other cities and towns in that region will rival in population and in business many cities that but a few years ago far surpassed them both in population and in business.

Not as yet have the coal mines of that field begun to produce their capacity. Thousands of acres are as yet untouched. But even with the present development Hazard is entitled to the consideration of the Federal Government, and with the purpose for which the citizens of Hazard are striving for a public building, there should be peculiar and sympathetic interest on the part of all who appreciate the need for instruction to the miners in all methods of scientific mining and conserving of human life.

It is the desire and the purpose of the citizens of Hazard to have established at Hazard a mine-rescue station, where there will be demonstrated the latest and most scientific methods of operating mines and the most effective means of preventing accidents in mines. Even on the business done by the population of to-day, Hazard is entitled to such a building as is contemplated in the bill which has been ridiculed and opposed by the great city papers. Judged by the prospects of development, within the next few years, even by the time that that public building can be erected, Hazard will be entitled to the erection of a more extensive building than the one now proposed.

There is no paper that has more consistently opposed all "pork" projects than has the Lexington Herald; but it is unjust to apply such terms to the project for the erection of such a building at Hazard as is desired by the citizens of eastern Kentucky. It is not only not improper but most eminently proper that the Federal Government should give the recognition of a suitable building for the transaction of the public business.

HAZARD, KY., January 9, 1917.

HON. J. W. LANGLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In connection with the efforts to secure an appropriation for a public building here, I beg to state that our estimates and figures show that the city of Hazard now has a population somewhat in excess of 4,000. The rate of increase has been something like an average of 1,000 per year for the past three years, and, in our belief, the conditions are such that this estimated rate of increase will be maintained for some time to come, probably at least two or three years.

There are three coal operations entirely within the corporate limits of the city, and two of the three operations are beginning expansions of their plants, which will necessitate a considerable addition of men. The third one has just reached the point of beginning to run coal and it will take in quite a number of additional families steadily for a year or two. This, however, is only a part of the actual growth of the city. In the residence and business sections the growth is steady and consistent and the increase there during the next two or three years will probably exceed the very material and rapid addition in population and building of the past two or three years. The city authorities have already taken steps toward paving all the principal streets in the city during the coming summer, which will be a very material inducement to the growth of the city, as you understand.

The city now has a public school, including high school, with 14 teachers, and in addition to this there is the Hazard Baptist Institute, a secular school, which has an average attendance of over 200, with an equipment of 5 teachers. The average attendance of the public school is over 600. The Hazard graded school district extends beyond the limits of Hazard and has in it several ward schools.

I trust that the above information may be of some benefit and help in your efforts to show to your fellow Members of Congress that Hazard is unmistakably entitled to a public building. We all feel here that the building proposed will be inadequate for our needs by the time it can be completed, but we will be none the less glad to have the building and then secure enlargements later on, if possible. We are especially interested in securing a mine-rescue station here, but we feel that you have this in mind as well, and that you will handle the matter to that ultimate end,

Very truly,

W. M. PURSIFULL, Mayor.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, January 11, 1917.

Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LANGLEY: In reply to your letter of January 7, 1917, referring to the proposition to establish a mine-rescue station at Hazard, Ky., I am glad of the opportunity at this time to reiterate the statement which I made to subcommittee No. 3 of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives on April 21, 1916, to the effect that I recommend the establishment of the mine-rescue station above mentioned.

On account of the topography of the country surrounding Hazard, it is impractical to furnish the mine-rescue and first-aid training which the miners of that locality should receive from headquarters located at other points. Since the Lexington and Eastern branch of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad has been completed to this point, the coal-mining industry in the vicinity has increased tremendously. In 1913 there were but three shipping mines in this district, which it is understood produced less than 100,000 tons of coal. In 1914 the approximate production of Perry County was 221,000 tons, which figure was increased to 548,000 tons in 1915, this amount of coal being shipped from 10 producing mines. According to recent reports other new mines are being put on an operating basis, and in view of these facts it would appear to me that the recommendation made to the above-mentioned committee has been fully substantiated.

As you are aware, it is the plan of the Bureau of Mines to detail a foreman miner to take charge and instruct the workmen in the district in mine-safety and first-aid methods, and as soon as the proposition has been placed upon a sound footing to turn the entire matter over to the operators and let them maintain the station on their own account. It is felt that cooperation of this kind by the bureau would encourage the mining men in the district in question to undertake this humanitarian work and would aid them in its permanent establishment.

Cordially, yours,

VAN. H. MANNING, Director.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity for the purpose of answering some criticisms made against the provisions carried in this bill in favor of Tennessee and the district I have the honor to represent. They were criticisms made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], on page 13 of his speech, which has been extensively circulated, calls attention to two Federal buildings in my district—Jellico and Maryville. In the table he prints they are both classed as post offices, the one at Jellico carrying an appropriation of $80,000 and the one at Maryville $70,000. The building at Jellico was finished more than a year ago, and the Maryville building will be completed in a few months.

The gentleman failed to state, although it was written in the act authorizing the appropriation, that the Jellico building was not only to be a post office, but also to provide a mine rescue station, which made it necessary to carry an additional amount of money.

We have had in the last 10 or 15 years a number of very serious mine accidents in that district. I remember one where 162 miners were killed; not a man escaped. This place, Jellico, is in the center of the great coal-mining district of the South. There are in a radius of 75 miles of this mine rescue station in the States of Tennessee and Kentucky more than 15,000 miners. The receipts of this post office last year were $10,615, so that it is within the law passed by Congress carried in the last public-buildings bill.

The Maryville building is to house the post office, and on the second floor the local officials of the Appalachian Forest Reserve, now without a home, will have headquarters. When I secured the appropriation for the site for a building in that town the postal receipts were about $5,400, and last year they were $14,623. According to the census of 1910, there were 2,381 people in Maryville. To-day one new plant, the Aluminum Co. of America, has on its pay roll 3,500 men, and the population of the town and suburbs is over 8,000. In a short time the population of Maryville will reach 25,000. So both of these building propositions were in the interest of the public and in strict compliance with existing law.

Mr. Chairman, the criticism made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] was that in the towns carried in the bill providing for building sites for Tennessee the postal receipts were less than $6,000.

When the pending bill was made up and site items passed upon by the committee, we had a report from the Post Office Department showing that in every instance the total amount of postal receipts covering 12 months was more than $6,000—from $6,540 to $8,417—items criticized by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK]. So every one of these propositions are within the law.

I submit the list of site places and the amount of postal receipts for the calendar year 1916:

La Follette	$6,540
Rockwood	7,597
Lenoir City	8,081
Dixon	8,417

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I would like to find out whether we can agree upon some time to end debate on the paragraph.

Mr. RAKER. I would like 10 minutes on the paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. I hardly feel that the chairman ought to ask that now, following three speeches on his side and time unrestricted. It might be difficult to tell how much time is wanted.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman from Iowa had 20 minutes, and I am simply trying to make an agreement. Does the gentleman want some time?

Mr. CRAMTON. I had thought of taking some time to say something, and moving to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is already pending. The gentleman from Iowa made that motion.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 43 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 43 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I will now answer the charge made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and by others, that this is a sectional bill. My Republicanism is just as good as that of any man who sits on this side of the House. I say there is absolutely no foundation for that statement. I will venture the assertion that this bill authorizes a larger amount for States carried by Gov. Hughes than for the States carried by President Wilson in the recent November election. I will make a second statement, and that is that you will find, if you go through the bill from cover to cover, that the amount of money authorized in the districts represented by Republicans exceeds the amount of money authorized in the districts represented by Democrats. [Applause.]

The total authorization in this bill is about $33,000,000, and of that amount $5,684,000 goes to 12 Southern States. I can name three northern cities in this bill which are to receive more money than the 12 Southern States. The three cities are New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia.

Now, another proposition: The gentleman has been contrasting what the 10 Members from the State of Tennessee receive under this bill. There are nine propositions, carrying $100,000. Let us see what Iowa secures. Eleven Members have 13 propositions in the bill, with a total amount of $337,500.

So Iowa, with only one additional Member over that of Tennessee, gets $277,500 more than Tennessee—a Southern State. If there is sectionalism there, it is in favor of his State against my State.

Now, what about the so-called pork barrel. The gentleman himself [Mr. GOOD], according to the records of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, introduced a bill for a post office at Marion, Iowa, where the population in 1890 was 4,400 and the postal receipts $11,680, and his bill calls for $100,000.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. When was that?

Mr. AUSTIN. In this Congress.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman to whom the gentleman from Tennessee is referring refused to go before the committee and commit himself to a bill carrying thirty-eight millions of dollars out of an empty Treasury, and refused to say anything in favor of it, did he not?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; but the gentleman committed himself by writing a bill and putting his name upon it and sending it to our committee.

Mr. GOOD. That was almost two years ago, was it not?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, when we were introducing bills to go into this omnibus public-buildings bill. The amount carried in the gentleman's bill is about twice the amount carried in this bill for towns having postal revenues of $11,000.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, was that done with the idea of preventing the gentleman from coming back to Congress?

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to say, in conclusion, the Democrats are in control in this House, and the majority of the Democratic Members come from the South. It would not be anything but natural and reasonable that they should have more items in the bill than the minority, but they have been absolutely fair and impartial in the division of these authorizations. [Applause.] The only complaint I have is that the Members from the South have not actually secured more for their section and that the bill does not carry far more for Tennessee and the district I represent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, to my mind the passage of this particular bill at this particular time is nothing short of preposterous. I have listened to the arguments advanced for the bill by different gentlemen who are familiar with the figures in response to attacks made upon it with reference to sectionalism, partisanship, or treatment of individual districts. It is very plain that the "division" to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] just referred, has been made with a strange mathematical nicety.

There is no partisanship in "pork." We all admit that. Whether a man is a Republican or a Democrat, he is just as pleased to receive it. In anything that I say here I do not desire to impugn the motives of any individual Member, but I do say that the system which has brought forth this bill is a system that is not desirable for the best interests of the country, and as a Member of this House I submit that I have a right to express my criticism of the bill and of the system, and even have the right to do so without having my motives questioned or impugned. I submit—and the members of the committee can correct me if I am wrong, for I have not tallied it up myself—that it is probably the truth that not a single Member of this House who has introduced a bill for a public building in his district but has had at least one bill reported out, unless he told the committee not to report it out. That is the basis on which "pork" bills are made, so that every fellow is going to have a square deal and will have his chance, and when you are making a "pork" bill the committee is bound to keep to established rules and customs.

Mr. Chairman, to relieve the mind of somebody who may be looking up the thing to find out what the Member of the seventh Michigan district asked for, I want to say that while there are propositions in my district more worthy than some here, propositions that could stand even the desirable rule recommended by the committee in the last paragraph of the pending bill, I did not introduce a bill or ask for anything. I do not have to move to strike out my item, as some of these gentlemen are so quick to suggest, even though I might consider it a good proposition; but I was so opposed to the system, and I am so opposed to this kind of extravagance at this critical time in our finances, that I had not the nerve to even ask the committee to report out a bill for me. So I did not introduce one. I amended the bill in that respect before the committee had a chance at it. I am opposed to the system.

There are other good reasons against this bill that I want to urge more emphatically than that. In the first place, there remain of this session only 39 legislative days, and you gentlemen know that there is no opportunity left for this Congress to consider anything of constructive legislation in those 39 days, and yet we come in with this pork bill, and we consume with it several of those 39 days. Yesterday we set aside Calendar Wednesday, which was won only by the progressive spirit of the country after a long, hard-fought battle, and I predict that for the remainder of this Congress we will dispense with that day very frequently. Still we have time to spend a week upon whether there shall be a building in this little town or that little town that has no particular need for it.

Again, while I have said there is no partisanship in pork, I want to say to the other side of the House that when a party is in power as is the Democratic Party to-day, controlling every branch of the Government, you have the responsibility upon you to see to it that you have enough money to pay your bills, and it is a pretty big problem at the present moment. Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a statement issued by the Secretary of the Treasury in this administration, under date of December 31, 1916, in which he states that we will have a deficit for the year ending June 30, 1918, of $379,000,000. Of course, of that amount $279,000,000 is the actual hole there will be in the Treasury, but the law requires another hundred million dollars to be in the Treasury, and that brings it up to $379,000,000. That does not include any public-buildings bill at all.

Here I extend my remarks by insertion of the statement in full, which reads as follows:

DECEMBER 31, 1916.

Secretary McAdoo said:

"The problem before the Treasury is this: The preparedness program adopted by the Congress at the last session, including the estimated disbursements for the Mexican border patrol, involves an estimated expenditure of $683,918,000 for the fiscal years 1917 and 1918, in addition to the regular appropriations for the Army and Navy Establishments. There will be no deficit in the Treasury for the fiscal year 1917, and the impending deficit for the fiscal year 1918 is due solely to the great outlays that are being made by the Government for preparedness and for patrolling the Mexican border.

"Upon the basis of existing revenue laws the estimated deficit in the Treasury June 30, 1918, is in round numbers $279,000,000. To this must be added $100,000,000 for a necessary working balance in the Treasury. The Treasury, therefore, must be replenished to the extent of $379,000,000 in the fiscal year 1918.

"How shall this money be raised? It is not for the Treasury Department to prepare revenue measures. That is the sole prerogative of the Congress. The function of the department is to furnish all available information and to submit suggestions for the consideration of the Congress. What I say is, therefore, merely an expression of my personal views. I am and always have been opposed to the issue of bonds to meet current expenditures of the Government. Nothing could be more unsound than to fail to pay as we go. There is, however, this distinction: First, that for permanent investments, such as the purchase of the Danish West Indies and the construction of the Alaskan railway; second, for the construction and purchase of vessels for the merchant marine and the construction of nitrate and armor-plate plants, all of which have a commercial and marketable value and which are also in the nature of permanent investments; and third, for extraordinary expenditures due to national emergencies, such as the necessity for patrolling the Mexican border, and which it is manifestly impossible to anticipate in revenue legislation—for all of these it is proper to issue bonds. This also applies to the Panama Canal, which is a permanent investment and on account of which there has already been expended out of current revenues $231,108,283.

"Taking into consideration, however, only the following: Estimated expenditures for the Mexican border patrol up to June 30, 1917, $162,418,000; estimated expenditures for the Alaskan Railway up to June 30, 1918, $21,838,000, there will be a total expenditure of $184,256,000 out of the general fund of the Treasury, for which it is clear that the Treasury ought to be reimbursed by the issue of a like amount of bonds.

"To summarize: The total new money to be raised for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, is, as estimated, $379,073,000; proposed bond issue, $184,256,000, leaving to be raised by taxation, $194,817,000.

"The wealth and resources of the country are so great that it will not be difficult to raise this amount (approximately $200,000,000) by internal taxation, which can be distributed in such a way as not to bear heavily or unjustly upon anybody.

"The Congress has already authorized the issue of bonds to provide the $50,000,000 authorized for a merchant marine and the $20,000,000 authorized for a nitrate plant. I presume that bonds will be authorized by the Congress for the $25,000,000 required for the purchase of the Danish West Indies. If this should be done, and bonds should be issued to cover the Mexican border patrol and Alaskan Railway expenditures, a total issue of $279,256,000 of bonds will be made ultimately.

"There is not included in the foregoing anything for an omnibus public-buildings bill.

"I earnestly hope that even as to some of the items which are included in the estimates, material reductions and savings may be effected. Rigid economy, to the extent that it does not impair efficiency, should be practiced in all departments of the Government."

So that every dollar that you are voting in this bill to put up a public building in Podunk—I was going to say Kentucky, but in view of the eloquent remarks of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], I will put it some other place—Podunk, anywhere, must be raised by direct taxation of the people of Podunk and elsewhere. I wonder how the people in the vicinity of every one of these little towns who see a big building put in the county seat, bigger than the needs of the town, look upon it? I wonder what the people who pay the taxes think about the matter, and whether they will enthusiastically get out the band to meet the Member of Congress who helped to squander the money? The Secretary of the Treasury has pointed out how a large part of this money can be raised by bonds, but he says that even with all of the bonds he is able to think of which could probably be issued, we shall have to raise in addition $200,000,000 of new taxes. Ever since I have been in Congress you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have been thinking up something new to tax, and still your Secretary of the Treasury says that you have to raise $200,000,000 more.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] the other day stated that he would vote against the bill under certain conditions, and I prophesy that he will, because there will be no amendment made to this bill. That is one of the beautiful features of the system. I care not how meritorious a provision may be if it is offered here, whether it is Flint, Mich.; whether it be Iowa City, Iowa; whether it be any city; no matter how urgent its need of better postal facilities, it will not be put in this bill on this floor.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Or Boulder, Colo.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; I have been there, and know it is needed. On the other hand, no matter how urgent, how apparent may be the ridiculousness of any pork proposition in this bill, how little a town—and the committee itself in the last section of their bill condemns two-thirds of their bill, or a large part of it, themselves—no matter how ridiculous may be any provision in the bill, it will not be taken out. That is the beauty of an omnibus pork bill; you have got to take it as it is. You can not add to it anything worthy, you can not take away anything unworthy.

I say that the committee themselves condemned their own bill, but——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is a charge being constantly made on this floor to-day that this is a pork-barrel bill. I do not know whether gentlemen mean the same thing when they use the same term. If it is meant to imply by that term that this is a bill that is dishonest in its items, it means that those of us who advocate its passage are dishonest. If they mean that, they ought to have the courage to say so. If they mean by the use of the term only that this is an unwise expenditure of public money, then I think every honest man has the right to object to the use of the term. No man who has the courage of his convictions and who is the kind of a man that a white man ought to associate with will say anything about a Member on the floor of this House that he would not say to him on the street. He would not by implication say here about Members of this House that which he does not have the courage to say to him in the corridor. Any man who does so is not worth the respect of any man, I do not care who he is. [Applause.] The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] complains of the 11 Southern States receiving such enormous authorizations in this bill, and of the unmeritorious projects they have included in it. If we are such undesirable——

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield right there for a correction?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOOD. I am not complaining about the amount. My complaint is that you have put items in the bill which by the legislation you put in the last paragraph you admit should not be in the bill and no appropriation should be made for them. It is not the amount I have complained of in a single instance.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; the gentleman complained because these appropriations happened to go to that section of this country that had the good fortune not to have been his home. [Applause.] Now, if we are such undesirable neighbors as the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Iowa seem to think, why do not they have the courage and the manhood to rise in their seats as Members of this House and propose a constitutional amendment to withdraw from this Union. We will part from you without a tear.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman we lost a good many men and fought for four years to keep you in the Union. We love you and that is the reason we want you in the Union, and we would not ask to have a divided Union.

Mr. CARAWAY. No man of the gentleman's kind was lost in that struggle. That great struggle was not a contest in which was used the weapon with which Sampson slew the Philistines. I repeat, if this is a dishonest bill those gentlemen who compose this committee are dishonest men. All must say they are dishonest if the statements of these gentlemen are true. Now, this committee reporting out this measure is composed of 19 men. Only seven of them come from that section—the South—of which the gentleman complains so bitterly as having in this bill so many items of pork. Well, let us be honest, then. Either this bill is an honest measure and these other 12 men coming from other sections are honest men and do not agree with the gentlemen who have made this sectional charge, or they have not sense enough to represent their districts and have been overreached by the 7 Members from the South. This must be true, because 7 men are numerically fewer than 12. If these 7 men have overreached those 12 men from States not southern, those 12 should be retired, I take it, from this House, because they are not able to cope with the 7 men from that poor South, which the gentleman from Iowa so bitterly hates. Can anyone deny this? Therefore the gentleman assails his own friends by these silly charges.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] has said that he has not been able to bring back any building or appropriation for his district. The gentleman from Kentucky has introduced 11 projects, and I take it for granted he would not introduce one of those projects unless he thought they were all meritorious. The gentleman has introduced a good many pension bills, and they have gone to a committee of which I am a member. I do not think the gentleman would introduce a pension bill unless he thought it was meritorious, judging from my conversation with him and from letters. Here are the 11 bills he has introduced, and I judge the gentleman is of the opinion this kind of legislation should go through. It is simply a matter of difference of opinion between the gentleman from Kentucky and some of the others. I want to say here that personally I am not drawing sectional lines.

I am not against the bill because it is from the North or the South, and since I have been in Congress I have never voted for or against a bill because it was from the North or South, and I never expect to draw that line.

Here are the bills which the gentleman has introduced:

Whitesburg, with 321 people; all that is asked for is $75,000, and all the rest are for $75,000: McKee, Ky., 146 people; Hindman, 370; Saylersville, 310; Jenkins, 1,897; Booneville, 236; Inez, Ky., not in the census of 1910; Hazard, 537 people; Pikeville, 1,280 people; Paintsville, 942 people; and Prestonburg, 1,120 people.

Mr. LANGLEY. They are not in this bill, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. JAMES. No; but it is not the fault of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, well, not exactly—that is, I only asked for what I regarded——

Mr. JAMES. I do not believe that the gentleman from Kentucky would introduce a bill either for a pension or a building that he did not think ought to go through.

Mr. LANGLEY. Ultimately, yes; but not all in one lump. [Laughter.] The trouble about the gentleman is that he has not been here long enough to know how business is run. He is wasting his time.

Mr. JAMES. I sincerely hope I shall be here long enough to see McKee, with its 146 people, with a population that will entitle it to a public building.

Mr. LANGLEY. By the time they erect a public building in some of the places——

Mr. JAMES. I refuse to yield.

The gentleman laid a good deal of stress on the fact a short time ago that Hazard was entitled to a building because they were going to use it for a mine rescue station. Now, they do not establish mine rescue stations as permanent propositions. It was so stated at the hearings in behalf of his bill. They are only put there until such time as the operators or the authorities themselves can take them over. So when you give a building for Hazard, Ky., because part of it is going to be used for a mine rescue station, you are only wasting your time.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. JAMES. Not now.

Mr. LANGLEY. I just wanted to correct the gentleman. He is simply mistaken.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] at a hearing some time ago on Marengo, Iowa, where the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] wanted a public building, said:

> They have very small postal receipts and it is a very small town; $7,500 postal receipts and only 1,786 population. That was the population in 1910, of course.

And yet that town of Marengo is larger than the item which the gentleman from Iowa asked to be stricken from this bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa said:

> The population is 2,200 now. They claim 2,500, and as the town is growing they may have it.
> Mr. BURNETT. But the postal receipts are only about $7,500?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Did I understand the gentleman to say that some gentleman from Iowa asked to have an item stricken from this bill?

Mr. JAMES. I say that this is from the hearing on the bill for Marengo, Iowa.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I thought he said some gentleman from Iowa asked to have an item stricken from the bill.

Mr. JAMES. I will quote further:

> Mr. BURNETT. I notice that their postal receipts have increased only $2,000 in 11 years. In 1905 they were over $5,000, and this last year they were only $7,000. That does not seem to be a very great increase.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman and fellow Members, my father had seven uncles in the Revolutionary War, and I had seven uncles and a father and a brother in the Confederate, or Rebel, War, but I quit fighting the Yankees when I was about 12 years old, and thanked God that the war was over; and I have done so ever since.

When the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] raised the question of sectionalism on this bill, I began to look over the problem and analyze what he was talking about. I remembered being in his town of Cedar Rapids, and one of the magnificent scenes which the committee on entertainment wanted me to observe was the post office, a public building. It was a magnificent one, and I am glad they have it. It cost, according to the figures here, $355,000, in round numbers. That amount would build all the items he complains of in the South, upon which the gentleman so spleenfully bases his cause of sectionalism, and still have, I think, about $40,000 left.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman must be mistaken. He certainly does not mean to say that the gentleman from Iowa has a building of that size in his town?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. If I am mistaken, the book from the Treasury Department is mistaken.

Mr. LANGLEY. But I can not believe it. [Laughter.] The printers made a mistake.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. When he is complaining about $10,000 and $15,000, and so on, in these country offices, where the people need stimulus and energy and recognition as our rural sections, jammed off, as they are, in the backwoods and neglected in various ways—why, I looked over and found that his post office cost $355,000; and then I thought if I got time, as there has been so much talk about pork, that I would just ask the gentleman from Iowa if he had not often seen a burley, big hog after he got full root the trough over in order to keep the other hogs from getting any slop. [Loud laughter.]

Another proposition that the gentleman from Iowa presented was that he said Texas had 18 Members and got 20 items.

Well, he came within two of the correct membership. I suppose that is near enough to the truth for the gentleman from Iowa. [Laughter.] Texas has 18 Members by districts and 2 at large. I suppose we might count—sorter. [Laughter.] As I said in my talk the other day, I represent the State at large. I analyzed all these items and I know the towns. I have spoken in most of them. I have spoken in the gentleman's town, in Iowa. And say, if all the balance of the States represent the same merit and the same relation to public necessity in the prospects for the future that the items in Texas represent, there is not an ounce of "pork" or graft in this bill, not a particle. [Applause.]

I only wanted to make these remarks. I yield back whatever time I have remaining. I thank you, gentlemen. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, it is the item in my district that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has moved to strike out. The defense that I will make of that item will be my answer to his attack upon other minor items of like character.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know how to talk sectionalism. I quit that years and years ago. I believe that this is an indissoluble Union of indestructible States. [Applause.] I believe that we are all Americans, and this committee, not only under the chairmanship of the present incumbent but under the former chairmanship of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, Dr. Bartholdt, recognized the fact that there should be a proper and just division of Government buildings among the people of the whole country, regardless of whether we were poor in the South or whether the people were rich in the North. During my service on that committee, with a Republican majority, when my able and distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] was the chairman of the subcommittee of which I was a member, the question as to whether one section of this Union was getting too much or one State too much never entered into its deliberations.

I want to say that the attack which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has made upon this bill is an indictment of the integrity of one of the fairest Republican Members on the floor of this House and one of the fairest members of our committee—Mr. SMITH of Michigan—who was on the subcommittee with me, and who never sought to obtain any more than he believed to be a fair share for his people. If that man [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] had believed that there was sectionalism being practiced, if he had believed that there was "pork," in the sense in which the word is being used, would he have sat by without uttering a protest?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. BURNETT. I can not yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. You are misquoting me.

Mr. BURNETT. I am not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman to respect my refusal, because I have not the time to yield to him.

Mr. Chairman, in regard to the attacks that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has made upon this bill, four years ago we passed the law which provides that sites might be authorized where the post-office receipts were not less than $6,000, and buildings where they were not less than $10,000. That is the law now. In that bill the item for a site in my district, which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has attacked, was provided for. Mr. HARDWICK, of Georgia, in the conference report debate, tried to get instructions to the conference committee adopted to accept the Senate amendment, which read as follows:

Provided, That no contracts authorized by any section of this act for the erection of buildings to be used exclusively as post offices, or for the purchase of sites for such buildings shall be entered into, nor shall any public moneys be expended for such buildings until the receipts from such post offices for which any such buildings or sites are intended shall amount to more than $10,000 per annum—

The Senate had put on that amendment and it was disagreed to by the House and it went to conference. When Mr. HARDWICK tried to have the House conferees instructed to agree to the Senate amendment there was a roll call, and when you examine the roll call you will find the name of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], like that of Abou ben Adhem, leading all the rest against that amendment. [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman from Iowa then had an item in that bill.

There is the inconsistency of the gentleman from Iowa, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS] has well said that when the gentleman who had an item on a bill got what he wanted he was willing to stand by it, pork barrel or no pork barrel. But the gentleman from Iowa voted then upon that bill for the authorization of sites in towns where the post-office receipts were less than $10,000, and some of them less than $6,000, and yet the gentleman now, after he has gotten his fill of the swill, comes up with that kind of a previous record and undertakes to attack the bill as a pork-barrel bill when he voted for it when it was a pork-barrel bill then, if this one is now.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman does not mean to say that I got a site where the receipts were less than $10,000?

Mr. BURNETT. No; but you voted with the rest of us for sites in towns where the receipts were less than $10,000, and even less than $6,000, and the question is whether the gentleman was dishonest when he voted that way, if that was his conviction when he voted for them in that bill. [Applause.] The gentleman had an opportunity to help put it in the law then, if he desired to do so, that no site should be acquired and no building should be constructed where the receipts were less than $10,000; and yet the gentleman's virtuous indignation had not risen so high then that he thought he ought to vote against it. Truly, Mr. Chairman—

> When self the wavering balance shakes,
> 'Tis seldom right adjusted.

We have had illustrious examples of that to-day.

Mr. Chairman, this item in my district is in line with a number of other items that I suppose gentlemen, in order to parade themselves, may move to strike out; but I hope that, having been given all this time for the discussion of the general proposition, they will not undertake to filibuster against this bill later.

In regard to the fairness of it—and that was a matter that was considered, as my good friend from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] will bear me out, when under the chairmanship of that splendid gentleman from St. Louis, Dr. Bartholdt, we framed bills—we always considered the fact, and it is a proper matter for consideration, that as the great cities of the North got such large sums in order to be fair with all other parts of the country there ought to be recognition given to some places in the South and West that were not as large as places in the North with greater populations and with larger postal receipts.

In regard to the just division in this bill, Illinois and Wisconsin get more than all the 12 Southern States combined. I do not object to that. We put them in there because we believed that the great city of Chicago and the great city of Philadelphia and The Bronx and the other great cities that are provided for ought to have what we allowed them.

Mr. Chairman, Michigan alone gets as much as Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, and South Carolina combined, and yet they do not get any too much, and their Representatives on the floor or on that committee never asked for anything that was unjust and unfair, and not a man on that committee even suggested that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] in the aggregate was getting a larger sum than several of the Southern States; but it remained for a few gentlemen to undertake to raise the cry of sectionalism; one gentleman who four years ago thought that even with the sectional division the bill was good enough to warrant him in voting for it. I had the control of that bill as acting chairman, and it was distributed as this bill was distributed, fairly, and as the bill was distributed in the former Congress in which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] was chairman of the committee, when my good friend from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] was one of the very active members. Those were matters of fair distribution that were always taken into consideration, and, gentlemen, they are fair and just and honest now, and it is a mean, venomous, vicious attack upon one section of the country that to-day loves the Stars and Stripes just as our brethren on the other side of Mason and Dixon's line love it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to strike out the paragraph.

The question being taken, the motion was rejected.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Did the Chair overlook the gentleman from Iowa, or did he ask for a division?

The CHAIRMAN. No division was called for. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Alva, Okla.: $45,000: Provided, That a suitable site in the city of Alva, Okla., to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, is conveyed by suitable warranty deed, free of cost to the United States.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Our customarily amiable friend from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], while proceeding to misquote me, and declining to yield for a correction, which, I am sure, was entirely unintentional on his part, told us that the Civil War in this Nation is over. Then he very kindly tried to come over into Michigan and start a little fratricidal strife between my good friend from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and myself, where none exists, and none can exist, because I love him greatly. I have no criticism of the way he performs his duties, and he is willing to let me perform mine as I see fit. Not only did I not say anything raising a sectional issue, as the gentleman from Alabama has unjustly charged, but, more than that, I expressly stated that in the distribution of pork there are no sectional lines and no partisan lines.

The gentleman talked about how much Michigan got. He will admit that Michigan would have gotten $50,000 or $75,000 more if, for my own home city, a splendid town as any, with postal receipts averaging $13,000 a year, and with cramped postoffice quarters at present, I had asked for that amount. The committee are fair enough. They did not have anything against me. They would put it in for me as for anyone else, for a man who asked for only one item. I am not kicking because Michigan got too much or too little. I am kicking because the bill is framed not upon the theory of merit, placing these buildings where they are needed regardless of whether Michigan gets 11 or Alabama 11, but because it is framed on a basis of geographical, or district line distribution, a matter of pork. When it comes in here merit cuts no figure, and you can not add anything, however good, or take out anything, however bad.

Now, when I had the floor before, and was cut off by the agreement, I was stating that the committee themselves, in the final paragraph of the bill, have condemned their own work. They are a splendid committee, and when they finally got it finished they added a good job in the last section.

I am sorry that the committee did not start at the other end first, and quit when they had perfected that last section, because there they provide that items such as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has now so strenuously defended, for towns having receipts of less than $10,000 a year, shall nevermore be included in future bills. If it is wrong five years from now, when, heaven hope, our financial condition will be better, to put a $50,000 building in a town of 1,500 population, why, it is wrong now. The same committee, who have reported out a lot of these items, say in their last paragraph that the principle is wrong, and that after they get through with this one last grand grab, then it must not be done any more.

But they say buildings must be constructed in these small towns because the Government owns sites in some of them. Supposing the Government were a business institution. Supposing a corporation had gone, I will not say to Alabama, for I will not be sectional, but up into the State of Michigan, and had bought a site in a town of 1,500 population and paid perhaps $2,500 for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I think we have had enough discussion on this proposition. Can not the gentleman postpone this until later?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is quite immaterial, but I have taken no time of the committee unnecessarily, and I am going to take about so much anyway.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I shall not object. I am only asking the gentleman——

Mr. CRAMTON. I prefer to make my remarks continuous, so that I will not repeat myself, as I might otherwise do.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Supposing this corporation had gone up into Michigan and had bought a site and paid $2,500, expecting that town to grow and increase, and expecting to put up an office building there when it was needed for its branch, but finding the town did not increase, that the office building was not needed. Because they had spent $2,000 or $3,000 for a site, would they go ahead and put up a $50,000 building that they did not need? The committee in that last section have absolutely condemned their own bill.

Now, I want to submit that not only for those reasons, which obtain at all times, but right now under this glorious Democratic administration, with a tremendous deficit staring you in the face, you men on that side of the aisle have no right to saddle the people of the country with this $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 of extra expense, which your Secretary of the Treasury tells you must be raised by new direct taxes, along with $200,000,000 more after you have floated all the bonds you can.

What is our condition? The other day the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] said that the people are prosperous and that it is a good time to raise the taxes. But the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] says we are not going to have to pay this money now, that we only authorize it; that none of these buildings will be built for two years. He does not point out that the passage of this bill, if it accomplishes what he says it will, by reforms in the method of handling these buildings, by a new system, instead of waiting six years from now to complete the construction of buildings authorized in 1913, will cause them to be completed in a year or a year and a half or two years. He is going to shorten the time four years for the building of several hundred buildings, and if you do not pass this bill they will not be built in the next two years. If you do pass this bill then they will be built in the next two years, and you have that expense, authorized in 1913, to carry at a time when your Secretary of the Treasury does not know where he is going to get the money to pay the bills.

As to the present, we can not afford it; and as to the future, when this bill does come in operation, what are to be the economic industrial conditions of the country then? Is any gentleman on this floor so blind to present world conditions as to believe that there is no danger of industrial disaster in this country when the war in Europe ends? Oh, at the best, he can say he does not know. We know there is danger awaiting us at a time within a year or two from now when taxation will be more of a distress to our people than it is now. Oh, we are prosperous now because for the year 1914 when you first came into power we exported abroad $1,867,991,492 worth of goods, while this year—and I am speaking of 11 months ending in November in each case—we exported $4,960,302,630, a gain in exports of $3,000,000,000. There is your prosperity. What about it when these war orders cease? What kind of conditions will you have here at home? I do not want to get into a tariff speech, but I do want to remind you of a few things. Right now when 20,000,000 men are in the trenches in Europe, withdrawn from natural production, we have imported into this country——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office and other Government offices at Barbourville, Ky., $25,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This item is no different from many others, but presents a new question, which I wish to discuss briefly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield? I wish to give notice that I shall move to close debate at the end of five minutes on the paragraph.

Mr. FREAR. This item of Barbourville, Ky., presents this new question: It is for a proposed building to accommodate the United States post office and other Government offices. I speak of other Government offices because this is said to be the exception that is not to be governed in any way by the rule of $10,000 limitation in receipts. I think the matter of receipts has no bearing on the subject anyhow, but the committee claims to be governed by a $10,000 annual limitation. Here is the excuse for ignoring the receipts; that is to say, the receipts may be small, and they are, but by putting in the bill "other offices" you are entitled under this procedure to the building because of the additional purposes. The bill says, "United States post office and other Government offices at Barbourville, Ky., $25,000."

Barbourville had a population in 1910 of 1,633. The post-office receipts were $4,532 last year, according to the report of the Treasury. The rent is $406 a year. The estimate by the Treasury of maintenance of the new building is $3,800 per annum, or nine times the amount of the rent we are now paying. The bill says that this is for a post office and other Government offices at Barbourville. I have in my hand a statement. I do not know whether it is accurate or not, but I desire to have the chairman later on correct me if it is not. It was sent through the mail. It comes from the American Institute of Architects and it gives data as to Kentucky, which is no different from many other States in this respect. It says of 22 new building items that were proposed for Kentucky and filed with the building committee this session, 17 contained demands for "other purposes" than post offices in these little towns. That is the case of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], who spoke a few minutes ago. Eight out of the 11 building propositions filed with the committee by the gentleman were "for other purposes."

Mr. LANGLEY. Not my items. The gentleman means the State.

Mr. FREAR. No. I am speaking according to this statement. I do not know that it is correct. Here are the bills presented for the gentleman's district. There is Whitesville, with a population in 1910 of 321. That is the first.

Mr. LANGLEY. It has 3,000 now. In most of these towns in the bill there are no other Government activities.

Mr. FREAR. I say practically every proposition—17 out of the 22—were for post offices and for other purposes.

Mr. LANGLEY. But the "gentleman from Kentucky" is not pressing those items.

Mr. FREAR. No; but the gentleman introduced all of them himself, and then in the omnibus bill he gets——

Mr. LANGLEY. A few at some places.

Mr. FREAR. It occurs to me that that is the only reason for putting in "for other purposes," so as to avoid the $10,000 limitation. Anything may come under the minimum proposition, and this is the evidence of it. There is no limitation of receipts, if this statement is correct. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what, for instance—and I speak of it by way of illustration—what testimony would be presented to the committee in a case like Barbourville to show the character of the project?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We would have the report of the Treasury Department, the report of the Post Office Department, and then we generally had the Representative of the district, and sometimes citizens of the town. We always had the Member of Congress, who ought to be familiar with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] does not know anything about conditions at Barbourville, Ky., else he would not have made a motion to strike out the paragraph containing an appropriation of $25,000 for a public building at that place. I think I am safe in saying that nobody has ever charged that the Democracy of the South has ever been overfriendly to me. The fact that the chairman of this committee, Mr. CLARK, a Democrat, is from the State of Florida; the fact that this House is now Democratic, and the fact that there has been incorporated an item in this bill appropriating $25,000 for a public building at Barbourville, Ky., ought to be pretty conclusive proof that the appropriation is based on real genuine merit. I am glad to say that the Democrats of this House have treated me fairly. The gentleman from Wisconsin evidently has not read the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state that the post-office receipts for the last six months at Barbourville clearly indicate that they will be much more than $6,000 during the present fiscal year.

Mr. POWERS. No doubt about that, Mr. Chairman. I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that he has not correctly read my bill. He said that it asked for an appropriation for the post office and "other Government offices." I will read the gentleman that section of my bill which covers the proposition: H. R. 6840; United States post office and "mine rescue station," and other Government offices. My bill calls for "a mine rescue station." We are situated, gentlemen, in southeastern Kentucky. We are in the midst of the development of its great resources. We have 10,000 square miles of bituminous coal territory in southeastern Kentucky. There are only 14,000 square miles in the entire State of Pennsylvania, and Pennsylvania has for all these years stood at the head of all the States in this Union in the production of both bituminous and anthracite coal. [Applause.]

The coal mine production of southeastern Kentucky with the development that is going on in that section of the State is simply marvelous. Only a few years ago there was not a coal mine being operated in all southeastern Kentucky. There was not a foot of railroad in all that section. To-day the toot of the iron horse can be heard while winding its way up our streams, through hill and dale, in search of the boundless wealth of that region. We are rich, and yet we are poor. We are rich in resources, especially in coal, and yet we are poor, because in years gone by we have never had any way of getting the coal to market. We are a favored people, and yet we have been unfortunate. There was no way for our ancestors to know the difference in possibilities between southeastern Kentucky and the northwest territory, out of which have been carved the great States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. The Allegheny Mountain system forms a great wall along the eastern boundary line of our State. It has been a barrier to the great westward movement of progress. Population flowed to the north and west of us. The region around the Great Lakes, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois profited to our detriment. They built railroads. They established factories. They grew. They prospered. For over 100 years we have been in an eddy, so to speak. We were bottled up. Southeastern Kentucky had no outlet to the outside world. We had no railroads, no navigable streams, no bays, no harbors, no kindly arms to the sea. We were far removed from the great marts of trade and from the great thought and industrial centers of the world. We could not reach the outside world; the outside world could not reach us. We were misunderstood at home and maligned abroad. Neither the wealth of our hills nor the worth of our people were understood or appreciated. We, in the meantime, kept the even tenor of our way, when it was even. Our people continued to battle bravely against tremendous odds. They did not lose faith either in themselves or their country. Finally the sunlight of a better day shown in upon them. Railroads, as I have said, made their way into our counties. Coal mining operations soon sprang up, and our great development began. Bell County, for example, is a veritable hive of industry. Its population doubled from 1900 to 1910.

HELPS TO BUILD RAILROAD FROM BARBOURVILLE TO MANCHESTER.

There has been completed and put into operation within the last 30 days a new railroad from Barbourville to Manchester, Ky. Barbourville is the county seat of Knox County, Manchester the county seat of Clay. No railroad ever touched a foot of Clay County's soil until within the last few months. The citizens of Clay County have had no outlet except over rough wagon roads to either London or Barbourville. Both these towns are on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. They have had no chance to reach the outside world with the products of their farms or the wealth of their hills. You must not conclude from what I have said that the citizenship of Clay County is in any way inferior to that of other sections of our country. Far from it. Clay County has produced her quota of great men. James Gerrard, a native of Clay County, was one of the early governors of the State of Kentucky. John C. White, another native son of the county of Clay, was once Speaker of this House. For four years he presided over the deliberations of this body. Clay County has produced other illustrious sons. Knox County, of which Barbourville is the county seat, has also produced her share of noted men. Silas Woodson, who was reared in Knox County, later became governor for the State of Missouri. Samuel F. Miller, another of Knox County's sons, served with distinction as one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decisions he rendered under the dome of this Capitol have been cited and followed by learned courts all over our land. Knox County has produced other illustrious sons.

When I was asked a year or more ago to make a donation toward building a railroad from Barbourville to Manchester so the people of Clay County and many in Knox County could have an outlet I gladly responded and agreed to pay about $700 when the road was completed, as this letter shows:

CUMBERLAND & MANCHESTER RAILROAD CO. (INC.),
Barbourville, Ky., January 15, 1917.

Hon. CALEB POWERS,
Congressman Eleventh District, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Yours 4th.

I inclose herewith a copy of the subscription note signed by you, the amount being $500.

The amount of right of way I have paid in Knox County, not including buildings, amounts to about $5,200, and there will probably be an additional $1,000 yet to pay. There were 34 guarantors, including yourself. I am going to have this matter put into proper shape immediately, and will let you hear from me further. Your share of this will likely reach $200, making your total subscription about $700.

I inclose two copies of our passenger time-table.

Yours, truly,

CHARLES F. HEIDRICK.

I do not own a foot of land or even a home—I rent—in or around Barbourville, Ky. I do not own a foot of land along the route of the new railroad from Knox County into Clay; but I knew this new railroad would greatly benefit the people of both counties, and I shall gladly pay what I have promised toward the construction of this road.

The people in both the counties of Knox and Clay have stood loyally by me for these many years and I am only glad of an opportunity to be of service to them. I hope Manchester some day will have population and postal receipts sufficient to get an appropriation for a public building.

But let us return to Barbourville, Ky. In 1910 the population of Barbourville was 1,633. In 1913 it was 1,815. It is now possibly 2,100, with about $6,000 in postal receipts. Barbourville is growing and will continue to grow from year to year. It has two good national banks, electric lights, paved streets, two good colleges—Union College and the Baptist Institute—six churches, and a good high school.

There are about 1,000 students in attendance in these three institutions. Barbourville has a brick plant and a spoke and stave factory. The new railroad coming in from Manchester will greatly increase both the population and the business interest of Barbourville; but the thing that will aid the growth of the town more than any other one thing is the building of good roads in Knox County. Barbourville is located on the Dixie Highway from Chicago to Florida. Every county in the district I have the honor to represent along the proposed Dixie Highway has voted upon itself enormous sums of money, their wealth considered, for the purpose of constructing the Dixie Highway. In every county along the route the work is now well under way. If properly constructed, these roads will greatly accelerate the travel and increase the wealth of our people.

PINEVILLE GETS $5,000 TO PURCHASE SITE FOR PUBLIC BUILDING.

And this brings me down to the discussion of the $5,000 item to purchase a site for a public building and mine-rescue station at Pineville, Ky. I am glad this House will, in a short time now, put its seal of approval on this item, as well as the $25,000 item for a public building at Barbourville. Pineville and Bell County richly deserve it. Pineville is growing rapidly. Pineville's population in 1910 was 2,161, its postal receipts $4,473.30. Pineville's population to-day is between 3,500 and 5,000 people. Its postal receipts for 1916 was $9,144.68. It will reach $11,000 this year. Bell County produces more coal than any other county in the State. It produced in 1915 over 3,000,000 of the 21,000,000 tons produced in the whole State of Kentucky. Kentucky produced this last year, in round numbers, 25,000,000 tons of coal. Bell County greatly increased her output, although the whole coal industry of southeastern Kentucky suffered greatly because of shortage of cars and scarcity of labor.

When I was preparing data on the Pineville post office last year I received the following telegram from Hon. White L. Moss, mayor of the city of Pineville:

We urge you to make every effort to secure appropriation for public building and mine-rescue station for Pineville. Am advised by postmaster to-day that sales of stamps for year ending March 31 will exceed $8,000—to be exact it will be $8,726—amount necessary for transfer of this office to second class. We are growing rapidly, and our present post-office facilities are absolutely inadequate—the lobby of the present building, about 8 by 24. Pineville is the center of southeastern Kentucky coal fields, producing about 5,000,000 tons annually. Has 30 passenger trains per day, reaching every coal mine in southeastern Kentucky.

By reason of its railroad and geographical location it is the logical place to establish a mine-rescue station. From this point, in case of accident, a special train could reach any mine in the field in less than two hours, and being a railroad terminal, transportation facilities will always be at hand. Pineville has more trained rescue teams than all of Kentucky, trained by Bureau of Mines experts, and these teams would be available at a moment's notice. Am sending map showing location of Pineville with reference to mines. If you desire further information, please command me. Suitable site for post-office building can not be obtained if matter is delayed much longer, as desirable places are rapidly being built upon.

W. L. MOSS, Mayor.

This telegram is full of meat, and throws a flood of light on the situation there. I am glad this House has decided to give me an appropriation for both Barbourville and Pineville, Ky. Our people have all these years been paying their share of the taxes to help support this great Government. The bones of their ancestors have bleached the battle fields in every State in the Union.

Our people have always responded liberally to the Nation's call. They want to see Old Glory floating over public buildings at Barbourville, Pineville, Corbin, Williamsburg, Harlan, and other county-seat towns in the district as some evidence, at least, that the Government which they have so bravely defended is not ungrateful to them or unmindful of the great services they have rendered it in the days of its peril.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Benton Harbor, Mich., $80,000.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should judge from what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] says, the only other governmental activity at Barbourville is to be found in the Mine-Rescue Station, and I want to read from the statement of their own witness, Mr. Van H. Manning, of the Bureau of Mines——

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is attempting to discuss a paragraph in the bill which has already been passed, and other business has intervened. Therefore his discussion is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point or order.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present. This is the first time that such thing as the gentleman from Kentucky has done has been attempted.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw his point of order so that we may proceed with the bill

Mr. LANGLEY. I will do anything. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office and courthouse at Binghamton, N. Y., $500,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. In support of that, so as to be sure to proceed absolutely in order, which is my chief reason for making the motion, I desire to add my reasons for, first, opposing the passage of any bill, and, second, in order to prevent the passage of any bill larger than it has to be. I submit there never was a time which gave greater question, greater doubt, and greater danger as to what the immediate future has in store for this country financially than the present, following the close of the European conflict, and here you are rushing headlong with this $38,000,000 appropriation to be added to the $200,000,000 that the Treasury Department says you have to find new taxes for. What is to be our industrial condition under which the people are going to raise the money to pay these taxes? Our prosperity is dependent upon the market which our labor has for the goods it makes. I just called attention to the fact that our present prosperity is due to our immense amount of war orders, in which there has been a greater increase this year over two years ago.

Let me call your attention to other figures. During this time when twenty million men are withdrawn in Europe from ordinary production, we are importing from abroad more dollars' worth of goods made by foreign labor than we have ever done before in our history.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. He is talking to his constituents. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. I insist that while the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] may see fit to criticize me for speaking as I do, yet I would remind him that I do not speak to my constituents as he would do by the distribution of $50,000 and $75,000 public buildings in towns of two or three hundred people. That is not my way of talking to the people of my district. I am talking to this House, and I am talking primarily to you gentlemen on the other side who are responsible for the Government. Here are these figures: We imported in 1910 $1,400,000,000 worth of foreign-made goods, and you Democrats have been telling us that our revenues have fallen off because we did not import enough during the war. This year—and by

"this year" I mean the 11 months ending with November—our total imports of foreign-made goods——

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Brinkley, Ark., $25,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. [Cries of "Vote!"] Oh, I desire to be absolutely fair, and as long as we have the opportunity of amendment I will state to you gentlemen that we intend to exercise it, no matter how heavy the steam roller may be. Some day you will not have it as large. You did not have it as large in the last river and harbor bill as you had in the bill preceding, and you will not have as large a steam roller the next time this bill goes through the House as you have now. Mark that. The next case is that of Brinkley, Ark. Brinkley had a population of 1,740 in 1910, according to the statement before me. The statement of the Treasury shows it had postal receipts last year of $6,114.

Mr. GOOD. That is for the year 1915?

Mr. FREAR. Yes. The rent paid at Brinkley is $550 a year. The cost of maintenance according to the estimate furnished by the Treasury Department for this item of Brinkley is $3,500. In other words, the rent of $550 is to be exchanged for an original investment in a palatial building for Brinkley, and we are to undertake an annual maintenance cost of $3,500. Brinkley, let me repeat, according to the census, had a population of 1,740 in 1910 and postal receipts of $6,114 in 1915. We now pay $550 annually. Through this bill we will pay $3,500 annually. What do you think of the investment?

Now, getting back to the practice which I have discussed in regard to these items, I want to get the situation accurately because it is very important to understand in the discussion of these public building propositions. The chairman of the Public Building Committee says that he called before the committee the Congressmen from the different districts in every case. Not only that, but there is only one other kind of evidence presented to the committee, I understand, and that is the Treasury Department's statement, furnished as to every project. Here is a letter from the Treasury Department which touches upon this very subject. It shows how the committee refused to receive the only impartial testimony that could be obtained. I will start right now with the reading of the letter, and if the time is not extended I will have to go into the next paragraph, because I want to get this letter squarely before the committee. It is a letter I received from the Treasury Department under date of December 29, 1916:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 29, 1916.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The department is in receipt of your letter of the 28th instant, referring to the subject of estimates furnished by the Treasury Department as to probable expense in connection with the maintenance of public buildings erected at different points, and notes your inquiry as to whether such information has heretofore been given to Congress.

In reply, you are informed that in reporting on the bills which constitute the pending omnibus public buildings bill, this department did furnish estimates of the cost of maintenance of buildings in small villages, but received several letters from the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds requesting the department to refrain from incorporating this information in its reports, and stating that the committee desired simply the estimate as to probable cost of the proposed building. The department, believing, however, that it was its duty to give Congress the benefit of this information, continued embodying an estimate as to the cost of maintenance of all buildings of the class above referred to.

The department had in mind the fact that with the enactment of each successive omnibus bill the number of post office buildings in small communities had increased, with a corresponding cost to the Government, while in even ratio the necessity for relief in the cities and larger towns was increasing and the rental charge to the Government for outside space all the time was growing. Being in position to focus more accurately upon this condition, and to foresee the effect of still further extending it, the department felt warranted in giving to Congress any and all information along these lines for its consideration in dealing with the public buildings situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. May I have five minutes more? I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Borough of The Bronx, New York City, N. Y., $850,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the committee that I am not trying to filibuster, but I am trying to give certain facts, and when I get through I will suspend. I move to strike out this item, and upon that I desire to say this: This is a large item of nearly a million dollars. It may be entirely meritorious. If we strike it out, we will cut down the amount you have to raise by taxation after a year or two or three under conditions that do not now promise well. Now, we imported into this country in 11 months ending November, 1910, only $1,400,000,000——

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order the gentleman is not speaking to the question.

Mr. GREGG. I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing the amendment.

Mr. KING. I believe every bit he says, but it is not parliamentary.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are a lot of gentlemen who do not believe it, but it is the truth.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is speaking out of order and has been for the last half hour. It is nothing but a preconceived filibuster.

Mr. CRAMTON. May I be heard upon the point?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear from the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will state I am trying to proceed in order with an argument as to our probable industrial conditions, which, after a couple of years, are likely to be very serious, as a potent argument against saddling up that future with a large burden like this $38,000,000.

Mr. HOWARD. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CRAMTON. I certainly will. I will say to the gentlemen I do not see why they should be so alarmed. I have very little more to say, and when I give that I am through, but I propose to give it and I hope to get through in this five minutes if I am permitted.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman would not yield, and I yield to nobody. For the 11 months ending November, 1910——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order—and let us have a ruling on it. The gentleman is not discussing the paragraph, and on that I would like to be heard. I think he is making a ridiculous farce of the proceedings of this committee in a speech like that, and while he may have some merit in his contention he is simply making the whole proceeding ridiculous.

Mr. HOWARD. And in absolute defiance of the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. I anticipate being through in five minutes if——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing the paragraph, and therefore is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Michigan desires to be heard on the point of order, the Chair will hear him briefly.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, upon that I simply state I think I am proceeding orderly and seriously. I intend to vote against this bill for the reason that the chairman of the committee tells us it will take effect in two or three years——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I submit the gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. And that he is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made that the gentleman is not discussing the paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to point out how my line of argument is directly relevant to this paragraph. If this paragraph is stricken out, it will reduce the bill $850,000, and I am trying to point out that a year or two from now, when the money has to be raised——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. It will be a very serious matter. I do not want to delay the House, but I am giving this committee what appears to me a fair argument.

Mr. HOWARD. I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say the gentleman must confine himself in this discussion to the question before the committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. The Chair has already told him that two or three times before, and he will not obey the Chair. How much longer——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I submit——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CRAMTON. I may state to the chairman and the committee I desire to proceed absolutely in order. I am not actuated by any desire to delay proceedings, but I believe these points I am making are relevant to the paragraph. If the Chair directly rules me out, I will have to submit, of course, but until then I shall endeavor to give that information.

I have not sought to point out the line of argument others should follow, and I feel it is unfair for others to pass upon my line of argument as long as it is not intended to be obstructive.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Boyne City, Mich., $30,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, following line 11, insert the following as a new paragraph: "That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to provide accommodations for the Land Office and Forest Service in the public building at Buffalo, Wyo., within the present limit of cost."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Carrollton, Ill., $25,000.

Mr. JAMES. According to the figures furnished by the Treasury Department, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that unless the gentleman wants to make some motion——

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The population of Carrollton, Ill., according to the figures furnished by the Treasury Department, in 1910 was 2,323, and the postal receipts, $7,854. The postal receipts were $8,324.13 in October last. The present rent is $500, interest at 3 per cent. And the Treasury Department figures that maintenance will be $500 a year.

I want to read how the Treasury Department figures on these small buildings of $25,000, and I will read a letter from the Treasury Department, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 15, 1916.

Hon. W. FRANK JAMES,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Referring further to your letter of the 17th ultimo, in regard to the pending public-buildings bill, and requesting information relative to the probable cost of maintenance, etc., of a Federal building in places similar in size to McKee, Ky., the following data is furnished you:

The department estimate for a building at a place of this size and of similar postal receipts, for post-office purposes only, would probably be $25,000 for the building itself and $5,000 for the site. It is estimated that to furnish the building would require $3,000 additional, making a total outlay of $33,000.

Calculating 3 per cent on this investment, the interest charge would be $990. The yearly depreciation of the building and furniture, together with the approximate cost of annual repairs, would amount to 2½ per cent on the amount invested in the project, exclusive of cost of site, viz, on $28,000, which would be $700. Janitors are not provided for buildings of this size, but an employee known as fireman-laborer at $660 per annum, with a charwoman at $300 per annum, making a total expenditure for this service of $960. The cost of fuel, lights, and other supplies is estimated at $960 per annum.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. NEWTON,
Assistant Secretary.

I notice that on page 4 of the hearings on the public-buildings bill the committee states in part that it is fixed in its opinion that practically every item can be abundantly justified from the standpoint of economy, efficiency, and patriotism. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, as this particular item can not come under either class, I hope it will be voted out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office and other Government offices at Central City, Ky., $30,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out this item.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the gentleman if he is going to move to strike out the Wisconsin items?

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman anticipates. We have not reached them yet.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not anticipating, but asking a question.

Mr. FREAR. That is not in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have always a right to ask a question.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield, but can not, for my five minutes will be absorbed in a short time.

According to the report of the United States Treasury the population of Central City, Ky., in 1910 was 2,545; the annual receipts reached $5,707 in 1915, according to the last report. The rent was $500 a year and the total charge, according to the department's estimate, will be $4,100 a year, or over eight times the amount of rent we are now paying. That will be the future annual carrying charges.

To resume the letter of instructions from the department on this very point, I wish to read—and this is the remainder of the letter that was sent from the Treasury Department explaining the method of handling these matters by the committee. The committee did not want the only tangible evidence that could be offered. It directed that real facts should not be furnished. I continue reading of the letter:

The department felt, further, that it might be subjected to criticism for the erection of buildings in places where the Federal activities did not appear to warrant the same, and that it should properly set forth in its report all facts which would show the effect of proposed legislation.

In reporting on these bills the department began by giving in the usual way, first, the estimated cost of site and building in accordance with the space required, and then added the population, postal receipts, and rental paid by the Post Office Department, concluding with the following paragraph:

"The department feels constrained, in view of all the conditions, to advise against the construction of a Federal building in this place at the present time."

After receiving the protests of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds against this form of report on bills the department modified its form of report by giving merely the bare facts, showing the cost of maintenance, including interest on total investment, depreciation, and repairs, janitor service, supplies, etc., but omitting the recommendation of the department that no building be erected.

The chairman of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, in his letter of March 31, 1916, to the department stated as follows:

"Now, I desire to again ask that we hereafter confine ourselves to our proper jurisdiction. In future reports we only want a simple statement of the activities to be housed, the space needed by each, the postal receipts, the probable cost, etc. If we desire anything further in a particular case, we will ask for it."

In his letter of April 3 he used the following language:

"I desire again, therefore, to most respectfully ask that in making these reports you will confine it to a simple statement of the facts asked for, because that is all the committee desires to have."

The correspondence between this department and the chairman of the committee is contained in letters as follows:

Chairman committee to department, March 18, 1916.
Departmental reply, March 29, 1916.
Chairman committee to department, March 31, 1916.
Chairman committee to department, April 3, 1916.
Departmental reply, May 4, 1916.
Chairman committee to department, May 6, 1916.

The letters from the chairman of the committee and the departmental replies are undoubtedly on file and presumably the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will permit you to examine same.

Very truly, yours,

BYRON R. NEWTON,
Assistant Secretary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the information which the Treasury Department offered to the committee in regard to these various projects. All they took was the advice of the Member of Congress from each district. That is the way this bill has been made up, and 200 items are wasteful and indefensible, according to the Treasury estimates, which the committee refused to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, there is quite a good deal of noise here this afternoon, to say the least. I for one do not believe in the Treasury Department or any other department telling this Congress how to legislate. [Applause.] There are some men here, at least, whose constituents think they know how to legislate.

Central City in the last census, as I remember, showed a population of between 2,500 and 2,600. The Government has already purchased a site there, for which it paid, I believe, $7,500, and title has passed to the Government. The town contains three railroads and has, I presume, about 75 business houses. It has a large coal mine, which employs from 300 to 350 men. There are in the county about 30 large commercial mines. That county is in the central portion of the western coal field of Kentucky. I presume the population of the town in the last year or two has increased 1,000 or more, and it is rapidly increasing.

The necessary land, the site, has been purchased, as I stated, and this building ought to be built. It seems to me it is time some gentlemen on the other side of the House were tumbling to themselves and should cease taking up the valuable time of this Congress in arguing about something that they know will do them no good at all. [Laughter.] If they want their constituents to hear them, let them put it in the RECORD and send it home. [Laughter.] Let them hire a horse and put some fellow on it and send it out to them. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, gentlemen, I did not really want to say anything, but, of course, when you attack my town I have to reply. I wish you people would hush talking and let us vote on this bill. It is going to pass. You recognize that fact. Why do you want to make all this noise? Simply to get yourselves in the newspapers and your pictures on the front page. That is about the size of it. Now, gentlemen, that is about all I wish to say. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office and other Government offices at Coleman, Tex., $30,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the population of Coleman, Tex., according to a report to the Treasury Department, is 3,046. The receipts last year reached $10,723. The rent is $876 annually, and the amount of maintenance fees is estimated at $4,000; or altogether the amount named in this item is about four or five times the present cost.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in reply, along this same line, to what has just preceded, that while the presentation of these facts may not be of any value, so far as the passage of this particular bill is concerned, the gentleman [Mr. THOMAS] who spoke—and I am sorry I struck his particular project—the gentleman who spoke also spoke two years ago in favor of the river and harbor bill then passed by the House. He gave me the same advice then, but that bill was defeated in the Senate because in the House we had called attention to the weakness and viciousness of that bill.

That is what we are trying to do here now in the hope that we will awaken some conversions here and get results there.

Now, I want to quote some testimony, Mr. Chairman, that comes from eminent authority recognized by all as second to none on this subject, from a man who has studied the public-building problem and who has rendered an illuminating opinion on the subject. When I say it is the distinguished gentleman who now sits in the chair, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE], you will realize that what I am about to quote is good authority. He says in Report No. 1029 of the House, Sixty-second Congress, second session, as follows:

There seems to be a mania for the construction of public buildings, the cause of which the committee does not attempt to inquire into. We are also aware that some of our suggestions which we shall make will not meet with a cordial reception. We make them, however, because of conditions developed by the hearings and in such public documents as are within our reach and to inform Members who may not have had the time or inclination to investigate for themselves, but who are relying upon the committee to keep them informed as to the facts. * * *

Many towns now have public buildings where private persons would have been glad to have equipped a building under the direction of the Government for its use for a rental of one-half the price paid for janitor service, to say nothing of the deterioration, heat, light, and general upkeep necessary to be looked after and paid for by the Government. The public under these conditions that have prevailed have been denominating the construction of public buildings in towns where the business absolutely does not warrant such construction as a "pork-barrel proposition." They ought not to be too severely criticized for it.

What better authority do you want? He continues:

We believe a Member ought to serve his district and promote its interests in harmony with well-defined business principles and the general public good; that is one way of measuring his usefulness in this body. Such service ought not to partake of a purely selfish interest, with the assumption that getting something for the district that in good conscience it is not entitled to will get something for him. The committee believes that the restriction for public buildings ought to be limited to a city of not less than 5,000 population and $10,000 receipts. The cost of maintenance, with constantly increasing sums for expenditure of public funds, will become a serious matter unless some established rules or regulations are provided for. It is proper to state, however, that the violation of the rule of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has not occurred in the Legislature at this end of the Capitol.

There is expert opinion from the presiding officer, and this bill has scores of items that are barred by the official report from which I have quoted.

Now, can anyone say that that is not a fact? [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say only a few words about this item which proposes a building at Coleman, Tex. If I had not thought it entirely justified I should not have offered the bill.

Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the census report, while perhaps reasonably accurate for 1910, can not even approximate the present population of most towns in the State of Texas. We have places of 5,000 to 10,000 inhabitants in that State that were not on the map in 1910.

The postal receipts for the fiscal year 1915 were $10,723, and for the fiscal year 1905, $5,206.

The postal receipts for the last quarter, supplied me by the postmaster at Coleman, indicated postal receipts of between $13,000 and $14,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I have been very modest in asking for a $30,000 building to accommodate the business of that town. There are a good many railway postal clerks who make it their headquarters.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. SLAYDEN. Gentlemen, be patient. I have not occupied a minute of time on this bill before, and I desire to say without interruption what I intended to say about this bill.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. Coleman is a county-seat town, is it not?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is a county-seat town, and the junction of two lines of railway, and the headquarters for a good many railway postal clerks.

Mr. Chairman, the bill is justified, and it is one of three bills that I have proposed, in which the amounts I have asked for were less than the ordinary amount, and less than the committees were willing to concede.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this taste and appetite for pork varies with the circumstances. If a big, juicy slice is coming toward me, I think it perhaps an excellent thing. If it is to be divided with my neighbor, I know that my part is all right, but I may have doubts about his; and if it goes only to the other fellow, of course, I have an aversion to pork that would gratify the author of the Mosaic code. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I have not the slightest doubt that this item will be agreed to by the committee. It makes its own argument. It is reasonable; it is proper. Coleman is a small town, of only 4,500 or perhaps 5,000 population, but the people of that town went down into their pockets and paid between $6,000 and $7,000 for a very desirable lot, one that was wanted, and presented it to the Government, $1 being the consideration named in the deed. That same thing happened in the town of Brownwood, in my district, only in that case citizens paid between $8,000 and $10,000 for the lot they gave the Government; and people who do those things, and who do the amount of business that seems to be generally conceded to be the proper prerequisite for the granting of such an appropriation as this, are certainly entitled to the consideration of the House, and I believe there will not be more than one or two votes against such a laudable and proper item as this.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Crockett, Tex., $25,000.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, on October 1, 1916, the postal receipts of this town, according to the statement of the department, were $9,203. This is another item where the present rent is $632, and the cost to the Government to maintain will be $4,200. Of this $900 will be for maintenance. I would like to read a letter regarding the cost of maintenance. It was stated on the floor the other day that $900 was for soap. I want to read this letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 8, 1917.

Hon. W. FRANK JAMES,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Referring to your recent call at the department and request for information as to what constituted the item of supplies amounting to $900, contained in reports recently submitted to Congress in connection with various contemplated buildings, the following information is furnished you:

From the experience of the department in connection with the maintenance of small buildings in various parts of the country costing approximately about $50,000, it is estimated that the average cost for supplies amounts to $900, as tabulated below:

Light	$250
Fuel	350
Water	120
Ice, washing of towels, removal of ashes and rubbish, and miscellaneous supplies	180
Total	900

In connection with this estimate there is inclosed herewith a statement comprising the actual experience of the department relative to five buildings located in various sections of the country. As it will be seen, the cost for heating, as well as other items, varies materially, according to whether the building is located in the North or South.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. NEWTON, Assistant Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the item.

The question was taken, and the motion was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Decatur, Ind., $45,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 23, strike out the figures "$45,000" and in lieu thereof insert the figures "$50,000."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Decatur is one of the places that comes within the line entitled to $50,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Dillon, S. C., $25,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have passed over several of the items that I did not want to mention, although all are wasteful because of greatly increased annual cost, but I move to strike out this item. I have not examined and do not know the Representative in whose district this item is and desire to be relieved of prejudice against any particular item excepting on the basis of extravagance. At Dillon the population, according to the Treasury report, was 1,757 in 1910. The postal receipts were $7,733, and the rent is $400 per annum. According to the Treasury estimate the expense annually through a new building will be increased to $4,000, or ten times the amount it now costs the Government. In arriving at a reasonable basis for public-building construction, let me read from the report (Doc. 936, 63d Cong., 2d sess.) from which I read a few moments ago. I have the report of the Public Buildings Commission, which has made an investigation since the last public-buildings bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to strike out the item.

The question was taken, and the motion was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office, courthouse, and customhouse at Duluth, Minn., $300,000. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to sell at public sale, after due advertisement, the present Federal building at Duluth and the site upon which the same is located, for not less than $150,000, the proceeds of the said sale to be used in the construction of the new building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 11, line 4, strike out lines 4 and 5, and in line 6 the words "less than $150,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Or private sale at not less than the value as determined by the appraisal thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury, and upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the United States, in the present Federal building at Duluth, and the site upon which the same is located, and convey the said land and building by quitclaim deed to the purchaser thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 1, after the word "courthouse" strike out the word "and," and insert after the word "customhouse" the words "and other Government offices."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The committee has no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making a few remarks; and I hope I may be permitted to complete my argument. I intended to say that before assuming an obligation that will have to be paid in a few years——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no new paragraph has been read, and that there is nothing to strike out.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if it is necessary, then I move to strike out the paragraph, lines 1 to 7.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But no paragraph has been read. I make the point of order that there is nothing before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the committee has just perfected the paragraph. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Edenton, N. C., $25,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the item. I want to say that I desire to deal fairly with the House, and I think Members can very well afford to permit me to conclude the very few remarks that I desire to make. I desire to call attention to the fact that for the 11 months of this year ending with November our imports from all parts of the country——

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The gentleman from Michigan is not proceeding in order. He is not addressing himself to the paragraph or anything that is collateral to that paragraph, and the Chair has repeatedly so ruled.

Mr. LANGLEY. And I want to suggest, further, that the gentleman pledged himself that if he had five minutes he would stop, and he is therefore estopped from going any further.

Mr. HOWARD. As I understand the rule, when a Member is proceeding out of order he has to take his seat, and he has to purge himself of his disorder, and it has to be done by a motion; and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has, in my judgment and in the judgment of practically every man on this floor, been trying to get away with that campaign rot that he delivered in Michigan in the late campaign on a bill of this sort for the specific purpose of filibustering.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the gentleman from Michigan will not be required to take his seat unless he is called to order by some Member of the House.

Mr. HOWARD. Then I call the gentleman from Michigan to order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I demand that the gentleman from Georgia have the words to which he objects taken down.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well; I am ready.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts whose words he desires to have taken down?

Mr. GARDNER. The words stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] to which he objects.

Mr. HOWARD. The objection is not so much directed to the words but the defiance of the gentleman from Michigan to the repeated ruling of the Chair. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit me, the gentleman was proceeding with an argument, a portion of which on four different occasions within the last hour related to the tariff. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] made the point of order which the Chair sustained. Another gentleman made the point of order which the Chair sustained, and then a third gentleman [Mr. LANGLEY] made a point of order which the Chair very promptly and properly sustained. I made a point of order the gentleman was not proceeding in order. Now, on the fifth occasion he takes up the disconnected speech, campaign speech, not relating to anything in this bill, and for the fifth time, in defiance of the ruling of the Chair, he persists in proceeding with it when a point of order is made by a gentleman that he is not in order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I call attention of the Chair to Rule XIV, section 5—

If a Member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the Member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud.

Mr. HOWARD. That is not the rule under which I am objecting.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there is a special rule for the consideration of this bill requiring all gentlemen to limit all debate to the subject matter of the bill. The gentleman has not been called to order for any language used, but the point of order has been repeatedly made that he is not discussing the bill, and he has persisted in proceeding with that discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled that the gentleman was not proceeding in order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The Chair has repeatedly held that the gentleman was not in order. I want to put the gentleman on notice about the proposition that if I can get Members enough to stand by me we will stay here until midnight or daylight if necessary to pass this bill, and the filibuster of the gentleman is not going to accomplish anything.

Mr. CRAMTON. May I have a word on the point of order?

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is perfectly correct. I did not know that was the rule that was being invoked by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]. Only the Chair can require the gentleman from Michigan to sit down——

Mr. HOWARD. I understand that; that is elementary. I learned that in church.

Mr. CRAMTON. I wish to discuss the point of order. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to this: That I have uniformly stated that if the Chair ruled my remarks were not in order I would discontinue them, but as yet I have not understood the Chair to so rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman the Chair has several times ruled the gentleman was proceeding out of order and asked him to proceed in order. The Chair holds the point of order is well taken.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. This bill, I understand, makes authorization for a considerable sum of money. Is it out of order for a Member in discussing an item to refer to the condition of the Treasury or to the receipts of the Government of the United States? That is what the gentleman from Michigan, as I understand it, now is proceeding to do.

Mr. CRAMTON. Absolutely.

Mr. GOOD. Here is a bill that authorizes the expenditure of a great deal of money which must be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I do not understand that the Chair has held that it will be out of order for a Member to speak about the income of the Government from all sources and the condition of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair inform the gentleman we are proceeding under the five-minute rule in the discussion of this bill.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And that the gentleman must discuss the paragraph before the House or an amendment thereto.

Mr. GOOD. But the paragraph before the House might refer to a $4,000,000 item or a $30,000 item, and just to what extent that item goes and the effect of it, it seems to me, the gentleman has a perfert right within the rules to refer to the Treasury and the probable income to the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the gentleman's attention to Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, page 52, section 5049:

On a motion to amend, debate in the House is confined to the amendment and may not include the general merits of a proposition.

And there are cited several precedents.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, then I will proceed in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may proceed in order under the specified rule which confines the discussion to the rule itself.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say that I had not understood before the Chair had expressly ruled. I yield to his ruling. I have no desire to filibuster, and hence I will not attempt to proceed further on that line. But while I am on my feet I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAMTON. Under above leave to print, I desire to give the following interesting and instructive figures:

Imports into United States.

11 months ending November—

1910	$1,426,194,277
1911	1,391,684,958
1912	1,664,270,806
1913	1,608,570,909
1914	1,674,619,456
1915	1,606,764,190
1916	2,186,821,703

Even now, with the world at war and the men of Europe withdrawn from industrial production, we have imported for the last 11 months, for which figures are available, over half a billion dollars more of goods made by foreign labor than ever before in the same period of time. A representative of the people may well pause to consider what the conditions will be in this country in a year or two, when our market abroad for war orders is ended by the dawn of peace in Europe and when the present rush of foreign-made goods becomes a disastrous torrent. It is folly, with such possibilities in our early future to burden our people with millions and millions to decorate with congressional monuments small towns throughout the land.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I want to talk in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the five minutes has already been used on this item, and I must object.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] wants to talk on the same side as the other gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Michigan was not permitted to talk on either side.

Mr. JAMES. I call attention to the fact that this is an appropriation of $25,000. The original bill that was introduced by the sponsor thereof called for $60,000, and the committee is to be commended for cutting it down to $25,000. I find the population in 1900 was 3,046 and in 1910 was 2,789. It costs the Government now $660 a year for rent, and the Treasury Department estimates that the cost of the maintenance of the new building will be $4,000. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Eminence, Ky., $40,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. According to the statement furnished by the Treasury Department for this $40,000 appropriation, the population in Eminence, Ky., in 1910, was 1,274. The revenues of 1915 were $4,402. The rent is $193 annually. According to the estimates of the department it will cost $3,700 a year to maintain a post office at Eminence, which to-day rents for $193 annually, in addition to the original investment of $40,000.

I call attention, Mr. Chairman, further to the minority report of this public-building commission, contained in Document No. 936, on this same point of ascertainment of what is the proper limitation in annual receipts, rental, and population when deciding upon public-building construction. This is from the present Postmaster General, who was a member of the commission and formerly a Member of this House. In his minority report he says, on pages 18 and 19:

If satisfactory quarters can be rented for an amount less than this sum the construction of a public building represents a large annual loss to the Government and should not be authorized.

* * * * * * *

Although the rental paid should be the basic factor for determining whether a public building should be erected, consideration must be given to the fact that abnormally high rental values may be fixed in some communities by unusual conditions or by the disposition of property owners to raise rents with a view to securing public buildings. To provide against the construction of public buildings in communities where the existence of artificial real estate values compels the Government to pay rentals exceeding $1,000 per annum, it is necessary to establish a secondary or corrective condition.

* * * * * * *

The interest of the Government, therefore, requires that a public building for post-office purposes only, shall not be authorized for any place unless the rental paid for Government offices is as much as $1,000 per annum, and then only when either the gross post-office receipts amount to as much as $15,000 or the population to as much as 5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Fairfield, Iowa, $50,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the proposition ought to be in the bill, and I move that further debate on the paragraph just read be now closed. I refer to the item for Fairfield, Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves that all debate on the paragraph just read be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Falmouth, Ky., $25,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, that, too, is a very deserving item, and I move that all debate on that item be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that all debate on this paragraph close.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office and other Government offices at Fargo, N. Dak., $250,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, that is also a very deserving item, and I move that all debate on it be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that all debate on the paragraph just read be now closed.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FREAR. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office and other Government offices at Forrest City, Ark., $25,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 20, strike out the figures "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$35,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JAMES rose.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that that is offered because of the fact that other towns of that size have that sum, and in proportion to those the original sum is not sufficient. I move that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not move to close debate when another gentleman has the floor——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Another gentleman has not the floor——

Mr. STAFFORD. Another gentleman, demanding recognition. He can not move to close debate until five minutes' debate has been had. The gentleman can not by these tactics foreclose Members from discussing items under the five-minute rule.

The Chair must take cognizance of the fact that five minutes have not been consumed on these respective items. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], demanding recognition, should be recognized, and the Chair can not entertain a motion to close the debate before five minutes' debate has been consumed. I call the attention of the Chair to section 6 of Rule XXII, which reads as follows:

The committee may, by the vote of the majority of the Members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such sections or paragraphs or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only (which motion shall be decided without debate); but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

It has always been the practice, Mr. Chairman, to allow at least five minutes' debate under all conditions.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The very rule that the gentleman quoted says "after debate had begun." I had the floor. The gentleman from Michigan had not the floor. I offered an amendment, and discussed it, and after discussion made the motion. It was entirely in order.

I want to submit, Mr. Chairman, that the committee has its remedy in its own hands. It can vote down my motion if it sees fit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of gentlemen to the ruling on page 129 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, which reads as follows:

Thereupon Mr. Joseph W. Babcock, of Wisconsin, moved that debate on the amendment and amendments thereto close in one minute.

Mr. James D. Richardson, of Tennessee, made the point or order that debate could not be closed until the time allowed by the rules—five minutes for and five against the proposition—had expired.

After debate the Chairman said:

"The Chair is very clearly of the opinion that by section 5, five minutes' debate is allowed for an amendment proposed and five minutes against that amendment and then the debate closes itself without any motion. The sixth paragraph, which was adopted 10 years later than the one just referred to, provided for closing debate at any time after it shall have begun. It would have been entirely unnecessary if it had been limited to the condition described in paragraph 5, because the debate then is closed without any motion, or upon the interposition of the point of order by any gentleman on the floor. The Chair therefore rules that the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin is in order, that debate upon this amendment be closed in one minute."

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand from the ruling of the Chair, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] is entitled to recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. This precedent establishes here the rule that when there has been debate on this proposition by the Chairman he can move to close the debate.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me a moment on that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman if he desires to discuss the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the Chair turn to page 390 of the rules of the House and look half way down the page until he finds this clause——

The CHAIRMAN. What page is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. GARDNER. Page 390 of the Manual. Look half way down the page.

The CHAIRMAN. What section?

Mr. GARDNER. Section 6. I read:

The motion to close debate is not in order until such debate has begun (V, 5225), which means after one speech of five minutes (V, 5226).

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit an interruption, a question, there?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the rule say "debate of five minutes"?

Mr. GARDNER. That is the syllabus. I do not think the gentleman doubts that HINDS is good authority.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No.

Mr. GARDNER. Now, I will read from the decision from Mr. Congressman Moody, of Massachusetts. The reference number is 5226. After debate on that Babcock motion the Chairman, William H. Moody, of Massachusetts, said:

The Chair is very clearly of the opinion that by section 5 five minutes' debate is allowed for an amendment proposed and five minutes against that amendment, and then the debate closes itself without any motion.

The sixth paragraph, which was adopted 10 years later than the one just referred to, provided for closing the debate at any time after it shall have begun. It would have been entirely unnecessary—

I see that the syllabus does not seem to agree with the decision.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair is ready to rule, I do not care to say anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. It seems to me that the matter is a very plain one, and easy of solution. Under the rules of the House, after general debate is ended, the bill is before the House for consideration under the five-minute rule. Now, what is the five-minute rule? It provides that when an amendment is offered, there can be five minutes' debate in favor of the amendment and five minutes' debate against the amendment and then the rule, if strictly enforced, precludes all other debate. That is section 5 of the rule. Now, that rule is supplemented by section 6, which provides that after debate has commenced under the five-minute rule it is in order to move to close debate. It requires one speech under the five-minute rule to begin the debate on the paragraph or section; but surely no rule of the House requires any Member to consume all of his five minutes. He may make a speech of one minute if he desires, and after he has made a speech, if it is of a minute or half a minute, debate under the five-minute rule has commenced, and it is clearly in order to move to close debate, and if the committee desires to close debate, the committee will sustain the motion. If the committee does not desire to close debate, it will reject the motion, and debate can resume. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, after having had fuller opportunity to consult the precedents, I would like to be heard again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. As a matter of fact in the citation made by the Chair (Hinds, V, No. 5226), the motion of Mr. Babcock of Wisconsin to close debate was made after Mr. John J. Fitzgerald had addressed the committee for five minutes on the pending amendment. Now, Mr. Moody, in making his ruling, was clearly in error. Mr. Moody first called attention to the fact that paragraph 5, Rule XXIII, makes the debate on amendments in Committee of the Whole close automatically after five minutes on one side and five on the other. Then he based his ruling that the point of order against Mr. Babcock's motion was not well taken, upon the statement that paragraph 6 of Rule XXIII would have been totally unnecessary unless it was desired to give the Committee of the Whole the right to close debate even before the five-minute debate had been concluded. But Mr. Moody overlooked the fact that section 6 gives the right to close debate on the whole paragraph after the debate has begun, whereas section 5 only gives the right to close debate or automatically terminate debate on some particular amendment, and not on the whole paragraph. So that Mr. Moody's decision is evidently made under a misapprehension of what section 6 of Rule XXIII actually does.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question. Section 6 of the rule says:

The committee may, by the vote of a majority of the Members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only.

Does the gentleman hold that no debate has been had upon this paragraph?

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is not prepared to hold so, although he has heard it held so at a time when it used to be the fashion, in moving the previous question, to say, "I think it is a very good thing to move the previous question, and I move the previous question," and in that way cut off the 40 minutes' debate that is generally allowed after the immediate ordering of the previous question. I have known debate in the House to be closed by that device. I remember that it was done when Calendar Wednesday was adopted by an amendment to the rules of the House on motion of Mr. John Dalzell about six or seven years ago. Mr. Dalzell, from the Committee on Rules, reported a certain special rule which many Members did not want to have debated. Under the rules, unless there has been debate before the ordering of the previous question, debate may continue for 40 minutes after the previous question is adopted. On this occasion Mr. Dalzell debated the special rule for two minutes and then moved the previous question on its adoption. I claimed the floor for debate under the 40-minute rule, but the Speaker was of the opinion that debate had already actually taken place. The House felt that this ruling was not a true interpretation of the meaning of the rule. Now, if the Chair thinks that the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors genuinely debated this paragraph, if the Chair thinks there has actually been genuine debate in Committee of the Whole, then I am aware that the point of order is not well taken. It is entirely in the power of the Chair to determine whether or not there was genuine debate.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make this suggestion concerning the point of order: There is no inconsistency between paragraphs No. 5 and No. 6. Paragraph No. 5 provides that there shall be 10 minutes' debate; paragraph No. 6 says that after debate has begun a motion to close debate may be made.

Now, after an amendment has been offered, the mover of that amendment has, unquestionably, five minutes under rule 5. He may use it or not, as he chooses. Suppose he only uses one minute and at the close he sits down, the chairman of the committee can then move to close debate; at the close of five minutes he can move to close debate. But there is no other opportunity to close debate after it has begun, because you can not take a man off his feet after he has received recognition by the Chair for any purpose until his time has expired under the rule. So there is nothing for the Chair to determine except whether debate had begun. The gentleman who is entitled to recognition and made the motion to strike out was entitled to use full five minutes under the rule if he desired, and, debate having begun, he had a right to exercise the power that was his under the rule.

So it seems to me there ought not to be any difficulty in the mind of the Chair on the point of order. A correct decision of the point of order is of vastly more importance than the passage of this bill or any item in it. I certainly do not desire that the Chair shall make any mistake which may be used as a precedent.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, after following the discussion on the point of order it seems to me that the gentlemen making it have shifted their ground. When the point was first made it was insisted that there must be five minutes of actual debate, before the motion to close debate could be made. But this contention seems to have been abandoned, and it is now insisted that the Member holding the floor must actually debate the proposition not that he must debate it for full five minutes, but in good faith must debate it for some appreciable portion of that time. If this is the point to be determined, and it strikes me that it is the only one that can be raised, then the question presented is of easy determination.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman tell me what question was being debated by the gentleman from Florida? How did he have the floor for debate? He offered no amendment.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. GARNER. He did offer an amendment increasing it from $25,000 to $35,000.

Mr. GARDNER. Then I am mistaken.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will answer the gentleman. The extent of the contribution to the debate is immaterial, so that it is appreciable. The Chair need only determine whether any argument has been advanced concerning the proposition before the House, not how much time the debater has consumed, but whether he has made any actual contribution to the debate. If the Chair is satisfied that the gentleman from Florida debated the subject matter, however brief his remarks may have been, then the debate had begun, and it was in order for the gentleman from Florida to move to close the discussion.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair is ready to rule I do not desire to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, while there do not seem to be many parliamentary precedents in matters of this kind, many times since I have been in the House a motion in the form in which it was made by the gentleman from Florida has been made, and never up to this time have I heard it questioned.

I remember a number of years ago in the case of an important bill, the national reclamation law, it became necessary in the face of a filibuster to make a motion to close debate after each item had been read in order to get through in the time fixed for the final vote on the bill. Mr. John Dalzell, one of the best parliamentarians on the floor since I have been here, was among those who were filibustering. The motion to close debate was made successively on one paragraph after another, as made to-day by the gentleman from Florida; and I am certain that if the motion had not been properly made Mr. Dalzell would have resisted it.

Let me call the Chair's attention to the fact that the ruling which the Chair quoted by Chairman Moody, of Massachusetts, is entirely logical, for this reason: James D. Richardson made the point of order that debate could not be closed until the time allowed by the rule—five minutes on a side—had been exhausted. Now, the point of order put in that way raised the entire question as to whether paragraph 6 established a different rule than that laid down by paragraph 5. It is true that in that case Mr. FITZGERALD had occupied five minutes; but that does not change the situation any, because the point of order was that the entire period fixed by Rule V must be exhausted, and therefore the Chairman very properly took up that question and decided that paragraph 6 provided that after debate had begun on an amendment and proceeded for ever so brief a period the motion can be made to close debate. It may be amended, but no debate is allowed on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the situation: The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], offers an amendment to the paragraph and after proceeding to explain why he offered the amendment he makes a motion that debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed, whereupon the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] makes the point of order that there had not been five minutes discussion upon the amendment. The Chair is inclined to think that inasmuch as discussion upon the amendment had been entered upon by the chairman of the committee the point of order is not well taken and the point of order is therefore overruled. The question is on the motion to close debate upon the paragraph and amendments thereto.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Georgetown, Tex., $30,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that Georgetown, Tex., is a very progressive city in that State. This is certainly an item that is worthy. I desire now to withdraw the pro forma amendment, and I move that all debate upon the paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on closing debate upon the paragraph and amendments thereto.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARDNER) there were—ayes 114, noes 6.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida to strike out the last word.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Green River, Wyo., $25,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The town of Green River, Wyo., is a very prosperous place. There are many Federal activities there, and this post office is absolutely essential to that community. I move that all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to close debate upon the paragraph and amendments thereto.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FREAR) there were—ayes 97, noes 5.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida to strike out the last word.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JAMES) there were—ayes 0, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States post office at Greenville, Ala., $30,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss the item——

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is nothing before the House. What question is before the committee?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The adoption of this item.

Mr. GARDNER. But the gentleman can not be recognized unless he has an amendment to offer.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that many years ago I visited Greenville, Ala.——

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; I am discussing it. This relates to Greenville, Ala. I want to say——

Mr. GARDNER. But the gentleman is discussing Alabama.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; Greenville, Ala. Having said what I did, that I visited this place several years ago, I can conclude my remarks by stating that it is rightly included in this bill. Mr. Chairman, I move that all further debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Florida to close debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. JAMES) there were—ayes 83, noes 4.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). Five gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the other side.

Mr. MANN. There is no other side to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is one-fifth of a quorum may decide whether there shall be tellers or not.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I moved to close all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto, and the motion has been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion before the House is that of the gentleman of Florida to strike out the last word. That is the pending motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. JAMES) there were—ayes 6, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. What has become of my motion to strike out $30,000 and insert $25,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 4, strike out "$80,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate close on the paragraph and amendments thereto.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, under the rules of the House it is impossible to save time by attempting to stifle debate. Of the procedure of the gentleman from Florida I have no criticism to make. Under the rules the motion to close debate is subject to amendment ad libitum, and upon every one of those you can have a division. After debate is closed you can offer amendments until the Chair goes blind, and I have never seen the Chairman of this committee get blind. Now, two or three gentlemen are here who desire to discuss certain items. The only way to do, after all, will be for the House to let them discuss those items in accordance with the rules. The time is not very great for any one item, and then this body, if it is necessary, might have to sit at night in order to pass the bill. That has occurred frequently in the past and will occur in the future; and if the House becomes satisfied that some Members are attempting to debate purely for filibuster, they never make any progress by that, whereas a filibuster is always successful in the effort to get a chance to debate. Now, Members are pretty well worked up to-night, and I suggest to the chairman of the committee he move to rise, and if necessary sit all to-morrow and to-morrow night and let gentlemen debate if they want to be heard.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to dispose of the pending proposition before taking any steps.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his motion?

Mr. GOOD. I shall not only insist upon the motion but I shall make as many motions for each item as I can, as long as the chairman of the committee insists upon filibustering and preventing the committee from discussing these items as long as the committee is not filibustering.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, I would like permission to proceed for about a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to make this statement: For the first time in the history of Congress we have brought in an omnibus public-buildings bill here and thrown it wide open to discussion, to amendment, and to consideration. Three or four gentlemen have shown a disposition absolutely to block the progress of Congress. They have gone through this matter and put their whole case in the RECORD——

Mr. LANGLEY. Several times.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. One gentleman persisted in making a tariff speech here for an hour or more by moving practically to strike out the last word at the end of every line——

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I will not—and undertook to make that kind of a speech for the purpose of delaying this bill. These gentlemen, as I say, have had ample opportunity to put their case in the RECORD. They have put it in the RECORD, they have seen the temper of the House, and they know that the House intends to pass this bill.

Now, they have made their arguments, they have presented their case, and why can they not in good conscience allow the Congress to go forward with its work and do its work? I want to say this, that I am going in a moment to ask the committee to rise, but not out of deference to these gentlemen who have sought to filibuster. I prefer to sit here all night. But some things are bothering some other gentlemen, and out of consideration for them I intend to move to rise. But I want to say this, that we have been perfectly fair, we have opened this bill to amendment for these gentlemen, and if they would offer their amendments and discuss the actual questions involved in the amendments there would be no objection to having the five minutes' debate. But they go out and ramble all over the wide, wide world and talk about rivers and harbors, the tariff, and everything under the sun except the amendments they offer. And I want to put them on notice now that if the House will stand by the committee we will put this bill through to-morrow, if we have to get another rule. We did try to get, and did get, a fair rule and tried to act fairly and squarely, but if gentlemen will insist on filibustering we will try to bring in a rule here that will put this bill through, and, if necessary, we will stay here all night to-morrow night to do it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the committee to dispose of this item.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I will not.

Mr. GOOD. I wish to say to the gentleman that I am perfectly willing, inasmuch as the gentleman has stated he is going to rise, and I think that he will permit a limited debate on these things to-morrow, to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. FITZGERALD] having resumed the chair, Mr. CLINE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18994) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, etc., and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SPARKMAN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Lavinia Johnson (H. R. 5579, 63d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

CANCELING DIE FOR WINTER CARNIVAL, ST. PAUL, MINN.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 332——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object. I do not know what it is.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 10384. An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 19, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 19, 1917.

Rabbi Leo M. Franklin, of Detroit, Mich., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in whose hands are the destinies of men and nations, earnestly do we seek Thee in this hour. As in the ages past Thou hast guided men through storm and stress to safety and peace; as in all times Thy love has lifted and inspired the hearts of men to deeds of heroism and of self-forgetting sacrifice, so in these times, O Father, do Thou bless us with the light of Thine on-leading love, so that there may be kindled in our hearts the fires of loyalty to all that lifts life to the highest and makes a people worthy in Thy sight.

Oh, may this great people be true to the best in all its past. Do Thou inspire the hearts and the minds of its citizenry with a passion for righteousness and with a sense of sacramental service for humanity. May material success not stultify our souls or dwarf our spirits, and may great sorrows, even such as the Nation feels in the passing of a mighty hero, serve to inspire us the more to do our part bravely and loyally for God, for country, and for humanity.

O God, bless Thou this land whose walls are salvation and whose gates are praise, a land upon which may rest Thine eyes forevermore in benediction and in love. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. THOMAS. I present certain petitions from citizens of my State urging Congress to adopt a national constitutional prohibition amendment, which I ask may lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. THOMAS. I also have a short protest from Dr. Orville D. Wescott and Dr. J. Gelien, of my State, against the so-called tuberculosis bill. It is very short, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN OPINION AS TO THE VALUE OF CLIMATE COMPARED WITH ECONOMIC FACTORS IN THE CURE OF TUBERCULOSIS.

Our work at the tuberculosis dispensary of the University of Colorado Medical School shows that most of the indigent tuberculous patients that come to Colorado in search of health do so at a great risk to themselves.

Climate is only a small part of the many other requirements necessary to establish a cure in tuberculosis.

A short sanatorium life is not of great value to the average health seeker unless it is followed by appropriate training toward future occupation.

A change of climate can become most disastrous to those who lose track of the more essential factors, namely, rest, best of food and housing, and peace of mind. The patients also leave relatives and friends at home who should become of greatest help when the patient is able to do light work. Relatives and friends are also indispensable helpers in our family problems.

In justice to the poor sufferers every State should build adequate and sufficient sanatoria for their own indigent tuberculous people. These sanatoria should be provided with facilities to put the patients to work when they are ready, to fit them for future occupation.

We, of the city of Denver, are against the Kent bill in its present form because it will make a tragedy more tragical, and will, by inviting patients to leave their home States, impose greater suffering and heartache upon people already very unfortunate. The Kent bill will increase migration to Colorado and will increase suffering not only of individuals but of whole families, as many such will follow their ill ones to the new home.

Several years ago I (Dr. Gelien) was closely associated with the Eudowood Sanatorium in Towson, Md. Every year Dr. M. Sloan had a home-coming day, when former patients reported back to the sanatorium. The ultimate results with patients of all classes, with regard to health as well as with regard to future occupation, were far superior to those we achieve in Colorado.

All our efforts are directed toward educating the tuberculous people all over the United States not to leave their homes for the so-called health States unless they have means to live under the best of circumstances without having to work for at least two or three years.

It is far safer for them to make their fight in their home States; safer with regard to a cure, as also for future employment.

DEATH OF ADMIRAL DEWEY.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the Legislature of Vermont is now in session and has passed resolutions upon the death of Admiral Dewey. I send them to the desk and ask the Secretary to read them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolutions.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Vermont learns to-day with profound sorrow of the death of one of her most heroic sons. To the State where George Dewey was born, where he received the early training which made his great future possible, and especially to the capital city of that State, where the representatives of the people are now in session in view of his birthplace, the news of his end brings a special burden of grief.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That Vermont, while lamenting the death of the great admiral and diplomat, takes a solemn pride in the glory of his achievements and his splendid services to the Nation, and commends to her sons at home and abroad a devout recognition of the qualities which will make his fame enduring.

That Vermont does hereby extend to the family of Admiral Dewey this expression of the State's esteem of his life and labor and its sympathy in their loss.

That the governor appoint a committee consisting of one senator, one member of the house, and one member of the National Guard of Vermont to attend his funeral.

That the secretary of state be instructed to send to the family of Admiral Dewey and to his sister copies of these resolutions.

That the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives adjourn their respective houses at 11 o'clock this forenoon in respect to his memory.

RIGHTS OF OIL OPERATORS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have here a telegraphic copy of a resolution passed by the Senate of the California Legislature, urging the passage of the remedial portion of the oil-leasing bill, which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

SACRAMENTO, CAL., January 18, 1917.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Please take notice that the following assembly joint resolution No. 2 was this day passed by the Senate of the State of California:

"Whereas the oil industry of California is in a demoralized condition, caused by litigation instituted and threatened by the United States Government against bona fide operators, who entered upon and were developing public lands in good faith at the time of their withdrawal, and continued such development under the law as they were legally advised it to be, until by such efforts they greatly increased the production of oil, and in some instances were the means of opening up new oil fields; and

"Whereas, unless Congress settles by a law these vexatious disputes, the present litigations will probably continue for many years, resulting in great hardship to the operators by preventing the marketing of their oil, and to the public by reason of constantly increasing the price of gasoline and oil, due to the stoppage by the Government of the operation of large areas of this land, and also resulting in many instances in bankrupting the small operators, who have not the resources to stand years of expensive litigations against the United States Government; and

"Whereas we firmly believe that justice requires that the Government shall legalize the claims of all locators who were actually developing such land in good faith at the time of its withdrawal: Now, therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully requests the Congress to enact such legislation as will legalize the rights of these operators; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be, and he is hereby, directed to send a certified copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Interior."

CLIFTON E. BROOKS,
Secretary of Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram will lie on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 10.30 to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

WATER-POWER LEGISLATION—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege.

The Washington Times in its noon edition yesterday printed an article which is so untrue and so false that I think the attention of the Senate and the country should be called to it. I send the article to the desk and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WILSON IS OPPOSED TO TWO DAM BILLS—ANNOUNCES HE WILL VETO MYERS AND SHIELDS BILLS IF THEY PASS.

President Wilson took a stand against the Shields water-power bill, known as the general dam bill, and against the Myers water-power bill to-day.

He visited the Capitol unexpectedly, sent for Senators BANKHEAD, SHIELDS, and others concerned in water-power legislation, and advised them he was opposed to both bills and would veto them.

This action came on the heels of a conference at the White House last night at which the President told House Members he would support the House legislation on water-power matters, but would not sign the Shields bill or the Myers bill.

MAY STIR RESENTMENT.

It is expected the action of the President will stir up resentment among Democrats who have been ardently championing the Shields bill and the Myers bill in the Senate. Senator WALSH, who managed the western campaign for the Democrats, is one of those pushing the Myers bill.

Last night the President called in Congressmen FERRIS, RAINEY, SHERLEY, and KENT, and told them he is favorable to the House action on water-power questions.

The Myers bill is pending before the Senate as the unfinished business. It was forced to the front by Democratic caucus action. Now that the President has made known his opposition it is uncertain what will be done with it. Efforts will be made to sidetrack it.

RELATES TO WATER POWER.

The Myers bill relates to water power on the public domain. The Shields bill is the general dam bill, and it has long been in conference.

Conservationists have attacked the Myers and Shields bills as bad, and the announcement of the President pleased them greatly to-day.

SENATORS ARE SILENT.

Neither Senator SHIELDS nor Senator BANKHEAD would admit that the President was opposed to the Shields bill or to the Myers bill. At the conference last night, however, the President is said to have taken a decided stand against them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, ordinarily this communication would not be entitled to any consideration whatever, but it is so untrue and so false in every statement it makes that it seems to me the attention of the Senate and the country might well be called to it.

There is only one truthful statement in the article, and that is where it states that the President visited the Capitol and had a conference with certain Senators on the water-power bill. That is true, but in that conference the President of the United States emphatically stated that he is in favor of the passage of both these power bills, the one known as the Shields and the other as the Myers bill, and he urged the conferees on the part of the Senate to get together with the conferees of the House and endeavor by every means possible to reach an agreement on the Shields bill; that he regarded it as one of the most important pieces of legislation before this Congress.

This correspondent, Mr. President, whoever he is, did not see Senator SHIELDS or myself. We had no opportunity to state to him the attitude of the President, because we did not meet him. I do not know where he got his information, but I do know that his statement is totally and wholly false, except in the matter that I have stated.

As I said, ordinarily this communication would not be entitled to notice, but coming from the source it does it has evidently had the most wide publicity that could be given to it. Doubtless it has been sent all over the country, as an indication of the President's attitude on these two great propositions.

I felt, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] felt, that it was so eminently unfair and unjust and untruthful as to the attitude of the President that the notice of the Senate should be called to it, in order that they might understand that there was no truth whatever in the proposition and that it was not entitled to any credit whatsoever.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think that the comment of the Senator from Alabama on this article appearing in a local paper is quite timely, and I am very glad that some effort has been made to correct the erroneous impression that it is well calculated to leave.

The President has repeatedly expressed his great interest in this legislation and of the necessity of action by Congress. I do not think that his attitude concerning either of the bills is at all well expressed here. Everybody knows that the water-power bill which came over from the House is different in many essential respects from the bill which passed the Senate. It is likewise well known that the two Houses are now at difference in the conference committee on the Shields bill. I do not know that the President would support either of these bills in exactly the form that either of them passed either House. It may be true that in that sense the President is opposed to both bills; but, Mr. President, it would be a remarkable thing if either or both of these bills conformed exactly to the President's ideas concerning water-power legislation. I wish that that would be distinctly understood, so far as I am entitled to speak for anybody, by Members of the Senate.

The President came here, as I understand the matter, to express the hope that whatever differences there are concerning these measures may be adjusted and that some bill may be worked out. I am sure that he has not expressed his approbation of either of these bills exactly as they have passed, and he certainly did not come here for the purpose of endeavoring to encompass the defeat of this legislation, but rather to expedite its passage, if such a thing is possible.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I was not honored yesterday by being called into conference with the President; I knew nothing of his presence here until after he had departed. If the President held any conference here yesterday with anyone in regard to the water-power bill, which is now the unfinished business of the Senate, I know nothing about it.

In regard to the bill for the development of water power on the public lands, which is sometimes called by my name on account of the fact that I had the honor of reporting it from the Senate Committee on Public Lands to the Senate, if the President has ever expressed to anyone at any time or in any place any intention of vetoing that bill, I have never heard of it other than from the article which has just been read. On the contrary, to my personal knowledge, the President has expressed the very warmest interest in seeing that bill passed by the Senate in some form and in such shape as may conform to the ideas of the majority of the Senate, in order that it may go to conference and that some legislation for the development of water power on the public domain may be enacted by this Congress.

I do not say that the President is in favor of the bill as it is now pending in the Senate in every detail or in every particular; but I know that he is in favor of the principle of such legislation and that he hopes to see the bill now pending before the Senate put into such shape by the Senate as will suit the views of the majority of the Senate, and hopes that it may pass the Senate in such form at this session and go to conference, and that he would like to see it come out of conference in such a way that there will be some legislation at this session for the development of water power on the public domain.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I regard it as exceedingly unfortunate that opportunity or occasion should have been given to any newspaper to discuss the fact that the President of the United States had come to the Capitol and had attempted by conferences with individual Senators to secure the passage or defeat of any legislation. That was the root of the trouble. If the President had kept himself within the bounds of the limitations of the Constitution and had not attempted to interfere with the duties of the Senate, there would have been no occasion for the publication of this article in the newspapers.

NOMINATION OF WINTHROP M. DANIELS—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to make a personal explanation. Yesterday the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] submitted a resolution of investigation as to who supplied Mr. Daniels, candidate for Interstate Commerce Commissioner, with a copy of the speech of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. My reply is that I did. I had no thought that the secrecy of the Senate would be invoked to prevent an appointee of the President, whose appointment was before this body for confirmation, from receiving information as to objections which were urged against him. The Senator from Iowa had carefully prepared a very able speech reviewing the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission in a number of railroad cases. I was exceedingly busy and had not time to carefully look over those cases myself, so I rang up Mr. Daniels over the telephone and asked him to look over the typewritten speech, of which the Senator from Iowa had kindly furnished me a copy, and to give me his views regarding it.

I wish further to say that Mr. Daniels at no time approached me regarding his confirmation or expressed any solicitude regarding it. I felt it my duty, as chairman of the committee in charge of the nomination, to get all the information I could upon the subject of the objections made to his confirmation.

Immediately after sending the copy of this speech to Mr. Daniels I communicated the fact to the Senator from Iowa. There was an executive session on the very day following my handing the copy of the speech to Mr. Daniels, and at that executive session I stated to the Senate that I had handed this copy of the speech to Mr. Daniels, and that I expected to present to the Senate a memorandum upon the subject after receiving his expression regarding it. I did present that memorandum, which was very materially modified by myself, and the speech of the Senator from Iowa and the memorandum which I presented were subsequently by the consent of the Senate published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire for a moment to refer to the statement which has just been made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. I sincerely hope that the penalty prescribed by the rules of the Senate for divulging the secrets of an executive session will not be invoked upon the Senator from Nevada. I have so great confidence in his ability and such profound admiration for his opinions upon public matters that I think it would be a serious loss to the Senate and to the country if he were expelled from the Senate, as the rule absolutely requires; but, in verification of what he has said, I add that immediately after the address that I made in secret, which I hoped to be able to make in public, he came to me and told me very frankly that he had delivered a copy of it to Mr. Daniels. Without expressing any opinion respecting his right to do that, I immediately said to him that I was very glad he had done so, for I never like to say anything critical of a man behind his back. I never had an opinion upon such matters that I was not willing to express in public; and it seemed to me the fairest thing in the world for Mr. Daniels to know the grounds upon which I was opposing his confirmation.

I renew my sentiment with regard to secret executive sessions. I am opposed to them. I believe that we ought to have considered this nomination in public, and then there would have been no such embarrassment and difficulty as has now arisen concerning so eminent and worthy a Member of our body.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. Before being compelled to vote on this question of expulsion, I should like to have all the information possible. Did the Senator from Iowa call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the serious breach of the rule designed to preserve the secrecy and sacredness of the cloister?

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Mr. President, inasmuch as I had stated in the Senate that I would hold myself free to make public what I was about to say concerning Mr. Daniels, I could not look with any great apprehension upon the publication made by the Senator from Nevada. He himself, I think, suggested that it might be possible that he had violated the rules, and I at once declared that I thought it was very possible that he had violated a rule that never should have existed; but I did not condemn the Senator from Nevada. I rather applauded his sense of fairness in giving to the person whose appointment was under consideration the information that I had attempted to lay before the Senate. I think we all felt, however fair as it might have been, that it was not in exact accord with our antiquated rules upon that subject.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when the resolution which I offered yesterday shall be reached, as it will be in the regular course of the morning business, I shall have some remarks to make on it, and will offer a motion for its disposition that I believe to be logical and will meet with the approval of the Senate. At the present time the resolution, as I understand the parliamentay situation, is not before the Senate, and I prefer to wait until it is laid before the Senate in the regular course of the proceedings before I make what few remarks I desire to make upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are next in order.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I introduce two joint resolutions for appropriate reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The title of the first joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The title of the second joint resolution will be read.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 200) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, was read twice by its title.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I will ask that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, as they relate to that matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the joint resolutions proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Senator from Washington can make a motion to refer them to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, and the Chair will entertain the motion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will ask the Chair if there are not now pending before the Committee on Woman Suffrage resolutions purporting to amend the Constitution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My impression was that this same subject was pending before that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be perfectly in order for the Senator from Washington to move to refer the joint resolutions to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, and then it will be for the Senate to determine where they shall go. The Chair will refer them to the Committee on the Judiciary, unless ordered by the Senate to refer them to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. STONE. What disposition does the Chair make of the resolutions?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sends all proposed amendments to the Constitution to the Committee on the Judiciary, unless upon motion the Senate refers them to some other committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these two resolutions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What are the resolutions?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Proposed amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which the Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent to have go to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I think they had better go to the proper committee—the Committee on the Judiciary. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment providing that hereafter the Postmaster General be authorized to enter into contracts with American citizens for the carrying of the mail between the United States and Great Britain on steamships built in the United States capable of maintaining a speed of 30 knots an hour at sea, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEEKS submitted an amendment providing that hereafter the Postmaster General be authorized to grant post-office clerks and other employees in the first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Free Delivery Service and letter carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service not to exceed two weeks' sick leave in any one year with pay, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment providing that the 24 drivers at $900 each in the police department of the District of Columbia be made members of the police force, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 19119), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted an amendment providing that the present purchasing clerk in the office of the quartermaster and disbursing officer at the United States Military Academy shall upon his own application, after more than 50 years' service in the civil and military establishments of the United States, be entitled to be placed on the retired list of the Army, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Military Academy appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STONE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $13,500 to pay William B. Ittner as further compensation for his services as architect in the construction of the new Central High School Building, Washington, D. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 19119), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel the assessment of $13,252.21, being income tax on profit on the sale by Charles L. Freer, of Detroit, Mich., in the year 1915 of 12,095 shares of Parke, Davis & Co. stock, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Commtitee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ADJUDICATION OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6918) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there will come before the Senate in a short time, I presume, a proposed amendment to the Constitution dealing with the suffrage question. I desire to present a paper entitled "Biological and sociological aspects of the woman question," which I ask may be printed as a Senate document.

A word of explanation may be proper at this time. It is an article written by Mrs. Annie Riley Hale, and is a sort of synopsis of a most interesting book written by her entitled "The Eden Sphinx," the only book—that I have ever read, at least—which, ignoring the superficial arguments which we are so prone to hear on both sides of the subject, deals with the greater woman problem from fundamental and underlying principles. Whether or not one agrees with her views on one phase of that problem—the suffrage question—he will find that the concise and somewhat epigrammatic sentences contained in this paper open into a field of thought on the broader question that might be pursued to great advantage by the women, and especially the mothers, of this land.

I ask that the paper be referred to the Committee on Printing, with a view to having it printed as a document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be taken.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I submit a paper entitled "The position of engineers toward the question of water-power development in the West," by Henry Sturgis Drinker, LL. D., president of Lehigh University, which bears directly on the whole problem of water-power development. I desire to have the paper printed as a public document, and with that in view I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be followed.

NOMINATION OF WINTHROP M. DANIELS.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, is the morning business closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was waiting for the Senator from Nebraska to request that the resolution submitted by him on yesterday be laid before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. If we have reached that point, I ask that the resolution which went over yesterday be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the resolution (S. Res. 322) submitted yesterday by Mr. NORRIS, which was read, as follows:

Whereas in secret executive sessions of the Senate on January 3 and 6 the Senator from Iowa, Mr. CUMMINS, delivered an address in opposition to the confirmation of the Hon. Winthrop M. Daniels to become a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and

Whereas said address was printed in confidence for the information of Senators; and

Whereas after said address had been thus printed and before the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom the said Winthrop M. Daniels prepared in writing a reply thereto, which reply was afterwards printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and

Whereas said reply shows on its face that at the time of its preparation the said Winthrop M. Daniels had in his possession a copy of the said address delivered by the said Senator from Iowa; and

Whereas the said Winthrop M. Daniels could not at said time have procured a copy of said address without a violation of the rules of the Senate by some Member or officer thereof; and

Whereas the rules of the Senate provide that any Senator who discloses the secret or confidential business or proceedings of the Senate shall be liable to expulsion and that any officer of the Senate who is guilty of such violation shall be dismissed from the service of the Senate; and

Whereas the furnishing to the said Winthrop M. Daniels of a copy of said address was a flagrant violation of the rules and ancient and time-honored landmarks of the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of three Senators be appointed by the presiding officer to make an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the Senator or officer of the Senate who has been thus guilty. Said committee is hereby directed to take the testimony of said Winthrop M. Daniels and such other persons as may be necessary to ascertain the means by which and the persons through whom he obtained a copy of said address. The said committee is authorized to issue subpœnas, compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, and do all things necessary to fully carry out the purposes of this resolution.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not want to ask a question. I merely desired to suggest that if it were in order I should like to move the previous question on that resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator can avoid the discussion. He does not sit very far from the cloakroom, and if the discussion annoys him he will be at liberty, I presume, to leave at any time.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield for a question from the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire if the Senator's resolution provides for counsel for any of the persons concerned?

Mr. NORRIS. No; it does not.

Mr. President, the Senate is presented here——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Believing that this is properly executive business, I ask that the doors be closed for the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request seconded?

Mr. LODGE. I second it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask for a roll call on that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can not be done under the rule. The motion has been made and seconded. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate, with closed doors, proceeded to consider the resolution. After 1 hour and 40 minutes the doors were reopened.

When the doors were closed the injunction of secrecy was removed from the following proceedings of the confidential legislative session:

The VICE PRESIDENT stated the question to be: Shall the discussion of the resolution (S. Res. 322) to appoint a committee to investigate and ascertain the Senator or officer of the Senate who may have violated the rules of the Senate during the time when confirmation of Winthrop M. Daniels was under consideration in executive session of the Senate be had behind closed doors?

On motion by Mr. NORRIS, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 48, nays 18, as follows:

The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Vice President laid before the Senate the unfinished business at the adjournment yesterday, being the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia asked unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The request was granted.

Mr. NORRIS submitted the following:

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). The Chair is informed that it has been laid before the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that it be again laid before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is not necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks that the unfinished business be again laid before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 182? It is very short and relates to the inaugural ceremonies that are to take place.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it be read first.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask that it be put on its passage. It will take no money from the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. I reserve the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a joint resolution which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 182) inviting the people of the United States to visit the District of Columbia during the week of February 26 to March 4, 1917, to view the Capitol and inspect an exhibition of the various activities of the Government service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am bound to object to that, because all the people of the United States are always invited to come here at any time.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That may be true, but——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being objection——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I be permitted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution can not be considered at this time.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like, Mr. President, to make a little statement. I am not the author of the joint resolution. It was introduced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], and the Committee on Industrial Expositions considered it and reported it favorably. I realize that there is a disposition to smile upon the part of many around the Chamber, but this is in line with the efforts of a number of organizations in the District of Columbia. They have expended their best efforts for the inauguration——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut rises to a question of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from New Jersey is out of order. There is no joint resolution before the Senate. Its consideration has been objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order seems to the Chair to be well taken and is sustained.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent, notwithstanding, that I may make a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I wish to make this statement. This action is sought in deference to many citizens of the District of Columbia who, as I said, have expended their efforts and are contributing their money to make the inauguration a great success. They have asked that this little effort be made toward soliciting the attendance of the people of the country.

The railroad companies have stated that action upon their part toward the reduction of fares to the Capital during inauguration would depend much upon the adoption of some sort of an invitation of this kind.

As I have stated, this resolution was introduced by the Senator from Delaware and was referred to the committee. It seems to me that it is a fitting and proper resolution. It is all very well to say that the people are invited here all the time. So they are, and there is no bar; but it can be no crime and no wrong nor any offense, so far as I can see, to extend the invitation contained in this resolution, nor can I see that there is anything ludicrous in the resolution.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee on page 143.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, at the time of the adjournment of the Senate yesterday the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] had the floor.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I tried very briefly before adjournment on yesterday to review one branch of the work of the Children's Bureau. The only argument presented for reducing the appropriation as the committee has proposed to reduce it was that the work of the Children's Bureau duplicated the work of some of the other departments of the Government. It is perhaps true that the Health Bureau and the Educational Bureau have done some work along the same line as has the Children's Bureau, but while the Children's Bureau has dealt somewhat with the question of infant mortality and the medical relations thereto, its particular purpose seems to have been to investigate as to the social and economic questions involved, as I pointed out last night, and the relationship between poverty and low wages and infant mortality. If, however, there has been any duplication of work, the duplication comes through the action of the Bureau of Education and the Health Bureau. The particular studies along the line of infant mortality and of maternal mortality, as I understand, were practically commenced by the Children's Bureau, and subsequently these other bureaus commenced some studies along those lines. In any event, however, where there has been apparently a conflict approaching or a duplication of work there has been coordination between these different bureaus.

I wish to call attention to a fact which I omitted yesterday, and that is, for instance, in the city of New York in 1910 one in every five deaths was that of an infant under the age of 12 months. I shall not go over what I pointed out yesterday as to other places.

Mr. President, another branch of the work of the Children's Bureau has been as to the question of maternal mortality, which is very closely involved with the other question. That is an absolutely new study.

I do not think the members of the committee who are sustaining the action of the committee in cutting down the appropriations for the work of this bureau will claim that there was any duplication of work as to that subject. Last year in this country there were 15,000 deaths of women from conditions caused by childbirth.

In 1913 the death rate—

As pointed out in Miss Lathrop's report, on page 8—> per 100,000 population from all conditions caused by childbirth was but little lower than that from typhoid fever; this rate would be almost quadrupled if only the group of the population which can be affected—women of child-bearing age—were considered.

The rates of three countries—Sweden, Norway, and Italy—are notably low, and show that the large death rate to which I have referred can be very much reduced. I desire to place in the RECORD a statement from one of the medical officers of the local government board of Great Britain for 1914–15 on this subject, and I will ask to insert it without taking the time to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and permission to do so will be granted.

The statement referred to is as follows:

> The present report is intended to draw attention to this unnecessary mortality from childbearing, to stimulate further local inquiry on the subject, and to encourage measures which will make the occurrence of illness and disability due to childbearing a much rarer event than at present.
> The attainment of these ends is important as much in the interest of the child as of its mother. That the welfare of the child is wrapped up in that of the mother was fully recognized in the board's circular letter of July 31, 1914, and the schedule appended to that letter; and each year it is becoming more fully realized that in order to insure healthy infancy and childhood it is necessary that, both during pregnancy and at and after the birth of the infant, increased maternal care and guidance and medical assistance should be provided.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I have not read the report which is referred to by the Senator from Iowa, but I should like to ask whether it shows what has been done here in the District of Columbia by the Children's Bureau?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from California is referring to the report of the chief of the bureau?

Mr. WORKS. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I think it does not show, Mr. President, as to the particular work affecting the District of Columbia. Of course, a large part of this bureau's work has been done here; but I do not think that is shown in the report. I realize what the Senator means by asking that question—that conditions, as he has shown here in the past, as to the housing situation and conditions among the poor people in the District of Columbia are somewhat appalling. The Senator from California I have always regarded as a Senator with a vision far in advance of his time—a splendid vision—and he has endeavored to correct the situation in the District of Columbia. I suppose he feels that we ought to commence cleaning house right here at home. I agree with him, and have at all times indorsed his position as to this question of tenement houses for the District of Columbia. I wish he could get a hearing on his bill on that subject before the committee.

This investigation and report along these lines of maternal mortality show that the public neglect is due to ignorance, and this board is awakening a healthy public sentiment. It was stated on the floor of the other House—I do not know that I have a right to refer to that, but I refer to it in no critical way—by some Representative that mothers' clubs had been organized in his district to study these questions; that they were going directly to this bureau to secure their information; and that it had been of great help to them in an educational way.

I referred on yesterday to a letter from the far West which the bureau had received, as illustrating some of the work that the bureau is doing, and the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] asked me if it was possible to send out in particular instances from the Children's Bureau nurses or doctors to help these women. I replied that I thought not; but I now say to the Senator from Georgia that in his own State there are men, experts from the Department of Agriculture, who are helping the people of Georgia to acquire an expert knowledge of how to raise pigs. One expert, whom I know very well—an exceedingly competent man—is organizing pig clubs all over Georgia. It has been a great work.

Mr. President, if we are sending out men to instruct the people how to raise hogs and how to take care of pigs, are we going any further when we send them out to instruct people how to take care of children and to take care of those questions that arise out of maternity? The babies and the children of this country are somewhat more valuable as an asset than are its pigs and hogs. We are sending out experts to-day to instruct the farmers how to deal with the hog-cholera question. They cooperate with county agents. I do not know that they go to particular farms, though in some instances I think they do; but they get farmers together in meetings, talk the matter over with them, and give them the advantage of what information they have on the question of treating hogs for cholera. So we do as to a great deal of plant life. We make demonstrations as to the enemies that confront plant life all over this country.

A correspondent of the bureau, in one of the great western grazing States, wrote some weeks ago:

I live 65 miles from a doctor. I have four children, two of my own and two adopted. The youngest child is 11 months old. When this child was born I went to the mother 7 miles on horseback in a blizzard, only in time to see the mother die and to take the baby. I have also an adopted girl of 10.

The woman was very ill when her other two children were born, and filled with alarm at the prospect of giving birth to another child so far removed from medical help. In one of her letters she says:

So many of my neighbors die at giving birth to their children.

She then quotes three cases in her own neighborhood, and in a later letter mentions a very recent case of a woman who was left absolutely alone while her husband went 24 miles for a physician. A man on a neighboring ranch called and rendered such assistance as he could at the moment when the baby was born. The baby bled to death within an hour and the mother had blood poisoning.

So stern, so painful, were the statements in this series of letters that the bureau caused a special inquiry to be made by a competent woman physician agent, who reported that the facts were exactly as stated in the correspondence. Our agent also found that the State maintains three general hospitals, and that with a special development of nursing-out service in these hospitals a greatly improved condition of affairs may be very economically secured, and indeed we are informed that negotiations are already under way to secure this improvement.

In letters received since by the bureau the writer says with relation, I assume, to these nurses and doctors who are sent out:

The mothers and husbands seem to be as though they had awakened from some sort of stupor. One neighbor said, "Why has not this been thought of before? Why were we mothers left out here so long? Everybody around here is disappointed because my husband didn't get the doctor to talk to everyone at the schoolhouse."

The whole work along that line has been simply for better and more decent living conditions in this country. That is the second branch of the work.

The third branch of the work has been the rural study out in the country, where the maternal mortality rate is higher than it is in the cities. This bureau has been making that study—rural study, the rural units that they use—of nurses and field agents and experts. They gather the people together; they talk over these matters of the welfare of the children, of better housing and cleaner living. They have a hygiene expert, who holds this kind of a conference; and the people, according to the reports of the bureau, come miles and miles to attend these conferences.

I desire now to read from page 11 of the report of Miss Lathrop:

During the past year two experts in child hygiene and two special agents have carried on preliminary rural studies of maternal and child welfare. Field work has been completed in small selected areas in two States, one Northern and one Southern.

The method of work has varied in some respects from that of the urban studies of infant mortality. Thus the local study is frequently introduced by a children's conference and the display of a small, carefully selected exhibit in the county seat or a central market town. The conference is an examination of well children by a child-hygiene expert; it is not a competition nor a contest. Attention is centered on the needs of each individual child and advice is given to the parents on how they can help the child to attain the best development of which he is capable. No prescriptions are given, but parents are referred to the family physician if the examiner finds need of medical treatment. The eagerness with which the young children are brought to these conferences—often long distances over bad roads at a season when farm work must be sacrificed for the journey—is strong proof that parents do not need the incentive of prizes and contests in order to seek information which they hope will help them to do more for their children.

I know, Mr. President, that it is easy to make fun of these rural studies; it is easy to laugh at old-maid experts going out to teach people how to raise babies, and I realize that a good deal of ridicule can be heaped upon the proposition of caring for babies in this way; but if in any way by any action of the Government we can reduce this death rate by investigation, by education, or by publicity, it is a great work.

In the little country of New Zealand, where they commenced this work some years ago, there was a death rate among the babies of about 9 per cent. That has been cut down now to less than 5 per cent.

Out of this, too, has come what is called the "national baby week," purposed to popularize the study of these matters; and if Senators will examine the map which is in the report they will find that there were over 2,000 of these celebrations last year.

Moving pictures, lectures, competitions, in which mothers answered questions concerning the welfare of children, clubs of women, and other educational efforts along these lines have resulted in many places in establishing visiting nurses, pure-milk stations, and other things conducive to the children's welfare.

I should like to insert in the RECORD, without reading, the portion of the report on page 13 which I shall indicate to the reporter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The success of baby week depends upon securing the interest of many people, public officials, committees of private citizens, teachers, librarians business men, fathers, mothers, big brothers, and sisters. Public meetings, exhibits, conferences with parents, including examinations of well babies, flags distributed by Boy Scouts or other organizations to every house where there is a baby, processions, plays, tableaux, school children's essays—these are some of the ways whereby the interest was aroused in more than 2,000 localities which gave a few days each for studying the needs of their babies and for asking themselves whether they were giving every baby his fair chance, or what common action was needed in order to protect all their youngest and most helpless citizens.

Mr. KENYON. These celebrations took place in some of the largest cities of this country, as, for instance, in New York, Chicago, and St. Louis. In St. Louis the mayor and the city officials headed the baby parade and inspected the milk stations. At Lebanon, Pa., the director of public safety held a "better milk" conference in connection with "baby week." One Nebraska town agreed on baby day to give hot lunches to the school children and began buying playground apparatus. The enthusiasm engendered by this movement led to those splendid things.

Dallas, Tex., popularized dairy inspection by means of the city chemist holding a reception during "baby week." He explained the system of inspection and showed the need and value of it by means of a microscope, germ incubators, and so forth.

In Plainfield, N. J., the home of the distinguished Senator [Mr. MARTINE], at whose early retirement from this body we are all so sorrowful, the exhibit constructed by the baby-week committee, on which the board of health was represented, was sent through the public schools of Plainfield, and two welfare stations were operated for the summer as a result of the baby-week campaign.

All this has required a great deal of correspondence and a great deal of work on the part of this bureau. It has stimulated the movement of giving the babies of the country a square deal. We may make fun of it, but it bears the same relation to some of the social and economic questions as the Fourth of July bears to patriotism or Memorial Day does to reverence for those who have gone beyond. So that this whole work, as I have so far pointed out, is to conserve the children of this country.

We talk about a first-line defense and a second-line defense, and all these things. The children of the country are the main line of defense. The greatest horror of war is not so much the suffering and the sorrow that it entails as the fact that it is destroying minds. If an Edison had been destroyed in his youth or a Marconi or a Dewey, how would you replace them? We can not fathom the great injury that war is doing to civilization in all the world through the destruction of minds. This bureau is trying to prevent destruction in conserving the children of this country.
